¶ 139. Evidence that the defendant, employer of the plaintiff, had rudely and insolently laid hands on her person under circumstances implying an accusation of dishonesty, leading her by the hand through the store during business hours to the basement, and there taking from her purse $4.20 and never returning it, although there was no personal injury and the plaintiff returned to work after these incidents, was sufficient to sustain a verdict for assault and battery.—Henderson v. Agon, 148 Mich. 252.

¶ 141. In an action for damages for assault and battery, in which it appeared that plaintiff was the aggressor, an instruction that the fact that defendant pleaded guilty in a criminal proceeding started against him by his own procurement was not conclusive against his contention that he was acting in self-defense, and that it should be given such weight by the jury as they believed it entitled to, held proper.—Anders v. Clover, 198 Mich. 763.

§ 30. Questions for court or jury.

In general see Trial, VI.

¶ 142. In an action for assault and battery, where there is evidence tending to show that the persons committing the assault were acting at the request of one of the defendants, although he was not present and directing, such defendant should not be discharged on motion, but the evidence should be submitted to the jury.—Zube v. Weber, 67 Mich. 52.

¶ 143. Where there is no evidence that injuries received by plaintiff in a voluntary fight were the result of excessive cruelty on defendant's part, the question of such cruelty should not be allowed to go to the jury.—Smith v. Simon, 69 Mich. 481.

¶ 145. In an action for assault and battery it was not error to submit to the jury the disputed question whether one of the injuries complained of was inflicted by defendant or resulted from plaintiff's action after the affray; where testimony was introduced tending to show that when plaintiff was being taken by the officer to the lock-up, as he was passing some kerosene barrels, being very angry, he struck the barrel in such a manner as might have caused the injuries complained of.—Culley v. Walkeen, 80 Mich. 443.

¶ 147. At least nominal damages are recoverable for an assault and battery, and verdict ought to have been directed accordingly, where defendant testified that he caused complaint to be made against himself for it, that he was convicted and fined, that though plaintiff had provoked him and struck the first blow, he had continued the fight long after necessity for self-defense ceased and "because he wanted to lick" plaintiff; such testimony itself is an admission that excessive force was used.—Hetrick v. Crouch, 141 Mich. 649.

¶ 148. Where the evidence in an action for assault and battery is conflicting, whether the plaintiff, at the time she was assaulted by the defendant was attempting by force to prevent him trespassing upon her land, and also whether her plea of guilty to a criminal charge of having assaulted the defendant with a dangerous weapon, was intelligently made with full knowledge of the nature of the proceeding and her rights, were questions for the jury.—Nay v. Dickinson, 182 Mich. 684.

As to evidentiary force of plea of guilty in criminal prosecution for same assault, see also ante ¶ 141.

General law of instructions, and instructions general to all causes, see Instructions.

¶ 150. In an action for an assault it is error, in the absence of supporting proof, so to charge the jury as to give them to understand that the assault was necessarily unlawful.—Drew v. Comstock, 57 Mich. 176.

¶ 151. In an action for assault and battery by one who was shot while trespassing, where the defence was that the discharge of the weapon was accidental, it was error to charge that the intent must be "proved by some credible witness, and by a preponderance of testimony," such statement being calculated to exclude the idea that the intent might be found from circumstances shown by different witnesses; especially if the testimony showed that defendant, almost simultaneously with the shooting, threatened to shoot the first man that laid a hand on his property, and the jury was instructed that the intent could not be inferred from a general threat, not relating to plaintiff, which defendant might have made "some time before the shooting took place."—Shriver v. Bean, 112 Mich. 508.

¶ 152. It is not error to charge that, while the voluntary act on the part of the plaintiff, in a case out of which an action for assault and battery arises, would not preclude the state from punishing either of the parties for a breach of the peace, it nevertheless prevents his bringing a civil action to recover compensation for injuries received by his own seeking, and in violation of law.—Galbraith v. Fleming, 60 Mich. 403.

¶ 153. In trespass to recover for assault and battery, where plaintiff's testimony tended to show that defendant threw her to the ground without provocation and inflicted injuries resulting in a miscarriage, and defendant claimed that he did nothing except to repel an assault by plaintiff, an instruction conveying the impression that plaintiff could not recover unless a miscarriage resulted from her injuries, was clearly erroneous.—Frederickson v. Nelson, 185 Mich. 246.

¶ 154. The refusal to give specific instructions stating defendant's theory in an action for assault was not error, where the issue was not involved and the jury was told that if the facts were as testified to by the defendant and his witnesses, there could be no recovery.—Lee v. Longwell, 136 Mich. 458.

¶ 155. In an action against three persons for damages for assault and battery an instruction to the effect that the evidence was uncontradicted that the plaintiff and one of the defendants voluntarily engaged in a physical encounter, and that there was no evidence that such defendant unreasonably or excessively injured plaintiff, and that the verdict should be for such defendant, held properly refused where it appeared from the testimony that all the defendants had a common understanding that such defendant should go ahead and assault plaintiff, and that the others would help him out, if necessary, which they subsequently did, using excessive and unreasonable force.—Foster v. Krause, 187 Mich. 630.

¶ 156. In an action for damages for assault and battery an instruction that in considering whether defendants assaulted the plaintiff the jury might take into consideration all the proven facts and circumstances in the case, including the plea of guilty and their former conviction, held proper where the evidence showed that the defendants admitted having pleaded guilty to a criminal complaint for assault and battery, and there was no evidence of any other instance of assault and battery, as the same offense was thus evidently referred to.—Foster v. Krause et al., 187 Mich. 630.

¶ 157. In an action for a criminal assault upon plaintiff the instructions, taken as a whole, were held to have conveyed clearly to the jury that there could be no recovery unless the intercourse was effected by force and against plaintiff's will, and whether this would or would not amount to the crime of rape is not important.—Hart v. Walker, 100 Mich. 406.

¶ 158. Where there is no evidence tending to prove justification of an assault, no charge should be given on the subject, but if given, it is not an error that the defendant can complain of.—Johnson v. McKee, 27 Mich. 471.

¶ 159. The court on request should charge that there was no legal justification for beating plaintiff, where it appears that defendant policemen did it in removing her from her own property which she was defending against a trespass under color of an insufficient permit to make a sewer connection there.—Zube v. Weber, 67 Mich. 52.

¶ 160. An instruction that if plaintiff was removing defendant's property "with no manifestation of force, then defendant would not be excusable in using force, or legally allowed to do so," is not misleading and prejudicial error where the court also charged clearly that he might use force sufficient to reclaim the property, or to prevent its removal, and where the evidence tends to show the use of excessive force.—Hamilton v. Arnold, 116 Mich. 684.

¶ 161. In an action of trespass vi et armis for injuries inflicted by defendant seeking to reclaim his personal property, an instruction that the only question for the jury is whether the defendant used more force than was necessary to reclaim his property need not also give the rule as to the use of force necessary to repel an attack, where there was no attack shown.—Miller v. Sadowsky, 138 Mich. 502.

¶ 162. In a suit for assault and battery provoked by mere words, it is proper to instruct that "no assault is justified unless by some assault performed by the other party."—Goucher v. Jamieson, 124 Mich. 21.

¶ 163. In an action for maliciously and wilfully shooting plaintiff while fleeing, a charge that the jury may determine whether the defendant officer was negligent in so shooting should be taken with the rest of the charge, which fully and properly submitted the law on the right of an officer to make an arrest without warrant where no felony had been committed; and so construed is not erroneous, where the officer claimed that he shot without intent to hit but only to make plaintiff stop.—Johnson v. Mack, 141 Mich. 99.

¶ 164. In an action for assault and battery committed while defendants were attempting to retake cattle impounded by plaintiff's husband, an instruction that plaintiff could not recover unless the cattle were trespassing in the husband's field at the time they were impounded is sufficiently favorable to the defendants.—Cox v. Klein, 149 Mich. 162.

¶ 165. In an action for assault and battery, evidence held to justify a charge that the punishment inflicted upon plaintiff was unwarranted and leaving only question of damages to the jury.—Sievers v. Barton, 180 Mich. 59.

by a stone thrown by defendant or whether he had renewed the attack upon the defendant, an instruction that, while the striking of the defendant by the plaintiff was unjustifiable and constituted an assault, the question for the jury was whether or not an assault was made by the defendant upon the plaintiff at the time when the stones were thrown, that they should determine what the parties were doing just before the stones were thrown, after plaintiff had struck defendant and a third person had interceded, and determine who became the aggressor in the next move that was made, and that, if plaintiff was retreating and had turned around, as was claimed, and was going back towards his wheel and was not renewing the attack or quarrel but was going away from the defendant at the time the latter threw a stone and struck him, the defendant committed an assault and battery upon him and the plaintiff would be entitled to recover, but if they found that plaintiff came towards defendant having a pair of shears in his hand and if he renewed the attack or quarrel then he could not recover, providing defendant did no more than was necessary in self-defense, was not erroneous. —Cornell v. Fidler, 194 Mich. 509.

¶ 14. A mere possibility of future indebtedness, without any subsisting engagement upon which it shall accrue, is not assignable —Neumann v. Calumet & H. Min. Co., 57 Mich. 97.

¶ 15. Future as well as existing book accounts are the subject of assignment.—Dunn v. Michigan Club, 115 Mich. 409.

¶ 16. A mere possibility is not the subject of assignment; but the assignment of wages to be earned in the future under an existing employment is valid, the possibility of future earnings in such case being coupled with an interest. So of wages under an employment for piece-work expected to be continuous.—Kane v. Clough, 36 Mich. 436.

¶ 18. An assignment of rents made more than a year before the rents in question became due, was effectual although the rents in suit fell due after the expiration of the lease; where the relationship of landlord actually continued by the holding over of the tenants after the expiration of the lease.—Brownson v. Roy, 133 Mich. 617.

¶ 19. The right of action upon a contract for breach of the warranty therein is assignable (How. St., § 7344).—Felt v. Reynolds Rotary Fruit Evaporating Co., 52 Mich. 602.

¶ 20. The right to recover money that has already become due under a contract is assignable although the obligations are such that defendant cannot be required to rely upon an assignee to perform that part of the contract remaining executory.—Rodgers v. Torrent, 111 Mich. 680.

¶ 21. Where the amount due on a stock subscription has been regularly called in by assignment and stands as a liquid debt demand on which suit will lie, it seems that the claim can be assigned as well before judgment as afterward, though the assignment, like all assignments of things in action, would be subject to equities and could not deprive the debtor of any stockholder's rights.—Wells v. Rodgers, 50 Mich. 294.

¶ 22. A right of action for money paid as consideration accruing to a bank on account of rescission for fraudulent representations in the sale of commercial papers made by the president to the bank may be assigned to a third person.—Hicks v. Steel, 126 Mich. 408.

Note payable in chattels, transferability, see Non-negotiable Paper, and see also Conversion, I.

¶ 23. Where an executory contract is not necessarily personal in its character, and can, consistent with the rights and interests of the adverse party, be fairly and sufficiently executed as well by the assignee as by the original contractor, and when the latter has not disqualified himself for the performance of the contract it is assignable.—Detroit, T. & I. R. Co. v. Western U. Tel Co., 200 Mich. 2.

¶ 24. The right to enforce an agreement not to engage in a particular business may be passed by assignment.—Up River Ice Co. v. Denler, 114 Mich. 296.

¶ 25. A promise to pay for goods which contains a provision leaving it optional with the payee to reclaim the goods if they are not paid for by a certain day is assignable after maturity as a chose in action, and may be sued upon without being indorsed by the assignor.—Bannister v. Rouse, 44 Mich. 428.

§ 7. ——Contracts involving personal relations, service or skill.

Letter of credit, see post ¶ 35.

¶ 27. A contract between a nurseryman and a farmer, by the terms of which the former is to plant fruit trees on the latter's land, to prune and care for them, and to receive in payment half the fruit grown for a period of ten years is made in part consideration of the skill and honesty of the nurseryman, and, in the absence of a special provision in the contract it cannot be assigned by him without the consent of the other party.—Edison v. Babka, 111 Mich. 235

¶ 28. A right to the possession and use of a building on the grounds of a college for conducting a school as a department of such college and for furnishing dormitories for students and teachers is personal and not transferable.—Hillsdale College v. Rideout, 82 Mich. 94.

¶ 31. The rule that a contract personal in its nature is not assignable, had no application where the defendants in an action to recover taxes paid under protest, had agreed with plaintiff's assignor to furnish and lease certain lands for their factory for ten years and as long thereafter as such assignor "its successors or assigns" might use the site for manufacturing purposes, on the same terms and conditions, except that the taxes should be paid, and that for the first ten years defendants should keep said assignor free from taxes.—Northwestern Cooperage & Lumber Co. v. Byers, 133 Mich. 534.

¶ 32. A contract whereby a navigation company agrees to carry sand and gravel during a certain season at certain prices, the bills to be paid monthly and the contracts of sale to be assigned to the carrier as security, if demanded, is not personal but may be assigned where the carrier has had no dealings with the assignee and there is no claim that the assignee is less responsible than the assignor.—C. H. Little Co. v. Cadwell Transit Co., 197 Mich. 481. (Kuhn, C. J., and Bird, J., dissenting.)

¶ 33. A contract for a term of 25 years between a railroad company and a telegraph company for the construction, maintenance and operation of a telegraph line on the railroad right of way requiring the telegraph company to furnish poles, wire and other materials for the construction of the line, and a foreman to direct its construction, and the railroad company to grant an easement over its right of way for the line and to furnish labor to construct, maintain and operate the same, and to furnish office room at the various stations in which to operate the telegraph, is not personal and is assignable.—Detroit, T. & I. R. Co., v. Western U. Tel. Co., 200 Mich. 2.

§ 8. Instruments for payment of money.

Indorsement and transfer of negotiable instruments, including assignments of rights, see generally Negotiable Instruments.

See also Non-negotiable Paper.

Check or bill as assignment of fund, see post § 14.

Transfer of negotiable and non-negotiable instruments generally, see Negotiable Instruments; Non-negotiable Paper.

¶ 34. A claim for the amount unpaid on debt evidenced by a promissory note, which note has been surrendered to the maker on his paying part of the note and agreeing to pay the rest, is assignable.—Hanselman v. Doyle, 90 Mich. 142.

¶ 35. A letter addressed to a bank suggesting advances and stating among other things that the writers guarantee payment of drafts drawn on them by a produce dealer was not assignable so as to enable partners who purchased the bank and succeeded it to hold the writers liable for the draft drawn by the produce dealer and refused by the writers.—Lyon v. Van Raden, 126 Mich. 259.

Survivability of causes of action, see Abatement and Revival, § 16.
Fraud as personal right of defense, see Fraud, III, A.
The rule that fraud is not assignable does not prevent assignment of a right and the enforcement of a cause of action for fraud which is collateral to and not a part of the thing assigned. See Fraud, III.

¶ 36. Courts of equity do not countenance the assignment of a cause of action for a tort.—Morris v. Morris, 5 Mich. 171.

¶ 37. Under our statute authorizing suits by assignees of rights in action, the general doctrine is that of causes of action for torts only such as survive to the personal representatives of the injured party can be sued for by an assignee.—Final v. Backus, 18 Mich. 218.

¶ 38. A right of action for a tort is not generally assignable; but such rights of action as would survive to personal representatives are in general assignable.—Finn v. Corbitt, 36 Mich. 318.

Right to sue without alleging assignment, see post § 31.

¶ 39. A right of action in trover for property converted is assignable.—Final v. Backus, 18 Mich. 218; Brady v. Whitney, 24 Mich. 154; Grant v. Smith, 26 Mich. 201; Dayton v. Fargo, 45 Mich. 153; Smith v. Thompson, 94 Mich. 381; Boynton v. Roe, 114 Mich. 401; Perkett v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co., 175 Mich. 253.

¶ 40. The right of action for a tort like that of the wrongful cutting of timber on one's lands and its conversion, is assignable. Final v. Backus, 18 Mich. 218; Upham v. Dickinson, 38 Mich. 338; Grant v. Smith, 26 Mich. 201.

For cutting and conversion of timber, see ante ¶ 40.
Necessity and sufficiency of allegation of assignment, see post §§ 31-33.

¶ 41. A right of action in trespass for injury to the assignor's property is assignable.—Finn v. Corbitt, 36 Mich. 318.

¶ 42. A right of action for trespass to land by cutting timber therefrom is assignable.—Gates v. Comstock, 107 Mich. 546.

¶ 43. One who has joined in unlawfully cutting another's timber cannot take from him an assignment of his right of action and sue his co-trespassers thereon, even if he might sustain an action for contribution against them.—Upham v. Dickinson, 38 Mich. 338.

II. IMPLIED OR CONSTRUCTIVE ASSIGNMENTS.

§ 12. In general; inferred from conduct of parties.

Corporate successor as implied assignee, see Corporations, XXII.

¶ 44. Notice by an agent to the other party to a contract made between them that accounting under it is to be made to the principal is equivalent to an equitable assignment of it.—Dustin v. Radford, 57 Mich. 163.

¶ 45. Acceptance of pay upon and delivery of goods on a subcontractor's orders drawn in favor of laborers cannot be treated as an assignment by them of their claims against a railroad company.—Martin v. Michigan & O. R. Co., 62 Mich. 458; Dudley v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co., 65 Mich. 655.

As to equitable liens or mortgages, see Liens; Mortgages, II, C. As to equities established to work out trusts, see Trusts.

¶ 46. An assignment of demands having no actual existence, though invalid at law, may be valid in equity as an agreement, and take effect as an assignment, when the demands intended are subsequently brought into existence; and the assignee of future wages would have a right in equity, when the wages were earned, to protect his interest to the extent to which they were earned.—Kane v. Clough, 36 Mich. 436.

¶ 47. Successive assignments and deliveries of an aid-note drawn to the order of a railroad company were sufficient to create an equitable assignment of the contract embodied in it, and to authorize the final holder to sue on it in his own name as equitable assignee.—Toledo & A. A. R. Co. v. Johnson, 55 Mich. 456 (How. St., § 7344).

¶ 48. The doctrine of equitable assignment is inapplicable to a case where others beside the assignor and assignee are interested in the fund.—Morse v. Allen's Estate, 99 Mich. 303.

¶ 49. An unaccepted check upon funds in a bank does not amount to an equitable assignment of the sum it calls for.—McIntyre v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 115 Mich. 255.

¶ 50. An unaccepted check or draft does not operate as an equitable assignment of the amount named in it in the drawee's hands.—Grammel v. Carmer, 55 Mich. 201; Brennan v. Merchants' & Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, 62 Mich. 343.

¶ 51. A check not accepted by the bank at the time of the drawer's death does not operate as an assignment of the fund to the payee.—Second Nat. Bank of Detroit v. Williams, 13 Mich. 282.

¶ 52. A draft drawn in the ordinary form by a bank upon its New York correspondent in favor of the bank from whom it has received certain paper for collection does not operate as an equitable assignment pro tanto of an indebtedness owing by the correspondent.—Sunderlin v. Mecosta County Sav. Bank, 116 Mich. 281.

¶ 53. A bank becomes the assignee of a debt by discounting a draft for the exact amount of it, to which the bill for the indebtedness is attached; and the debtor is released by such assignment from liability as garnishee. The case differs from that of an ordinary bank draft or bill of exchange, and the fact that the draft is negotiable in form does not affect the apparent intent to assign the debt.—Moore v. Davis, 57 Mich. 251.

III. INTERPRETATION, OPERATION AND EFFECT.

¶ 56. The assignee of a non-negotiable chose in action takes it subject to all equities existing between the parties at the time of the assignment.—Bloomer v. Henderson, 8 Mich. 395; Spinning v. Sullivan, 48 Mich. 5; First National Bank of Port Huron v. Carson, 60 Mich. 432; Kinney v. Tabor, 62 Mich. 517.

¶ 57. The seller (assignor) or pledgor of property other than negotiable securities can convey no greater rights than he himself has.—Township of Washington v. First National Bank of Huntington, 147 Mich. 571.

¶ 58. The assignee of a non-negotiable chose in action takes it subject not merely to equities at the inception of the debt or contract assigned, but to all at the time of assignment.—Warner v. Whittaker, 6 Mich. 133.

¶ 59. Inasmuch as the assignee of a non-negotiable chose in action takes it subject to all antecedent equities the right to sue upon it in his own name makes no difference.—Spinning v. Sullivan, 48 Mich. 5.

¶ 60. Assignees of a contract take it subject to all the rights and equities existing between the original parties.—Edson v. Gates, 44 Mich. 253.

¶ 61. A mere assignee of securities is bound by any equities that would affect the original holder if it does not appear that they were delivered to him for value.—Matteson v. Morris, 40 Mich. 52.

¶ 62. The assignee of a township order on the treasurer for payment of a claim has no greater rights than had the assignor.—First Nat. Bank of Traverse City v. Township Clerk of Union Township, 141 Mich. 404.

¶ 63. The assignee of a non-negotiable chose in action does not take subject to latent equities that some third person may have against the debtor or party bound by the instrument.—Bloomer v. Henderson, 8 Mich. 395.

¶ 66. The assignee of the right of action on a contract is entitled to recover exactly as the assignor might if no assignment had been made.—Howell v. Medler, 41 Mich. 641.

¶ 67. The assignee of an order for payment for work done on a drain is subject to all defenses which the public officials could make against the contractor for improper performance of the work.—Van Akin v. Dunn, 117 Mich. 421.

¶ 68. In an action for breach of contract for the exchange of stamp-vending machines brought by the assignee of the contract, held, that as the assignor could not have enforced the contract without complying with its terms as to the cash payment of the difference in price, his assignee would have no right to do so.—Detroit Postage Stamp Service Co. v. Schermack, 179 Mich. 266.

¶ 69. The assignee of property already assigned by his assignor to a third party, under an illegal contract, is in no better position than the assignor, and cannot recover the property on the ground that the contract was illegal.—Benson v. Bawden, 149 Mich. 584.

Assignments for security, see post § 23.
Assignment for small consideration but subject to outstanding claim, see also post ¶ 83.
Impeachment of recital of consideration as against voluntary assignee, see also post ¶ 91.
Irrelevancy in action on assigned contract of the consideration for assignment, see post § 35.
Effect of voluntary assignments, see post § 24; and see also Gifts.
Right of assignee of corporate debt to enforce same against stockholders for face amount, see Corporations, XXIV, E.

¶ 70. In an action by the assignee of a claim for an amount unpaid on a stock assessment the defendant, if a stockholder in the assigning company, may have a right to know whether or not he is to be sued by a purchaser for value, and he can therefore show the consideration of the assignment.—Wells v. Rodgers, 50 Mich. 294.

¶71. That the assignment was gratuitous is no defense to an action against a debtor by an assignee of the claim sued upon.—Coe v. Hinkley, 109 Mich. 608.

¶ 72. A plaintiff declaring upon a written obligation which recited a settlement of accounts gave evidence of an assignment to him, but did not show any consideration therefor. Held, that he could not rely on equities that were not available to his assignor, and that the defendant was not estopped by the recital from contesting the settlement.—Ferguson v. Millikin, 42 Mich. 441.

See also post ¶ 137.
To assignment for security, see post ¶ 87.
Transfer of guaranty of paper as an incident thereof, especially when indorsed thereon, see Negotiable Instruments, IV, V; Non-negotiable Paper.

Guaranty indorsed on paper as incident passing with it, see Bonds; Negotiable Instruments, IV.

¶ 73. The assignment after maturity of a note given in pursuance of a contract does not necessarily transfer to the assignee a right of action for a breach of the contract, or entitle him to base a claim thereon in order to cancel a set-off against the note. An action on the note by the assignee would not bar an action by the assignor for breach of contract.—Wetmore v. Neuberger, 44 Mich. 362.

¶ 74. An assignment of a non-negotiable note does not transfer a claim for goods sold and delivered.—Altman v. Fowler, 70 Mich. 57.

¶ 75. An assignment by a replevin defendant of all his right, title and interest in the suit conveys his right, title and interest in the goods taken under the writ, and is admissible in evidence in a suit by the assignee against the plaintiff in replevin and another person who has converted such goods. —Cadwell v. Pray, 86 Mich. 266.

¶ 76. The right to recover property, the title to which never passed by reason of the fraudulent representations of the purchaser as to his financial condition, passes to an assignee of the vendor's business and book accounts.—Reeder Bros. Shoe Co. v. Prylinski, 102 Mich. 468.

¶ 77. An assignment of all the stock, property, and effects of a business, or the exclusive right to manufacture a given article carries with it the exclusive right to use a fictitious name in which such business has been carried on, and such trade-marks and trade-names as have been in use in such business.—Williams v. Farrand, 88 Mich. 473.

Of principal's property by agent to himself, see Agency, ¶ 504.

Assignee's agent as agent of assignor in making payments due on subject of assignment, see Agency, ¶ 26.

¶ 78. A man bought an interest of $600 in a mortgage for $1,000, and agreed that in case of its prompt payment, when due, he would pay his assignor $400 and interest, with a right to be reimbursed for expense or delay in collecting. But the mortgagor refused to pay it unless $200 was deducted and it appeared that the property was only good for $800, and that the deficiency could not be collected. The assignee accordingly accounted for only $200. Held, in a suit for the rest of the $400, that he was no more than a collecting agent for plaintiff, and that he had discharged his obligation.—Reed v. Northrup, 50 Mich. 442.

¶ 79. Permission by the assignor of a claim to use his name in collecting it gives the assignee no authority to use any but lawful processes.—Park v. Toledo, C. S. & D. R. Co., 41 Mich. 352.

¶ 80. The assignor of a chose in action is not liable for unlawful acts done by the assignee in collecting the demand if the assignor himself had no interest in it and did not direct or countenance them. So held, where the assignee, suing in the assignor's name, improperly began suit by capias, the affidavit for which was made by the assignor's agent but not in his behalf.—Park v. Toledo, C. S. & D. R. Co., 41 Mich. 352.

¶ 81. An executory contract to assign "whatever should remain uncollected or unsecured" of a debt, does not pass any title to notes which have not been assigned, title being retained until actual assignment is made, and the holder may sue on such notes whatever the rights as to assignment might be under the contract.—National City Bank v. Torrent, 130 Mich. 259.

§ 22. Absolute or qualified assignments.

Assignment of personalty reserving life use of income, see Life Estates, IV.

Assignments and transfers for particular purposes, see Assignments for Creditors; Bankruptcy; Chattel Mortgages; Fraudulent Conveyances: Mortgages; Pledges; Trusts; and the like.

¶ 83. The assignee of a lumber contract of the value of over $1,000, who obtained an assignment for $10 subject to an outstanding claim as a bona fide purchaser, was not subject to garnishment as a mortgagee where after service of process and upon repayment of his $10 and attorney's fees expended, he assigned the contract to such claimant pursuant to the prior agreement.—Merchants' Nat. Bank of Toledo v. Barrett, 122 Mich. 650.

¶ 84. An assignment of a certificate of bank stock absolute in form may be shown to be for security merely.—May v. Genesee County Savings Bank, 120 Mich. 330.

§ 23. Assignments for security.

Pledges as collateral security in general, see Pledges.
Assignment to obligor as extinguishment of debt, see Contracts, VIII; Judgments, XI; Mortgages, VI-VIII.
Reduction of amount of damages recoverable by reason of partial assignment, see Damages, IV.

¶ 85. One who as security for money lent to a subcontractor takes from the latter an assignment of the first charge upon a stipulated drawback on the contract price of his work stands in no better position than if the contract had been assigned to him; and on being sued by him the contractor may set up in defense any matter that would have been available in a suit on the contract, except voluntary payments to the subcontractor after notice of the assignment; nor would the contractor, by requiring the subcontractor's certificate of the correctness of amounts paid for labor and materials to complete the work, be precluded from offsetting such payments if shown to have been necessarily made.—Fisken v. Milwaukee Bridge & Iron Works, 86 Mich. 199, rehearing denied 87 Mich. 591.

¶ 89. Where a contract is assigned for the sole purpose of enabling the assignees to collect and apply certain moneys coming due to the assignors thereon, and then to be reassigned, the assignees are not authorized, without the consent of the assignors, to assume the performance of the contract, or to change its terms by agreement with the contracting party.—Litchfield v. Garrett, 10 Mich. 426.

Assignments by way of gift, see Gifts.
Effect of assignment as gift to one having meretricious relations with donor, see Gifts, IV.

¶ 90. Assignments by writing without consideration are neither more nor less than a branch of voluntary gifts and settlements; and in the case of choses in action they fall generally under the doctrine of trusts and equitable assignments, and the only doubt as to the requirements of delivery relates to delivery, not of the securities, but of the memorandum of transfer.—Ellis v. Secor, 31 Mich. 185.

¶ 91. As against an assignee without consideration and therefore without equities one is not estopped by recital of a full settlement of account leaving a balance payable which was assigned but was subject to setoff or recoupment.—Ferguson v. Millikin, 42 Mich. 441.

Assignment of diverse rights to one assignee, see post § 26.
Joinder of co-owner and assignee in suit, see post § 30.
How proved, see post ¶ 144.

Right of indemnification of joint tort feasor making satisfaction and taking assignment, see Indemnity and Contribution, II, B; Release.

¶ 93. An assignment by one joint contractor to another of his interest in a right of action on the contract does not affect their joint liability.—Hart v. Summers, 38 Mich. 399.

¶ 94. A joint owner of a cause of action cannot introduce a new joint owner into the contract by individual assignment.—Learned v. Ayres, 41 Mich. 677.

Combining for suit, see post § 29.

Aggregating claims to make jurisdictional amount, see Courts, V.

¶ 95. Several non-negotiable causes of action may be united by assignment in one ownership so as to enable the assignee to bring a single action.—Watertown Fire Ins. Co. v. Grover & Baker Sew. Mach. Co., 41 Mich. 131; Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Holthaus, 43 Mich. 423; Crippen v. Jacobson, 56 Mich. 386.

¶ 96. Assignments of choses in action, though made by way of gift, pass the right of action as well as if founded on a consideration; and the fact that the assignments were made for the purpose only of enabling the assignee to have several like claims adjusted in a single suit does not impair the validity of the transfers nor prejudice the debtor.—Briscoe v. Eckley, 35 Mich. 112.

¶ 97. Where a corporation which had assigned to a bank $150,000 of accounts as security, treated certain accounts as within said assignment, and obtained from the bank the loans the assignment was made to secure upon the representation, relied upon by the bank, that said accounts were within the meaning of the word "account" as used in the assignment, such corporation is subsequently estopped from asserting the contrary.—Preston National Bank v. Smith Middlings Purifier Co., 102 Mich. 462.

As to conflicting rights of assignees and others under specific contracts, see Building Contracts, I; Insurance, XI; Mortgages, V, VI; Chattel Mortgages, III, IV; Liens; Marshalling Assets; and other specific topics dealing with the subject-matter of the assignment.

Of insurance for security and assignment of it to wife, see Insurance, IX.

¶ 98. A bridge company with a contract to build a bridge for a township, without delivering the contract assigned it to a bank as security with the understanding that the company should collect the money thereon as it became due and remit it to the bank. After receiving an order for the balance due from the township the company sold it to another bank, which received it without notice of the previous assignment. In an action to determine the title to the money, the township having interpleaded, held that the prior assignee having left the indicia of ownership in the company was estopped from asserting its prior title to the money, and the equities of the second bank must prevail where the order had been purchased in good faith.—Township of Washington v. First National Bank of Huntington, 147 Mich. 571.

¶ 99. An assignee of a chose in action cannot sue where his assignor could not.—Learned v. Ayres, 41 Mich. 677.

¶ 100. A right of action for a conversion of one's property is not barred by an assignment of the claim to his attorney.—McGuire v. Galligan, 57 Mich. 38.

¶ 101. Certain building contractors agreed that when they got the payment on the contract they would pay a certain sum to a specified person on an order from the painter. Held, that an action for this money could not be brought until after the order had been presented or some demand made.—Smith v. Ross, 51 Mich. 116.

¶ 102. A covenant in the assignment of a contract, by which the assignee agrees to pay certain specified liabilities of the assignor under the contract, does not enable a party to whom the assignor is indebted to bring an action for such indebtedness against the assignee.—Turner v. McCarty, 22 Mich. 265.

¶ 103. In an action on an assigned judgment, it cannot be contended that the assignee, an attorney, is proceeding in violation of How. St., § 7185, prohibiting the transfer of claims so that suits may be brought, where there is nothing to show that the purpose for which the judgment was assigned is the one prohibited by the statute.—Belden v. Blackman, 118 Mich. 448.

¶ 104. A perfected claim for labor will not support separate actions for the different amounts into which it may be divided, even though portions of it have been assigned and the division of the claim corresponds to the periods for which the laborer was hired.—Milroy v. Spurr Mountain Iron Min. Co., 43 Mich. 231.

¶ 105. Several interests or claims may be united by assignments so that assignee can bring one action.—Watertown Fire Ins. Co. v. Grover & Baker Sew. Machine. Co., 41 Mich. 131; Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Holthaus, 43 Mich. 423; Crippen v. Jacobson, 56 Mich. 386.

¶ 107. At common law an assignee of a chose in action could not pursue remedies thereon in his own name.—Michigan Sugar Co. v. Moffett, 183 Mich. 589.

¶ 108. Section 10054, Comp. Laws 1897, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 12704, permits the assignee of a chose in action to sue thereon in his own or the name of the assignor.—Michigan Sugar Co. v. Moffett, 183 Mich. 589.

¶ 109. Comp. L. 1857, § 4959, and Sess. L. 1863, p. 102 (How. St., § 7344), permitting assignees of choses in action to sue in their own names, reaches every right in property that was ever assignable in equity or capable of survivorship to executors.—Cook v. Bell, 18 Mich. 387.

¶ 110. Assignees need not sue in the names of their assignors even in cases where the right of action for a tort is assignable. Nor is it necessary to bring an action in the name of one person for the use and benefit of another.—Watson v. Watson, 49 Mich. 540; and see Dayton v. Fargo, 45 Mich. 153.

¶ 111. The purchaser of a claim under a contract can pursue his remedy in the name of his assignor whether he purchased before suit was brought or afterwards.—Moon v. Harder, 38 Mich. 566.

¶ 112. A written contract for the sale of land can be sued on by the assignee in his own name.—Cook v. Bell, 18 Mich. 387.

¶ 113. Under the statute the assignee of a right of action for the conversion of logs obtained by trespass on the land conveyed by the assignor to the assignee may sue thereon in his own name.—Final v. Backus, 18 Mich. 218; Grant v. Smith, 26 Mich. 201; Upham v. Dickinson, 38 Mich. 338.

Backus, 18 Mich. 218; Grant v. Smith, 26 Mich. 201; Upham v. Dickinson, 38 Mich. 338.

¶ 115. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10054, authorizing the assignee of a chose in action to sue thereon in his own name, the original of two lessors and the assignee of the interest of the other lessor may join in an action for rent.—Bly v. Bliss, 123 Mich. 195.

¶ 116. An assignment of a claim as security did not prevent recovery in the name of the claimant, where the suit was carried on with the knowledge and without the objection of the assignee; as in such case the judgment would be conclusive upon the assignee.—Lamson v. City of Marshall, 133 Mich. 250.

Issues under the pleading, and variance, see post § 34.
Pleading one assignor and proof of another, see post § 34.
Pleading one contract and proof of another, see post § 34.
Necessity of pleading assignment in special counts, when pleaded in general counts, see Assumpsit, IV; Pleading.

¶ 117. Where a claim arising on contract has been assigned, action may be brought thereon in the assignor's name without stating that it is for the assignee's use and benefit.—Peters v. Gallagher, 37 Mich. 407; and see Clay Fire and Marine Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt & Lumber Mfg. Co., 31 Mich. 346.

¶ 118. While under the statute the assignee of non-negotiable choses in action may sue thereon in his own name, he must still allege in his declaration an assignment and prove the same upon the trial to enable him to recover.—Blackwood v. Brown, 32 Mich. 104.

¶ 119. In cases where an assignee may sue in his own name, it is necessary for him to allege an assignment in his declaration and prove the same.—McKnight v. Lowitz, 176 Mich. 452.

¶ 120. An assignee cannot recover in his own name under a declaration upon the common counts that does not allege an assignment to him.—Pierce v. Closterhouse, 96 Mich. 124. See Conrad Seipp Brewing Co. v. McKittrick, 86 Mich. 191.

¶ 121. An agent cannot recover in his own name upon an order given to him in his individual character to procure a machine of his principal, to whom the purchase price is to be paid, and whose warranty he countersigns as agent, and delivers to the orderer, without averring an assignment of the contract.—Weston v. Card, 96 Mich. 373, per Long and Grant, JJ., others concurring in result.

¶ 122. The right to sue upon a contract as assignee must be positively averred, and an allegation of the assignment in the consolidated common counts will not support a recovery upon a special count in which it is not averred. Nor would a mere additional allusion to the assignment in the special count be sufficient.—Rose v. Jackson, 40 Mich. 30.

¶ 123. Evidence of the mutual assignment of interests among several plaintiffs for the purpose of bringing joint suit is inadmissible in an action on the common counts, such assignment not being averred in the declaration.—Cilley v. Van Patten, 58 Mich. 404.

¶ 124. A declaration in trespass by the assignee of a right of action for cutting timber on land is fatally defective if it does not set up the assignment.—Gates v. Comstock, 107 Mich. 546.

¶ 125. An assignee declaring in trover need not aver the assignment to himself of the right of action.—Warren v. Dwyer, 91 Mich. 414.

¶ 126. A plaintiff in trover for conversion described himself as "assignee," and the court ruled that he could not recover on proof of a conversion subsequent to the assignment, as the declaration purported to be for a cause of action that had accrued before. Held, error; the term "assignee" is here treated as simply descriptive.—Bloom v. Sexton, 33 Mich. 181.

§ 32. ——Sufficiency of allegations as to assignment.

¶ 127. An assignment may be set forth by its legal import and effect without reference to its form or phraseology.—Martin v. McReynolds, 6 Mich. 70.

¶ 128. The right to sue upon a contract as assignee must be positively averred, and an allegation of the assignment in the consolidated common counts will not support a recovery upon a special count in which it is not averred. Nor would a mere additional allusion to the assignment in the special count be sufficient.—Rose v. Jackson, 40 Mich. 30.

¶ 129. In averring the assignment to plaintiff by a firm of the account sued upon, the individual members comprising the firm need not be specified.—Wyckoff, S. & B. Co. v. Bishop, 98 Mich. 352.

¶ 130. In a declaration by one partner on an account assigned to him by his co-partner for goods sold and delivered by the firm to defendants, it is sufficient to aver the sale and delivery of the goods, the assignment of the account, defendants' promise to the firm to pay the account, and their failure to pay as agreed either the firm or plaintiff; a promise by defendants to pay plaintiff need not be averred.—Robinson v. Watson, 101 Mich. 406.

¶ 131. A declaration on the common counts by an assignee upon an open account sufficiently avers the assignment when to it are attached the account and the assignment, copies of the papers being served on defendant.—Morrill v. Bissell, 99 Mich. 409.

¶ 132. A bill of particulars under a declaration on the common counts renders unnecessary a special averment of an assignment in the declaration.—Kelly v. Waters, 31 Mich. 404; Snell v. Gregory, 37 Mich. 500.

¶ 133. In an action on the common counts to recover the price of fruit trees sold and delivered, the admission of evidence of an assignment of the claim is held not error under a statute permitting an assignee to sue in his own name; all needful notice of the nature of the demand may be obtained by a bill of particulars, and an amendment to cure the want of averment of an assignment would be matter of course.—Kelly v. Waters, 31 Mich. 404.

See also ante ¶ 123.

¶ 134. In trover by an assignee of the owner of the property the question of the extent of the assignee's beneficial interest is rendered immaterial by a charge that the assignee could have no rights different from those of the owner, and would be affected with all his equities.—Hake v. Buell, 50 Mich. 89.

¶ 135. Suit was brought in the name of parties to a written contract for the benefit of assignees of such contract, and was sought to be supported by proof of labor done by the assignees in pursuance of an arrangement between them and the contracting party modifying the terms of the contract, which arrangement was not shown to have been authorized or assented to by the assignors. Held, that the action could not be maintained, as the modified contract was not a contract between the parties to the record.—Litchfield v. Garratt, 10 Mich. 426.

¶ 137. Where an assignee of a chose in action brings suit in his own name he must allege the assignment in his declaration; and as an assignment of a non-negotiable note does not transfer a claim for goods sold and delivered; recovery for articles must be had, if at all, under the appropriate count and not upon the note.—Altman v. Fowler, 70 Mich. 57.

¶ 139. A declaration based upon an assignment of choses in action alleged to have been made by certain specified persons as co-owners does not support a claim of title based on a finding that the assignment was made by one of them in the name of a firm composed of both, after the other had withdrawn from the partnership.—Seeley v. Albrecht, 41 Mich. 525.

¶ 140. It is immaterial whether recovery might have been had by an assignee on a quantum meruit, where one who under a contract had sawed and piled lumber for another, assigned all his "right, title, and interest in, to, and under the contract" to plaintiff, and in an action by the latter to recover what was due on the contract the verdict represented the full contract sum less recoupment noticed and proved by defendant.—Reynolds v. Sweet, 104 Mich. 252.

¶ 141. A judgment in favor of the assignee of an account is valid if not appealed from, though proof of the assignment was admitted without an averment of such fact in the declaration.—Webster v. Williams, 69 Mich. 135.

§ 35. Burden of proof and evidence.

For the law of evidence as applied to the various contracts or liabilities passing under the assignment, see specific topics treating of such contract, tort or chose in action, e. g., Contracts; Conversion; Insurance. It is not intended to place here anything but evidence relating peculiarly to the assignment.

For the general law of evidence, whether on the issue of assignment or not, see Evidence.

Presumption on appeal as to assignability of cause sued on, see Appeal, ¶ 1533.

Presumption of assignment or other transfer from fact of possession, see Evidence, II.

¶ 142. One claiming by assignment from the successor corporation a claim for unpaid subscriptions due the predecessor must show that the requisites of a consolidation were substantially complied with, or he cannot recover the claim.—Rodgers v. Wells, 44 Mich. 411.

¶ 143. In an action on an assigned contract the consideration for the assignment cannot concern the defense, and the introduction of testimony which would suggest superior equities in a bona fide purchaser of the claim would mislead.—Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 49 Mich. 104.

¶ 144. An assignment from one joint promisee to another is not made out by the former's testifying on trial of a suit solely brought by the latter that he was willing the latter should so sue.—Howe v. Hyde, 88 Mich. 91.

ASSIGNMENTS FOR CREDITORS.

TREATS of assignments by debtors of their property to another for the purpose of paying the debts out of the property or its proceeds. Mortgages or trusts for the benefit of creditors, but not amounting to assignments for creditors, are treated in other topics which are referred to throughout the body of this topic; but see particularly Trusts; Mortgages; Chattel Mortgages. Bankruptcy is treated in a topic of that name; insolvency of corporations in Corporations, XXIII; and settlement of insolvent decedent's estates in Estates of Decedents.

¶ 1. An assignment of all one's assets to an assignee for the benefit of creditors is within the definition of a general assignment. —Kendall v. Bishop, 76 Mich. 634.

¶ 2. A chattel mortgage does not constitute per se a common-law or other assignment for the benefit of creditors.—Wineman v. Fisher Elec. Mfg. Co., 118 Mich. 636.

¶ 3. Where a corporation conveys by mortgage all its property to trustees to pay all its creditors, the transaction is an assignment for benefit of creditors.—Wheeler v. Ocker & Ford Mfg. Co., 162 Mich. 204.

¶ 4. If an assignment contains illegal provisions it is absolutely void; and the statute which makes fraud a question of fact has no application to the case.—Pierson v. Manning, 2 Mich. 445.

¶ 5. Where an assignment for the benefit of creditors was in full harmony with the act of 1879 (How. St., §§ 8739-8749), the fact that it purported to refer to the void statue of 1883 (How. St., §§ 8749a-8794l) did not defeat it so long as it was not repudiated or set aside by the assignor, who was bound to know the law.—Gott v. Hoschna, 57 Mich. 413.

Assignment as condition of discharge under Fraudulent Debtors' Act, see Civil Arrest and Bail.

¶ 7. The right to make a general assignment of all a man's property results from that absolute ownership which every man claims over what is his own. Every debtor has a legal right to assign property for the security of debts due by him.—Cook v. Rogers, 31 Mich. 391.

¶ 8. Any person, whether insolvent or not, may legally execute a conveyance of his property to a trustee or assignee to pay his indebtedness, if he have any, and such assignment will be valid, unless creditors can successfully attack it upon the ground of being made with intent to hinder, delay and defraud them.—Munson v. Ellis, 58 Mich. 331.

¶ 9. There is no law in this state that compels one to assign for the benefit of his creditors.—Austin v. First Nat. Bank, 100 Mich. 613.

¶ 10. There is no law compelling a debtor to make an assignment for the benefit of his creditors.—Sheldon v. Mann, 85 Mich. 265.

See also post ¶ 94.

¶ 11. An assignment is not void merely because the assets as shown by the inventory far exceed the debts, since a person may be insolvent though his assets exceed his liabilities.—Munson v. Ellis, 58 Mich. 331.

§ 4. The instrument of assignment.

Assignment referring to invalid statute, see ante ¶ 5.
Requisites and terms of instrument, see post §§ 5-8.
Acceptance and assumption of trust by assignee, see post § 17.

¶ 12. The scope of an assignment must be gathered from the whole instrument; no single clause is conclusive.—Price v. Haynes, 37 Mich. 487.

¶ 13. An assignment for the benefit of creditors or by way of security will be regarded as honest and lawful, if possible, and will not be adjudged fraudulent as a conclusion of law drawn from its form unless that construction is necessary.—Palmer v. Mason, 42 Mich. 146.

¶ 14. An assignment to be valid must definitely fix the rights of the parties beneficially interested, leaving nothing subject to the future direction or control of the assignor. —Pierson v. Manning, 2 Mich. 445.

§ 5. ——Delivery, acknowledgment and recording.

Bond and the filing thereof, see post § 17.
Approval of bond and indorsement thereof, see post § 17.
To defeat intervening attachment, see post § 26.
Effect on priorities of creditors, see post § 23.
General law of acknowledgments, see Acknowledgments.
Statutory provisions, see Jud. Act, Chap. XLII, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 13604.

¶ 15. How. St., § 8739, which prescribes how assignments for the benefit of creditors shall be made, and requires that no preferences shall be given, makes it necessary to their validity that they shall be acknowledged and filed with a proper inventory and bond, within ten days after the making, in "the office of the clerk of the circuit court of the county where the assignor resides," or in case of nonresidence, in the county of the assignee, if a resident. Other action of the assignees must be filed in the same office. —Scott v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 58 Mich. 311.

¶ 16. The failure of an assignee for the benefit of creditors to file with the county clerk the original assignment or a duplicate thereof, an inventory of the assigned property, a list of creditors of the assignor, and a bond for faithful performance, duly approved by the clerk, within ten days after the making of the assignment, as required by 3 How. St., § 8739, renders the proceedings invalid.—McCuaig v. City Sav. Bank, 111 Mich. 356.

¶ 17. The filing with the county clerk of a document purporting to be a "copy" of an assignment for the benefit of creditors is not a compliance with 3 How. St., § 8739, requiring the assignment itself, or a "duplicate" thereof, to be so filed.—McCuaig v. City Sav. Bank, 111 Mich. 356.

¶ 18. A storekeeper in Western Michigan executed an assignment for the benefit of creditors to a member of a Detroit firm to which he was indebted, the latter having previously agreed to settle up his business for him in case he had to suspend. The storekeeper delivered the assignment to an agent of the firm, who left him in possession, notified his principals by telegraph, and took the assignment to Detroit, where he delivered it next day to the partner named as assignee, who was out of town when he arrived, but who, on returning and receiving it, immediately indorsed his acceptance and set out to take possession. But on the day when the assignment was executed, after the agent had left the place, an attachment was levied on the debtor's goods by another creditor. In view of the previous understanding and the representative character of the agent, it was held that the assignment, being unconditional, took effect as soon as the agent started for Detroit, and it was beyond the assignor's control, and that it was sufficiently perfected by acceptance and delivery to defeat the levy.—Stamp v. Case, 41 Mich. 267.

¶ 19. An assignment for the benefit of creditors is not avoided by a subsequent attachment levied before the assignment could be put on record.—Palmer v. Mason, 42 Mich. 146.

Sufficiency to include realty, see also post ¶ 140.
Inventory and list of creditors, see Jud. Act, Chap. XLII, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 13604.

¶ 20. A schedule detailing at large the property conveyed is not necessary to the validity of an assignment.—Hollister v. Loud, 2 Mich. 309; Nye v. Van Husan, 6 Mich. 329; Stamp v. Case, 41 Mich. 267.

¶ 21. An assignment for the benefit of creditors, if in terms that would clearly transfer the title to all the debtor's property, is not invalid for want of a schedule.—Coots v. Chamberlain, 39 Mich. 565.

¶ 22. A clause reserving to the assignors power to perfect the schedules attached to the assignment does not impair or restrict the instrument itself.—Nye v. Van Husan, 6 Mich. 329.

¶ 23. An assignment which clearly manifests an intention on the part of the assignors to transfer all their property to the assignees, and that it shall have immediate operation, will have that effect, though to the general terms describing the property are added the words, "as the same is more particularly described in a schedule proposed to be hereafter annexed," and which schedule is not annexed. —Nye v. Van Husan, 6 Mich. 329.

¶ 24. The necessity or effect of a schedule, if one is referred to in an assignment, is to be determined by the intent of the parties as gathered from the whole instrument, and which, when ascertained, is to govern in the construction of assignments as in the case of other written instruments.—Nye v. Van Husan, 6 Mich. 329.

¶ 25. The following description of lands in an assignment, viz.: "Fourteen and a half lots of land in Kankakee city, Kankakee county, Illinois, valued at $5,400; two-sevenths of sixteen hundred acres of land in Green county, Illinois, at $2,500, and one hundred and twenty acres of land in Chickasaw county, Iowa, valued at $600," held too uncertain and vague to make the assignment operate as a transfer of title, at least without clear evidence that the assignor owned certain lands in the city or counties named which might fall within the description used, and that these were the only lands owned by them in such places.—Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 12.

§ 7. ——Term of trust, and powers and duties.

¶ 26. It is no objection to an assignment that no time is limited for closing the trust. —Hollister v. Loud, 2 Mich. 309.

¶ 29. A clause in an assignment authorizing the assignees to "sell and dispose of the" assigned property, "either at public or private sale, as they in their judgment may deem best, and upon such terms and conditions as they may deem most advisable, and for the best interests of the creditors, converting the same into money," etc., is not objectionable. It will not be considered as conferring a power to sell upon credit.—Nye v. Van Husan, 6 Mich. 329; Booth v. McNair, 14 Mich. 19.

¶ 30. A general assignment is not invalid because it authorizes the assignee to compromise bad debts and submit disputes to arbitration.—Watkins v. Wallace, 19 Mich. 57.

¶ 31. Whether an instrument is a general assignment depends on its character, and not on the name which parties see fit to give it.—Kendall v. Bishop, 76 Mich. 634.

¶ 32. An instrument that purports to give a security by way of mortgage, and that does not show an intention to make an absolute conveyance of the property described therein, cannot be declared upon its face to be a common-law assignment.—Fitzgerald v. McCandlish, 89 Mich. 400.

¶ 33. A conveyance by bill of sale of all one's property as security for a debt, no creditor save the grantee being named in the instrument or provided for by outside agreement, cannot be construed as a general assignment for the benefit of creditors.—Canfield v. W. J. Gould & Co., 115 Mich. 461.

¶ 34. A man gave an indemnity mortgage to his two brothers, and another mortgage to one of them to secure some notes, and on the same day he confessed judgment in their favor severally for the amounts. The sheriff afterwards sold the mortgaged property in bulk under these executions to one of the brothers, subject to certain sums remaining due on the mortgages. Held, that these multifarious dealings cannot be treated as an assignment, joint or otherwise.—Rollins v. Van Baalen, 56 Mich. 610.

Reservation of power to perfect schedule, see also ante ¶ 22.
Reservation of exempt property and that already disposed of, see post § 10.

Hindrance to creditors as invalidating assignment, see post § 13.
Priorities of creditors among themselves, see post § 23.
Who entitled to complain, see post § 34.
Right of creditors to waive invalidity, see post § 34.
Preference of individual debts on firm assignment, see post § 35.
Right to select exemptions reserved in general terms, see post § 19.
Right of assignee to reduce outstanding or concealed property to possession, see post § 20.
Preferences or reservations making conveyances fraudulent as to creditors, see Fraudulent Conveyances.

¶ 35. Preferences in common-law assignments are void only because forbidden by statute.—Dwight v. Scranton & Watson Lumber Co., 67 Mich. 507; Sheldon v. Mann, 85 Mich. 266.

¶ 36. A debtor in assigning for the benefit of creditors may make preferences if there is no statute forbidding it.—How v. Camp, W. 427 (wherein individual creditors were preferred to firm creditors); Town v. Bank of River Raisin, 2 D. 530 (where a corporation assigned with preferences).

¶ 37. An assignment for the benefit of creditors, executed prior to the passage of the statute regulating the making of such assignments, which prefers creditors without naming them either in the body of the assignment or in a schedule annexed at the time of its execution, is void upon its face as to nonconsenting creditors.—Wolf v. O'Conner, 88 Mich. 124, reversing 83 Mich. 301.

¶ 38. One cannot assign to a trustee for creditors unless he assigns all of his property, and he must not in such case prefer creditors, and, if he does, his attempt will be a failure regardless of his intentions.—Austin v. First Nat. Bank, 100 Mich. 613.

¶ 39. An assignment is fraudulent if property is withheld that should be put into it, and if the assignors give away or place excessive liens on property that should not be so disposed of.—Hubbard v. McNaughton, 43 Mich. 220; Farrington v. Sexton, 43 Mich. 454.

¶ 40. An assignment to be valid must definitely fix the rights of the parties beneficially interested, leaving nothing subject to the future direction or control of the assignor. If it provides for a part only of the creditors, and makes no provision for the application of the surplus, if any, the assignment is void as to the creditors not provided for, since at law such surplus would revert to the assignor, and the assignment consequently contains a resulting trust for his benefit before all the creditors are paid.—Pierson v. Manning, 2 Mich. 445.

¶ 41. A voluntary assignment, purporting to be general, is void if it does not fairly and in good faith assign all of the assignor's property that is liable for the payment of his debts.—Smith v. Mitchell, 12 Mich. 180.

¶ 42. An assignment is void if it does not include the assignor's real estate.—Price v. Haynes, 37 Mich. 487.

¶ 43. An assignment is not necessarily to be held fraudulent and void because some small portion of the assets was withheld from the assignee. If the assignment is legal on its face and the assignee is acting in good faith, he may by proper remedies pursue and recover anything wrongfully retained from him.—Parsell v. Patterson, 47 Mich. 505.

¶ 44. A general assignment that is broad enough in its terms to cover any property belonging to the assignor is nevertheless invalid if property is secretly kept back from the assignee and used for private purposes, and no authority is given to the assignee to take measures to set aside fraudulent transfers.—Farrington v. Sexton, 43 Mich. 454.

¶ 45. The fact that the assignors were allowed by the assignees to occupy premises conveyed by the assignment during a period when such property was not usually rented, the assignees in the meantime taking the crops, and expressing their intention to charge the assignors a fair rent, cannot, in the absence of any understanding that he should occupy them free of rent, be urged as evidence of a secret trust on behalf of the assignor.—Hollister v. Loud, 2 Mich. 309.

¶ 48. Pub. Acts 1883, Act No. 193 (How. St., §§ 8749a-8749l), the purpose of which was to prevent preferences among creditors and to distribute the debtor's property equally, is inoperative, since it fails to provide for notice to parties concerned, for any record of the proceedings and review thereof, and for any means of giving effect to its provisions.—Risser v. Hoyt, 53 Mich. 185.

See also post ¶ 58.

Allowing other creditors benefit of reduction of secured debt to which exemptions were applied, see post ¶ 191.

¶ 49. It is no objection to the validity of an assignment that the assignor reserved from it such property as was by law exempt from levy and sale on execution.—Hollister v. Loud, 2 Mich. 309; Rosenthal v. Scott, 41 Mich. 632.

¶ 50. When an assignment for the benefit of creditors limits the transfer to property "which might be reached or recovered by any of the creditors of the" assignee, it sufficiently excludes such property as would be exempt by law.—Chandler v. Jenks, 50 Mich. 151.

¶ 52. An assignment set forth that certain property subject to specific claims of particular creditors was not assigned, and provided that these creditors would only be entitled to the benefits of the assignment if they surrendered their securities to the assignee. Held, that the express omission of this property from the assignment did not necessarily make it invalid.—Henry v. Root, 38 Mich. 371.

¶ 54. The assignee is not authorized to recover a payment made by way of preference to a bona fide creditor before the assignment, nor to attack the validity of a mortgage given to secure payment of such debt.—Dwight v. Scranton & Watson Lumber Co., 67 Mich. 507.

¶ 55. A conveyance of real estate does not invalidate an assignment made the next day, if it was a complete and independent transaction, done without contemplating an assignment; and it is for the jury to determine whether it was or not.—Coots v. Chamberlain, 39 Mich. 565.

§ 11. Instruments or transfers amounting to preferential assignments.

Immateriality of name given to instrument of assignment, see ante § 8.

Bill of sale as assignment, see also ante ¶ 33.

¶ 56. Conveyances are not within the invalidating provisions of How. St., § 8739, relating to common-law assignments of a preferential nature, unless there is about them something in the nature of a common-law assignment to be attacked; the statute does not apply to a case where there are many instruments of different kinds, running to different persons and executed at different times, and where all the property was not covered by instruments.—Webber v. Hayes, 117 Mich. 256.

¶ 58. A transfer of all one's property except his homestead, most of it to his sons, to whom he claimed to be indebted to pay their claim and to pay five other creditors, who are not consulted with reference thereto, is in effect an assignment for the benefit of creditors; and, if any are excluded, is void for preferences. It is not merely a preferential payment by transfer of property.—Hill v. Mallory, 112 Mich. 387.

¶ 59. The fact that an instrument designed to secure a debt covers all the debtor's property, the value whereof greatly exceeds the debt secured, does not render it a common-law assignment where the right of redemption is not withdrawn.—Warner v. Littlefield, 89 Mich. 329.

¶ 61. A bill of sale, given in payment of bona fide indebtedness and not purporting to cover, or in fact covering, all of the debtor's property, cannot be construed into an assignment for the benefit of creditors so as to be declared void for an unlawful preference. So held where a merchant gave a bill of sale to his brother of all his property except a city lot with a store and dwelling-house thereon, worth not to exceed $2,400 and mortgaged for $900, and which was occupied by the debtor as a homestead.—Bresson v. Musselman, 86 Mich. 186.

¶ 62. Under How. St., §§ 6184, 8739, a conveyance to a trustee to sell the property of a corporation and apply the proceeds to pay its indebtedness, and providing that a certain creditor be paid first and for the payment of compensation to the trustee after the payment of unsecured debts, had the effect of an assignment for the benefit of creditors, and was void for making preferences.—Conely v. Collins, 119 Mich. 519.

¶ 63. An instrument not purporting to convey all of the property of a debtor but only a specific merchandise stock (lumber yard) "in trust" for the payment of named creditors, and not authorizing the grantee to operate the business, but only to take possession on default of the grantor, who was left in possession and accountable for proceeds of sales, is not an assignment for creditors.—Belding-Hall Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 125 Mich. 54.

¶ 64. An insolvent's transfer to trustees to secure bona fide secured debts, cannot be assailed as a preferential assignment for creditors by unsecured creditors, where the property received by the trustees was not in excess of the amount of the secured debts.—City Savings Bank of Detroit v. Brown, 129 Mich. 377.

¶ 65. A trust deed for the payment of sums among others of money in specified sums to be advanced for the purpose of facilitating the conduct of the business by the trustee under a mortgage is not rendered preferential by reason of the fact that the money had not been paid to the mortgagor at the time, where it was put into the business producing augmented assets in which the creditor asserting the preference had no equity.—City Savings Bank of Detroit v. Brown, 129 Mich. 377.

¶ 66. Under How. St., § 8739, providing that all "assignments, commonly called 'common-law assignments,' for the benefit of creditors, shall be void, unless the same shall be without preferences as between such creditors, and shall be of all the property of the assignor not exempt from execution," a conveyance by which a debtor conveys his real property in trust as security for pre-existing debts, in the order named, and gives the trustees power of management, sale, disbursement of proceeds, and for payment of surplus, if any, to the grantor or to such person as he shall direct, and does not prevent the debtor from redeeming or place any surplus beyond the reach of creditors, is not a common-law assignment, but a mere security for the creditors named.—Ontario Bank of Toronto, Canada v. Hurst, 103 Fed. 231.

Evidence as to intended character, see also post ¶ 123.
Validity of mortgages and chattel mortgages in general, see Chattel Mortgages, I; Mortgages, III; Fraudulent Conveyances.

¶ 67. If the instrument by which property in chattels is transferred vests absolute title without redemption in a trustee for the creditors and thus takes it beyond the reach of other creditors and of the mortgagor, it is a common-law assignment and not a mortgage.—Warner v. Littlefield, 89 Mich. 329.

¶ 68. A chattel mortgage executed contemporaneously with an assignment for the benefit of creditors, and designed to give the mortgagees a preference, must be regarded as one transaction with the assignment, and is void under How. St., § 8739.—Burnham v. Haskins, 79 Mich. 35.

¶ 69. A mortgage given to secure a bona fide indebtedness is not invalid by reason of its proximity to a general assignment by the mortgagor for the benefit of creditors, where the mortgagee, at the time of taking the security, had no notice or knowledge that an assignment was contemplated. Such a transaction does not constitute an illegal preference within the meaning of the assignment law.—Kalamazoo Spring Axle Co. v. Winans, Pratt & Co., 106 Mich. 193.

¶ 70. The facts that an instrument, in form a trust mortgage, covered property scarcely adequate to pay the indebtedness secured, and gave authority to the trustee to take possession if he should deem the creditors insecure, and that the makers were insolvent at the time of its execution, have no tendency to show that the instrument was intended to operate as a common-law assignment.—Beckman v. Noble, 115 Mich. 523.

¶ 74. A chattel mortgage given to a trustee to secure certain creditors which authorizes the trustee to take possession of the mortgaged property forthwith, and, in addition to the usual power of sale, provides that, if he shall deem it more advantageous to sell the property, or any part thereof, at private sale or in the usual course of trade, he may do so, applying the proceeds to the liquidation of the mortgage indebtedness, does not vest any actual title in the mortgagee, and is not inconsistent with the right of the mortgagor, or his creditors who may acquire liens, to redeem at any time, and hence does not amount to a general assignment with preferences.—Cluett v. Rosenthal, 100 Mich. 193.

¶ 75. An insolvent debtor conveyed all of his real estate, except his homestead, to a firm to which he was indebted in a large amount, and at the same time executed to a member of the firm, as trustee for certain specified creditors, a chattel mortgage covering all of his personal property. This mortgage made no provision for the return of any surplus to the mortgagor. Held, that the instruments did not constitute an assignment for the benefit of creditors void because preferential.—McMorran v. Moore, 113 Mich. 101.

¶ 76. Simultaneous mortgages payable on demand, given to secure good-faith indebtedness and not purporting to cover, nor in fact covering, all of the debtor's property, cannot be construed as an assignment for the benefit of creditors so as to be declared void for preferences.—Sheldon v. Mann, 85 Mich. 265.

¶ 77. The validity of simultaneous mortgages, payable on demand, given to secure good-faith indebtedness, and not purporting to cover all the debtor's property, is not affected so as to be construed a general assignment for creditors by mortgages subsequently given to secure other creditors.—Sheldon v. Mann, 85 Mich. 265.

¶ 78. The fact that the mortgagee is not a creditor of the mortgagor, and that the mortgage is executed in trust to secure certain specified creditors the amount of their several claims, does not give the instrument the character of a common-law assignment.—Warner v. Littlefield, 80 Mich. 329.

¶ 79. Mortgages of real and personal property, together with a subsequent parol agreement that the mortgagee should sell the property before the maturity of the debt secured, do not amount to an assignment for creditors void because preferential.—National Bank of Oshkosh v. First Nat. Bank, 100 Mich. 485.

¶ 80. An arrangement between a mortgagor and various mortgagees whereby all the property covered by the mortgages was transferred to one of the mortgagees who assumed payment of the mortgages, the debtor being released from his obligations, held not to be an assignment for creditors void because of preferences.—McCann v. Dillabaugh, 117 Mich. 446.

¶ 81. A common-law assignment void for preference is not made out by showing a mortgage to certain creditors of substantially all of the corporate property, a bill to foreclose filed on the same day and consent by the corporation to the appointment of receivers with power to continue the business, which was done for a short time when the entire property was sold to a new corporation by the receiver acting under orders of the court.—Longley, Low & Alexander v. Amazon Hosiery Co., 128 Mich. 194.

¶ 82. When an insolvent, at her own instance and convenience, voluntarily gives two of her creditors security for debts by chattel mortgage on a stock of merchandise, and, seven days later, and two hours after recording of the mortgages, makes an assignment for creditors, the conclusion is justified, in the absence of other controlling circumstances, that both were contemplated, and they should be deemed in law one transaction, and the preferences alone declared void and the trust arising from the assignment enforced, under How. St., § 8739, providing "that all assignments, commonly called common-law assignments, for the benefit of creditors, shall be void unless the same shall be without preferences as between such creditors," and How. St., § 8744, providing that in "case there shall be any fraud in the matter of said assignment, or in the execution of said trust, * * * any person interested may file his bill * * * for the enforcement of said trust, and the court, in its discretion, may appoint a receiver therein."—Kellogg v. Root, 23 Fed, 525.

¶ 83. Mortgages executed by a debtor to a trustee for the benefit of certain specified creditors, and which are evidently an assignment of all of his property with intent to prefer the beneficiaries, are void as to the unsecured creditors.—Atkinson v. Weidner, 79 Mich. 575.

¶ 84. A mortgage by an insolvent debtor to part of his creditors is not within How. St., § 8739, avoiding all assignments for benefit of creditors, unless free from preferences.—Warren v. Dwyer, 91 Mich. 414.

¶ 85. Chattel mortgages given by an insolvent debtor to a particular person in trust for certain of his creditors are not void as a common-law assignment preferring creditors.—Weber v. Childs, 90 Mich. 498.

¶ 86. A trust chattel mortgage providing that only those creditors of an insolvent mortgagor who accepted in writing the terms of the mortgage and who agreed to take a pro rata payment in full satisfaction of their claims, should share in the proceeds of the incumbered chattels, is void under § 9533, Comp. L. 1897, § 11417, How. St., 2nd Ed., as tending to hinder and delay creditors.—Brown, Eager & Hull Co. v. Mosier, 187 Mich. 55.

¶ 88. A mortgage cannot be held to constitute an assignment for the benefit of creditors when, having been executed by an insolvent corporation to secure certain creditors, it does not appear that the officers of the corporation proposed to make a general assignment thereafter, or that the creditors secured by it had any knowledge of any such purpose, and where the mortgage does not by its terms create any trust or provide for any transfer for any other purpose than to secure the payment of honest debts.—Bank of Montreal v. Potts Salt & Lumber Co., 90 Mich. 345.

¶ 89. A mortgage of substantially all of the property of a corporation to secure certain creditors is not a common-law assignment and not void because of a preference.—Longley, Low & Alexander v. Amazon Hosiery Co., 128 Mich. 194.

¶ 89a. A chattel mortgage cannot properly be given under an arrangement by which it is to fall due at once and be foreclosed, and the property is to be placed in charge of a receiver, who is to manage it, to the exclusion of other creditors. Such a course would amount to creating, by means of the mortgage and a court order, a trust which would be invalid if made by an assignment.—Merchants' & Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Kent Circuit Judge, 43 Mich. 292.

Preferences and reservations, see ante § 9.
Fraudulent hindrance extraneous to the instrument of assignment, see post § 14.

¶ 90. If an assignment be so drawn that it must, in its execution, tend to hinder or delay creditors unprovided for by it in the collection of their demands, the legal presumption is that it was drawn with that intent.—Pierson v. Manning, 2 Mich. 445.

¶ 91. A general assignment is invalidated by a clause purporting to bind the creditors to agree to it and release their claims in full and discharge the assignor from all liabilities as soon as their just proportion of the proceeds is paid to them.—Hubbard v. McNaughton, 43 Mich. 220.

§ 14. Fraud extrinsic to the instrument; motive.
Construction against fraud, see also ante ¶ 13.
Who may complain, see post § 34.
Intrinsic frauds apparent by terms of the instrument, see ante §§ 9, 10, 13.
Rule as to fraudulent conveyances generally, see Fraudulent Conveyances.

¶ 93. General assignments are not exempted from the consequences of actual fraud that has any tendency to hinder, delay or defraud creditors.—Farrington v. Sexton, 43 Mich. 454.

¶ 94. The mere fact of the solvency or insolvency of one who has made a general assignment, or his belief in the one or the other, does not necessarily render the assignment void. Without any fraudulent intent in either case it would be valid, and with a fraudulent intent it would be void in both cases alike.—Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241.

¶ 95. The fraudulent character of an assignment does not depend on the assignor's opinion that what he does is not fraud in law.—Hubbard v. McNaughton, 43 Mich. 220.

¶ 96. That it hinders, delays or obstructs creditors does not render an assignment void for fraud. To render it so it must have been made with that intent.—Hollister v. Loud, 2 Mich. 309.

¶ 97. It is no objection to the validity of an assignment that it was made in anticipation by both parties of the immediate issuing of attachments against the property of the assignor.—Hollister v. Loud, 2 Mich. 309.

¶ 98. The subsequent fraudulent acts of the assignor, unknown to the assignee, cannot change the character of the assignee's title, or make that fraudulent which was originally honest.—Baldwin v. Buckland, 11 Mich. 389.

¶ 99. That the assignment was made by an embarrassed debtor to prevent a sacrifice of his property does not necessarily render it void.—Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241.

¶ 100. Where the assignment substantially fulfils its ostensible purpose it may well be supported, though the assignors have failed to treat the assignee with entire fairness and frankness.—Parsell v. Patterson, 47 Mich. 505.

¶ 101. One who attacks a security as a fraudulent preference under the assignment law has the burden of establishing his claim. —Sweetzer v. Higby 63 Mich. 13.

¶ 102. Actual fraud in the making of an assignment is to be established by proof, like any other fact. And it must be clearly and distinctly made out, and cannot be inferred from circumstances of an equivocal tendency. —Hollister v. Loud, 2 Mich. 309.

¶ 103. Where an honest intent can as fairly be inferred from the terms of the assignment as a fraudulent one, the courts are not at liberty to infer the latter.—Nye v. Van Husan, 6 Mich. 329.

§ 16. ——Evidence and fact questions.
Right of party to testify as to his own intent, see Evidence, VI, A.
Admissibility of acts and declarations of party out of court as evincive of fraud, see Evidence, VII, C.

¶ 105. A fraudulent intent in making an assignment may be proved by the acts and declarations of the assignor, his circumstances and situation, the terms and provisions of the instrument, or any and all means of evidence which convince the mind of the existence of the thing sought.—Baldwin v. Buckland, 11 Mich. 389.

¶ 106. The whole conduct of the assignor with reference to the property after the assignment should be allowed to be shown, as bearing upon the question of the intent with which the assignment was made.—Flanigan v. Lampman, 12 Mich. 58.

¶ 107. Where a voluntary assignment, ostensibly for the benefit of creditors, is assailed as fraudulent, the most liberal rules should prevail for the admission of any evidence that may tend to prove the fraud.—Flanigan v. Lampman, 12 Mich. 58.

¶ 108. When a general assignment is assailed as fraudulent in fact, and there is some evidence that a portion of the assets was not delivered over to the assignee, it is competent, in support of the assignment, to show that the assignee was not aware that anything was retained and acted himself in good faith.—Parsell v. Patterson, 47 Mich. 505.

¶ 109. When, in opposition to an assignment, it is shown that one of the assignors did not deliver to the assignee possession of a house and lot to which he had title, it is competent for the assignee to show, on the other hand, that the property was encumbered to its full value.—Parsell v. Patterson, 47 Mich. 505.

¶ 111. If the assignor's conduct with reference to the property after the assignment tends to show that he still claims and seeks to derive a benefit from the property assigned, to the prejudice of creditors, it will generally tend, in a greater or less degree, to show that the assignment was originally made with a fraudulent purpose.—Flanigan v. Lampman, 12 Mich. 58.

¶ 112. The defendant assailed an assignment as fraudulent; and having shown that one of the assignors bought of the assignee a horse and carriage, constituting a part of the assigned property, ostensibly as agent of his brother-in-law, who was a preferred creditor, and whose claim was alleged to be fictitious, he then asked the witness, "Who had and kept possession of said horse and carriage, after such sale, and up to the time of the present trial?" It was held that the question was proper.—Flanigan v. Lampman, 12 Mich. 58.

¶ 113. Where a general assignment was assailed as fraudulent, it was held that evidence that, at the time it was made, goods were at a railroad depot, directed to the assignees, which they claimed and disposed of afterwards, was competent, as having a bearing on the good faith of the assignment. And evidence that said goods were afterwards sold with the assignee's knowledge and consent is competent as tending to prove fraud.—Smith v. Mitchell, 12 Mich. 180.

¶ 114. The avowal, by a debtor who believes himself solvent, but is pressed by creditors, that he intends to assign for the purpose of getting time, is strong evidence of fraud, but subject to explanation.—Baldwin v. Buckland, 11 Mich. 389; Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241.

¶ 116. Fraud in a general assignment is fairly inferable from the fact that the goods were inventoried at $55,011.68 and were appraised at $27,272.77, while the goods on hand five weeks before inventoried about $95,000; it may also be inferred from a showing that the assets of a certain company belonged to the firm making the assignment, and had been disposed of by collusion.—Farrington v. Sexton, 43 Mich. 454.

¶ 117. Where it appeared that the assignee, a short time before the assignment, as an inducement to a third person to loan the assignor money, stated that the latter was perfectly good and not owing much, it was held that the setting up by him of a large preferred claim under the assignment, as having been owing to him before such statements were made, was strong evidence of fraud in making the assignment.—Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241.

¶ 118. An assignee's sale examined, and held to be with intent to defraud creditors, where it gave evidence of having been accomplished by fiction, transfers at assignee's sale, and finally investing the debtor with possession of a stock and causing him to sell it in a manner which forced creditors to accept too small a dividend or else see themselves shut out by secured creditors.—Morrison v. Mayer, 63 Mich, 238.

¶ 119. Facts showing that a debtor organized several limited partnerships to hold his lands and subsequently another limited partnership to conduct his affairs and pay his debts to which he assigned a large amount of property; and that this partnership pledged a large amount of property to the debtor's son for a debt found to be bona fide, are held not sufficient to warr nt the relief sought by the assignee for creditors in a bill for an accounting and discovery.—Spaulding v. Steel, 126 Mich. 253.

¶ 120. The assignor's suffering a bill in equity which charges fraud to be taken as confessed does not establish the fraud as against the assignee who denies all knowledge of the assignor's fraudulent intent.—Hollister v. Loud, 2 Mich. 309.

¶ 121. That the assignee is a relative of the assignor, and resides in another town, and that he employs the assignor as his agent in managing the business under the assignment, are not conclusive evidence of fraud in making the assignment.—Baldwin v. Buckland, 11 Mich. 389.

¶ 123. The question as to whether the instrument is a chattel mortgage or an assignment for the benefit of creditors, must in all cases be determined as a question of law upon the contents of such instrument and not upon any outside testimony; and unless the conveyance upon its face purports to convey all of the debtor's property to secure certain preferred creditors by an absolute title, the court cannot declare it a common-law assignment. Where facts appear outside the instrument which tend to prove that it was executed with the intent that it should have the effect of such assignment, or with intent to evade the statute, then it becomes a question of fact for the jury to decide, and not for the court.—Warner v. Littlefield, 89 Mich. 329.

¶ 123a. A deed of assignment executed prior to the statute regulating the making of assignments for the benefit of creditors purporting to convey the whole of the property for the use and benefit of his creditors, signed and acknowledged by the assignor as well as the assignees, and duly recorded in the county where the assignor and one of the assignees lived, is a valid conveyance without active assumption.—Wolf v. O'Conner, 83 Mich. 301, reversed on other grounds on rehearing 88 Mich. 124.

¶ 125. Unless the statutory bond required by How. St., § 8739, is executed, approved and filed within ten days after the making of the assignment, no title passes to the assignee, and filing and approving afterwards will not cure the defect.—Beard v. Clippert, 63 Mich. 716; Springett v. Colerick, 67 Mich. 362; Abbott v. Chaffe, 83 Mich. 256; see s. c. 96 Mich. 294.

¶ 126. Whether an assignment for the benefit of creditors can be assailed at law for the failure to file the assignee's bond until after creditors have levied, if no proceeding has been taken in equity to enforce the trust, quere.—Munson v. Ellis, 58 Mich. 331.

¶ 129. Until the assignee of an insolvent debtor has filed his bond he cannot proceed in the execution of his trust, and his trusteeship is for the time imperfect and subject to a contingency in the nature of a condition subsequent that may defeat his power to act without destroying the trust. But he may meanwhile do what may be necessary to protect the interests of beneficiaries in the assigned property; for example, he may insure such property.—Sibley v. Prescott Ins. Co., 57 Mich. 14.

¶ 131. The omission of the county clerk to indorse his approval on the bond of an assignee within ten days after the latter's appointment does not invalidate the bond (How. St., § 8739).—Munson v. Ellis, 58 Mich. 331.

¶ 132. An assignment is not made void by the failure to make the penalty of the assignee's bond double the amount of the inventory (How. St., § 8739).—Munson v. Ellis, 58 Mich. 331.

¶ 133. An assignee's bond in double the value of the equity of redemption in chattels of the assignor, which he had mortgaged, is sufficient to sustain the assignment as against defendant in trover and trespass claiming that for want of a sufficient bond the assignee had no title.—Coots v. Radford, 47 Mich. 37.

¶ 134. A bond by an assignee for the benefit of creditors, with a corporation of another state as surety, cannot be considered a good bond without evidence that such corporation has been authorized to become surety on undertakings.—McCuaig v. City Sav. Bank, 111 Mich. 356.

¶ 135. Acceptance of his trust by an assignee is indicated by his taking possession of the property and notifying creditors; but it is shown conclusively by his joining in the act of assignment, and recording it when executed.—Commercial Nat. Bank of Detroit v. Mosser, 57 Mich. 386.

¶ 136. The validity of a debtor's assignment cannot be made to depend on the assignee's subsequent testimony as to whether he would have taken it or not if he had known when he took it that the assignor had conveyed a tract of land the day before he made it.—Coots v. Chamberlain, 39 Mich. 565.

§ 18. Assent or participation by creditors.

Assent necessary to revocation, see ante ¶ 124.
Delivery of the instrument of assignment, see ante § 5.
Right to attack assignment for irregularity, see post §§ 33, 34.
As estoppel or waiver of invalidity, see post § 34.

Schedule in assignment, see ante § 6.
Reservation of estate as making assignment void, see ante § 9.
Right to recover property in which creditors have an equity, see post § 20.
Accounting for property, see post § 29.
See Jud. Act, Chap. XLII, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13605.

¶ 137. Where an assignment is made of all the debtor's property, saving in general terms that which is exempt from execution, it passes for the benefit of the creditors all that they might take under execution, and the assignor may select and retain the property exempt from execution as he might had it been levied upon.—Brooks v. Nichols, 17 Mich. 39.

¶ 138. If in the assignment the property is referred to as described in a schedule which is attached, only such property will pass as is there described.—Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 12.

¶ 139. The fee in lands of the debtor which are covered by the assignment will be conveyed by it without the use of words of inheritance.—Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241.

¶ 140. An assignment was made of all one's "goods, chattels, stock, promissory notes, debts, choses in action, evidences of debt, claims, demands, property and effects of every description wherever the same may be situated, to wit, all the goods, chattels and property now in the store lately occupied by" the assignor; also, certain other specified chattels and debts. Held, that this did not include real estate.—Price v. Haynes, 37 Mich. 487.

¶ 141. A banking firm, just before it had determined on assigning, and before making up its cash account, marked a package of money with the name of a general depositor and the word "private." The money did not amount to the depositor's full credit. On making the assignment the firm asked the assignee to give the package to the depositor, who knew nothing of these facts till afterwards. Held, that the money was not thereby delivered and was covered by the assignment.—Coots v. McConnell, 39 Mich. 742.

Duty of assignee, see also post § 22.
Petition or bill by assignee or creditors in aid of assignment to get in assets, see post §§ 39, 40.
See Jud. Act, Chap. XLII, § 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 13606.

¶ 142. Prior to the enactment of How. St., § 8741, the assignee of an insolvent debtor acquired only such interest in the assigned property as the debtor had to assign, but that section conferred upon the assignee the additional right to recover all property, or right or equities in property, which might be reached or recovered by any of the assignor's creditors.—Michigan Trust Co. v. Webber, 109 Mich. 87.

¶ 144. Where an insolvent debtor who has made an assignment of his property for the benefit of creditors, admits, on his examination touching the alleged secreting and disposal of certain property which he did not turn over to the assignee, his possession of the property, he must clearly account for the same to the satisfaction of the court; otherwise he will be held to have it still in his possession, and to be able to hand it over to his receiver.—Burnham v. Dillon, 100 Mich. 350.

Necessity of approval and filing bond, see ante § 17.
Right to recover concealed or withheld assets, see ante § 20.
Title and rights of successor, see post § 28.
Compensation and expenses of assignee, see post § 31.
Revocation of assignment or termination and reassignment, see post § 30.
Estoppel of participating creditor to deny title, see post § 34.
Estoppel to assert title against lessee of assignor allowed to remain in possession, see Estoppel, III. B.
Statutory powers of assignee, see Jud. Act, Chap. XLII, §§ 2, 3; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13605, 13606.

¶ 145. The assignee of an insolvent debtor, in the absence of fraud in fact, and where there are no statutory regulations, takes only the debtor's rights.—Brown v. Brabb, 67 Mich. 17.

¶ 146. Under the assignment law the whole estate vests in the assignee, and is not subject to seizure by any particular creditors.—Kintner v. Pickard, 67 Mich. 125.

¶ 147. An assignee for the benefit of creditors is the general owner of the assigned goods until his trust is fully performed, and then the resulting trust restores to the assignor the general ownership in what is left. But during the trust the assignor has no lien upon the goods or special property in them.—Redman v. Nathan, 45 Mich. 607.

¶ 149. Where one who buys goods to which the vendor expressly reserves title until payment of the price, makes an assignment for the benefit of creditors, no title to the goods passes to the assignee.—Ovid Carriage Co. v Parsille, 157 Mich. 402.

¶ 150. While it is true that courts have supervision of assignment proceedings, they cannot confer upon the assignee rights that the statute does not give him; and, giving to the statute of voluntary assignments the broadest construction of which it is capable, the assignee only stands in the place of his assignor and of the latter's creditors.—Michigan Trust Co. v. Webber, 109 Mich. 87.

¶ 151. A voluntary assignee for the benefit of creditors has no greater title than his assignor to the latter's property, and cannot question the validity of a recorded mortgage made by him by suing him in replevin for chattels covered by the mortgage. It would be different with an assignee in bankruptcy or an involuntary assignee.—Wakeman v. Barrows, 41 Mich. 363.

¶ 152. An assignee for the benefit of creditors is not a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration.—Pierson v. Manning, 2 Mich. 445; Flanigan v. Lampman, 12 Mich. 58; Farrington v. Sexton, 43 Mich. 454; Lentz v. Flint & Pere Marquette R. Co., 53 Mich. 444; Brown v. Brabb, 67 Mich. 17; contra, Hollister v. Loud, 2 Mich. 309, overruled, see 2 Mich. 445.

¶ 154. Assignees take no title to firm property under assignment by one partner not purporting to convey such property.—Van Kleeck v. McCabe, 87 Mich. 599.

See generally Jud. Act, Chap. XLII, § 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 13606.
Appraisement and sale of property, see Jud. Act, Chap. XLII, § 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 13607.

¶ 155. As a general rule the assignment ends the ordinary operations of business; and the assignee must convert the assigned property into money without unnecessary delay and apply the proceeds to the payment of the debts.—Wilhelm v. Byles, 60 Mich. 561.

¶ 156. The assignee has no authority in virtue of his trust to renew or continue in force the undischarged debts, or to bind his assignor by an express or implied promise of payment.—Parsons v. Clark, 59 Mich. 414.

¶ 158. Assignees for the benefit of creditors may entrust the chief control of the business to the assignor, where it is done without fraud or collusion, under the honest belief that it is the best course for getting the value of the assets.—Clark v. Craig, 29 Mich. 398.

¶ 159. The assignee of the stock in trade of an insolvent debtor continued to carry on the business at retail, and to that end employed the assignor at a weekly salary, and placed him in charge of the main store. Held, that the wisdom of such employment depends entirely upon the character of the assignor that it may have been for the benefit of the creditors, he being more familiar than any one else with the business, the character of the goods, and the responsibility of his debtors.—In re Joslin, 101 Mich. 499.

¶ 160. After an assignment has been made and the assignee has taken possession of the property, he cannot divest it of its trust character by turning it over to one who is colluding with him to defraud creditors.—Morrison v. Mayer, 63 Mich. 238.

¶ 161. The wife of an insolvent debtor has the same right as any one else to purchase the assigned property at assignee's sale; and the mere fact that a third party makes such purchase in her interest is no evidence of fraud on the part of the assignee.—In re Joslin, 101 Mich. 499.

¶ 162. Where an assignee for creditors, in the belief that certain property was covered by a chattel mortgage executed by his assignor, assigned his interest therein, and all right of action for a wrongful conversion thereof, to the mortgagees, without consideration, title passed to the mortgagees, and persons wrongfully in possession of the property could not, when sued by the mortgagees for the conversion, question the good faith of the transaction.—Brotherton v. Goldman, 90 Mich. 340.

¶ 163. Where assignees, awaiting an advantageous sale, stored an unsold remnant of goods assigned in a warehouse without insurance, it was held not such culpable negligence as to justify charging them with the value of the goods on their destruction by fire.—Clark v. Craig, 29 Mich. 398.

¶ 164. Comp. L. 1897, § 9541, providing that assigned property and assets shall be sold at auction or private sale as the circuit court might direct, is designed for the benefit of creditors and not debtors of the assignor, and therefore a defendant in an action on a note by an assignee for the benefit of creditors, is not in position to raise the question that the assignee had no right to sue under the act, but must sell it.—Gibbs v. Montcalm Circuit Judge, 123 Mich. 615.

Paramount and hostile levies and transfers and claims, see post § 26.
Assignee as party to bring suits, see post § 36.
Right to sue pending assignment, see post §§ 36-39.
Bills in aid of or to enforce trust, see post § 39.
Lien and priority of the various levies and claims, see such topics as Attachment; Chattel Mortgages; Executions; Liens.
Preference and lien of labor claims in general, see Liens.
Liens and preferences of labor claims against corporations, see Corporations, XXIII, XXIV, E; and see also Railroads, VI.
Rank and preference of claims, see Jud. Act, Chap. XLII, § 11; Comp. L. 1915, § 13614.

¶ 165. A general assignee for the benefit of creditors is the representative of all the creditors, including those whose rights have been injuriously affected by withholding a chattel mortgage from the files, and as against the mortgagee may keep possession until tendered the amount as to which he is inferior to other creditors.—Kennedy v. Dawson, 96 Mich. 79.

¶ 166. An assignee for the benefit of creditors has no authority to make a contract subsequent to the assignment giving preference in payment to one creditor for goods belonging to the debtor at the date of the assignment.—Illinois Glass Co. v. United States Horse-Radish Co., 166 Mich. 520.

¶ 167. Complainant contracted to sell to defendant a quantity of bottles to be shipped from time to time at the direction of defendant, with the provision that all said bottles unshipped and in the hands of complainant on August 1, 1908, should be invoiced to the buyer and stored by complainant at the risk and expense of defendant. On August 31, 1908, there remained in the possession of complainant about five carloads of bottles which were on that date invoiced to defendant and charged to it upon complainant's books. Thereafter a composition agreement was made between creditors extending the time for payment one year on all claims, and placing the defendant's business in the hands of one Eddington, to conduct it for the benefit of creditors. After said assignment complainant shipped three carloads of the bottles invoiced to defendant under an agreement with said Eddington that he should receive immediate payment therefor. Under a bill to establish a priority of claim for said shipment, held, title to said bottles having passed to defendant at the date of invoice, said bottles became a part of the assets of the defendant, and complainant was not entitled to enforce any agreement as to priority of payment therefor.—Illinois Glass Co. v. United States Horse-Radish Co., 166 Mich. 520.

¶ 170. Two brothers, each of whom owed his mother, became partners, and, becoming insolvent to her knowledge, gave her security on the partnership assets just before executing an assignment. It also appeared that she had received on such security before the assignment more than the amount she had loaned the firm. Held, that she was not entitled to a preference as a bona fide secured creditor.—Cron v. Cron's Estate, 56 Mich. 8.

¶ 171. A mortgagee of chattels whose mortgage lay for a time unfiled is entitled to priority over the general creditors only to the amount of the balance due after deducting the claims of those creditors who gave or extended credit after the making of the mortgage and before the filing and thus became prior; but as to any indebtedness not realized from the goods he is entitled to his share in the general distribution of the funds by the assignee.—Kennedy v. Dawson, 96 Mich. 79.

¶ 173. A trustee to whom, prior to making a common-law assignment, a debtor has executed a valid mortgage to secure certain creditors, is entitled to a dividend based on, but not exceeding, the entire sum secured by the mortgage, without reference to the distribution of the dividend among the creditors secured.—High v. Fifth Nat. Bank, 97 Mich. 502; Fifth Nat. Bank v. Clinton Circuit Judge, 100 Mich. 67.

separate mortgages, coincident in point of time, had been given for said claims, each of which was entitled to its proportionate percentage of the fund, which percentage would not be affected by a part-payment of any fund, unless it should be found to amount to a sum exceeding the balance unpaid of such fund, in which case such excess would be subject to application upon part-paid claims.—High v. Fifth Nat. Bank, 97 Mich. 502; Fifth Nat. Bank v. Clinton Circuit Judge, 100 Mich. 67.

¶ 176. Under How. St., § 8747, a creditor of an assignor for creditors who establishes his claim after the payment of a dividend to other creditors is entitled to be placed on a footing of equality with other creditors and to have proportionately as much as they received paid out of the surplus in the assignee's hands before the declaration of any further dividend.—Farwell v. Myers, 66 Mich. 678.

Grant of power to make compromises, see ante ¶ 30.
Rank and priorities of creditors, see ante § 23.
Computing and application of dividends on secured claims, see post § 25.
Marshalling assets, see post § 25.
Claims not under but adverse to assignment, see post § 26.

Filing claims as barring right to sue by action, see post § 37.
Notice to creditors, procedure thereon and proof of claims, contests and trial of contests, see Jud. Act, Chap. XLII, §§ 5-7; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13608-13610.

¶ 178. Where the delay in presenting a claim to the assignee was due entirely to a matter of legal form in describing the nature of the debt, and to the disallowance in the shape first presented, it may be allowed afterwards, although the delay may have left less money in the assignee's hands than will place the claimant on as good a footing as those who have already received dividends.—Farwell v. Myers, 64 Mich. 234.

¶¶ 179, 180. Where, on the hearing of the petition of a secured creditor for the payment by an assignee of his claim, which is shown to be bona fide, no testimony is produced to show that his security constitutes an illegal preference, and the assignee has not placed himself in a position by his pleadings or proofs to attack its validity, payment should be directed.—Dupont v. McCorkle, 76 Mich. 676.

¶ 182. A trustee to whom a corporation has executed valid mortgages to secure certain of its creditors prior to making a common-law assignment is entitled to be paid a dividend based on the whole amount secured by the mortgages proved against the insolvent estate, said dividend being less than said amount; and the question of its distribution among the creditors secured by said mortgages does not concern the receiver or the court.—In re assignment of Scofield Buggy Co., 89 Mich. 15.

¶ 184. Proving a claim in proceedings before an assignee for the benefit of creditors does not estop one from attacking as fraudulent chattel mortgages executed by the assignor prior to the assignment.—Black v. Dawson, 82 Mich. 485.

See generally, Marshalling Assets; Setoff; Subrogation.
Setoffs, see Jud. Act, Chap. XLII, § 8; Comp. L. 1915, § 13611.

¶ 185. An assignee for the benefit of creditors who sells the assigned stock on credit cannot create an offset or payment in reduction of the price by incurring liabilities to his vendee, who knew of the trust, for articles knowingly furnished for his personal use and not on account of the trust fund; and a subsequent trustee, appointed in his place, will not be compelled to allow such debts of his predecessor in reduction of the purchase debt.—Page v. Stephens, 23 Mich. 357.

Preferences and reservations, see ante § 9.
Fraudulent hindrance extraneous to the instrument of assignment, see post § 14.

¶ 90. If an assignment be so drawn that it must, in its execution, tend to hinder or delay creditors unprovided for by it in the collection of their demands, the legal presumption is that it was drawn with that intent.—Pierson v. Manning, 2 Mich. 445.

¶ 91. A general assignment is invalidated by a clause purporting to bind the creditors to agree to it and release their claims in full and discharge the assignor from all liabilities as soon as their just proportion of the proceeds is paid to them.—Hubbard v. McNaughton, 43 Mich. 220.

Who may complain, see post § 34.
Intrinsic frauds apparent by terms of the instrument, see ante §§ 9, 10, 13.
Rule as to fraudulent conveyances generally, see Fraudulent Conveyances.

¶ 93. General assignments are not exempted from the consequences of actual fraud that has any tendency to hinder, delay or defraud creditors.—Farrington v. Sexton, 43 Mich. 454.

¶ 94. The mere fact of the solvency or insolvency of one who has made a general assignment, or his belief in the one or the other, does not necessarily render the assignment void. Without any fraudulent intent in either case it would be valid, and with a fraudulent intent it would be void in both cases alike.—Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241.

¶ 95. The fraudulent character of an assignment does not depend on the assignor's opinion that what he does is not fraud in law.—Hubbard v. McNaughton, 43 Mich. 220.

¶ 96. That it hinders, delays or obstructs creditors does not render an assignment void for fraud. To render it so it must have been made with that intent.—Hollister v. Loud, 2 Mich. 309.

¶ 97. It is no objection to the validity of an assignment that it was made in anticipation by both parties of the immediate issuing of attachments against the property of the assignor.—Hollister v. Loud, 2 Mich. 309.

¶ 98. The subsequent fraudulent acts of the assignor, unknown to the assignee, cannot change the character of the assignee's title, or make that fraudulent which was originally honest.—Baldwin v. Buckland, 11 Mich. 389.

¶ 99. That the assignment was made by an embarrassed debtor to prevent a sacrifice of his property does not necessarily render it void.—Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241.

¶ 100. Where the assignment substantially fulfils its ostensible purpose it may well be supported, though the assignors have failed to treat the assignee with entire fairness and frankness.—Parsell v. Patterson, 47 Mich. 505.

¶ 101. One who attacks a security as a fraudulent preference under the assignment law has the burden of establishing his claim.—Sweetzer v. Higby 63 Mich. 13.

¶ 102. Actual fraud in the making of an assignment is to be established by proof, like any other fact. And it must be clearly and distinctly made out, and cannot be inferred from circumstances of an equivocal tendency.—Hollister v. Loud, 2 Mich. 309.

¶ 103. Where an honest intent can as fairly be inferred from the terms of the assignment as a fraudulent one, the courts are not at liberty to infer the latter.—Nye v. Van Husan, 6 Mich. 329.

§ 16. ——Evidence and fact questions.
Right of party to testify as to his own intent, see Evidence, VI, A.
Admissibility of acts and declarations of party out of court as evincive of fraud, see Evidence, VII, C.

¶ 105. A fraudulent intent in making an assignment may be proved by the acts and declarations of the assignor, his circumstances and situation, the terms and provisions of the instrument, or any and all means of evidence which convince the mind of the existence of the thing sought.—Baldwin v. Buckland, 11 Mich. 389.

¶ 106. The whole conduct of the assignor with reference to the property after the assignment should be allowed to be shown, as bearing upon the question of the intent with which the assignment was made.—Flanigan v. Lampman, 12 Mich. 58.

¶ 107. Where a voluntary assignment, ostensibly for the benefit of creditors, is assailed as fraudulent, the most liberal rules should prevail for the admission of any evidence that may tend to prove the fraud.—Flanigan v. Lampman, 12 Mich. 58.

¶ 108. When a general assignment is assailed as fraudulent in fact, and there is some evidence that a portion of the assets was not delivered over to the assignee, it is competent, in support of the assignment, to show that the assignee was not aware that anything was retained and acted himself in good faith.—Parsell v. Patterson, 47 Mich. 505.

¶ 111. If the assignor's conduct with reference to the property after the assignment tends to show that he still claims and seeks to derive a benefit from the property assigned. to the prejudice of creditors, it will generally tend, in a greater or less degree, to show that the assignment was originally made with a fraudulent purpose.—Flanigan v. Lampman, 12 Mich. 58.

¶ 112. The defendant assailed an assignment as fraudulent; and having shown that one of the assignors bought of the assignee a horse and carriage, constituting a part of the assigned property, ostensibly as agent of his brother-in-law, who was a preferred creditor, and whose claim was alleged to be fictitious, he then asked the witness, "Who had and kept possession of said horse and carriage, after such sale, and up to the time of the present trial?" It was held that the question was proper.—Flanigan v. Lampman, 12 Mich. 58.

¶ 113. Where a general assignment was assailed as fraudulent, it was held that evidence that, at the time it was made, goods were at a railroad depot, directed to the assignees, which they claimed and disposed of afterwards, was competent, as having a bearing on the good faith of the assignment. And evidence that said goods were afterwards sold with the assignee's knowledge and consent is competent as tending to prove fraud.—Smith v. Mitchell, 12 Mich. 180.

¶ 114. The avowal, by a debtor who believes himself solvent, but is pressed by creditors, that he intends to assign for the purpose of getting time, is strong evidence of fraud, but subject to explanation.—Baldwin v. Buckland, 11 Mich. 389; Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241.

¶ 116. Fraud in a general assignment is fairly inferable from the fact that the goods were inventoried at $55,011.68 and were appraised at $27,272.77, while the goods on hand five weeks before inventoried about $95,000; it may also be inferred from a showing that the assets of a certain company belonged to the firm making the assignment, and had been disposed of by collusion.—Farrington v. Sexton, 43 Mich. 454.

¶ 117. Where it appeared that the assignee, a short time before the assignment, as an inducement to a third person to loan the assignor money, stated that the latter was perfectly good and not owing much, it was held that the setting up by him of a large preferred claim under the assignment, as having been owing to him before such statements were made, was strong evidence of fraud in making the assignment.—Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241.

¶ 118. An assignee's sale examined, and held to be with intent to defraud creditors, where it gave evidence of having been accomplished by fiction, transfers at assignee's sale, and finally investing the debtor with possession of a stock and causing him to sell it in a manner which forced creditors to accept too small a dividend or else see themselves shut out by secured creditors.—Morrison v. Mayer, 63 Mich, 238.

¶ 187. Where a dividend has been made on proved claims in an assigned estate a creditor who afterwards establishes a claim should be placed on an equality with the other creditors before they receive a second dividend.—Farwell v. Myers, 66 Mich. 678.

¶ 188. A secured creditor is entitled to dividends at the same rate with unsecured creditors upon the whole of his claim as proved, without deducting the value of his securities or the amount realized therefrom.—Southern Michigan Nat. Bank v. Byles, 67 Mich. 296; Third National Bank v. Haug, 82 Mich. 607.

¶ 189. The assignee of a debtor should distribute the fund realized from the estate without regard to a claim for which his assignor was not personally liable, such as a debt secured by a mortgage on lands which the assignor had purchased subject to the incumbrance.—Booth v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 43 Mich. 299.

¶ 190. Where, after a general assignment for the benefit of its creditors by a Michigan corporation, a nonresident creditor with knowledge of such assignment attaches property of the debtor in another state and afterwards files its claim for allowance under the assignment, the value of said attached property should be ascertained and applied in reduction of the claimant's demand.—J. A. Fay & Co. v. James Jenks & Co., 78 Mich. 304.

¶ 191. Where insolvent partners, after a general assignment, applied their exemptions on a prior chattel mortgage given to a creditor, it was held that the amount of such exemptions was properly allowed to diminish the amount of such mortgage that would be affected by intermediate claims.—Root v. Harl, 62 Mich. 420.

¶ 193. Where both the maker and indorser of a promissory note become insolvent, the holder has a right to compromise with or receive a dividend from the indorser's estate and release it from further liability; and so doing does not prevent his sharing with the other creditors of the maker's estate until the whole claim is satisfied upon the whole mount due upon the note at the time the maker assigned.—Southern Michigan Nat. Bank v. Byles, 67 Mich. 296.

¶ 194. An assignee for creditors who has paid out of the estate a mortgage debt which his assignor was bound to pay cannot enforce the mortgage against a person against whom such assignor could not have enforced it.—Byles v. Kellogg, 67 Mich. 318.

¶ 195. If an attachment is levied upon the property assigned before the acceptance of the trust the property will be subject to the attachment.—Pierson v. Manning, 2 Mich. 445.

¶ 196. Laws 1879, Act. No. 198 (How. St., § 8739), invalidates any attachment levied on assigned property after the assignment is made and before the assignee files his bond. Held, that a creditor levying an attachment within that period cannot be allowed to support it by showing that the assignment was made with intent to defraud creditors.—Coots v. Radford, 47 Mich. 37.

¶ 197. An assignment need not be recorded to defeat an attachment levied within ten days after it was made (How. St., § 8739).—Gott v. Hoschna, 57 Mich. 413.

¶ 198. An attachment levy in the afternoon upon property which had been assigned by the debtor for the benefit of his creditors on the morning of the same day is void.—Angell v. Pickard, 61 Mich. 561.

¶ 199. Where a corporation purchased land subject to the payment of a mortgage, which payment was a condition precedent to the vesting of title under said purchase, after which it conveyed the land by warranty deed subject to said mortgage, which the grantee agreed to pay as a part of the purchase price, and to that end gave a note to the grantor for the amount of the mortgage debt and received an agreement for its payment by the grantor, which note was sold by the president of the grantor and the proceeds used in the business, but the mortgage was not paid, after which the grantor made an assignment for the benefit of its creditors, and on the failure of the assignee to qualify a receiver was appointed, the proper equity court will order the payment of said mortgage by the receiver on the petition of the grantee, of whom such payment has been demanded.—Wisconsin M. & Fire Ins. Co. Bank v. Manistee Salt & Lumber L. Co., 77 Mich. 76.

¶ 200. Where one who has bought goods with intent to defraud vendors of their pay makes a general assignment, a claim lies for the proceeds of such goods as were sold by him before the assignment.—Farwell v. Myers, 64 Mich. 234; Farwell v. Myers, 59 Mich. 179.

§ 27. Death or removal of assignee.

Rights and liabilities between successive assignees, see post § 28.

¶ 201. Laws 1889, Act No. 215, § 1 (How. St., § 8739), which provides that the court, upon the petition of a majority in number and value of the unsecured creditors who have proved their claims, may remove the assignee and appoint one designated by the petitioners, does not apply to an assignee appointed before the act took effect; such an assignee has vested rights and cannot be removed except for cause shown.—Old National Bank v. Joslin, 81 Mich. 413.

¶ 202. Chancery under its general supervisory powers over assignment proceedings may, upon petition, proceed to the removal of the assignee, and may in the same proceedings appoint a receiver.—In re Appeal of Smith, 86 Mich. 149.

¶ 203. If the assignee under a common-law assignment has accepted his trust, any attachment subsequently levied is nugatory; and if, for whatever reason, he fails to act, a receiver may be appointed in his place under How. St., chap. 303. So held where the assignees had ceased to act because they supposed themselves displaced by proceedings taken under the assignment law of 1883, which turned out to be unconstitutional.—Commercial Nat. Bank of Detroit v. Mosser, 57 Mich. 386.

¶ 204. A creditor may proceed in equity, after the time for the assignee to file his bond has expired, to have the trust carried out through a receiver under the supervisory powers of chancery.—Beard v. Clippert, 63 Mich. 716.

¶ 205. A receiver has no better or greater rights in the property than the assignee would have had if he had qualified under the trust to him in the assignment.—Wisconsin M. & Fire Ins. Co. Bank v. Manistee Salt & Lumber L. Co., 77 Mich. 76.

¶ 206. In the absence of evidence to show an actual appropriation of goods, or of money received upon sales, it would be harsh to hold an assignee of an insolvent debtor liable for an assigned stock of goods at its appraised value.—In re Joslin, 101 Mich. 499.

§ 30. Revocation, termination and reassignment.

Reversionary right of assignor, see ante § 21.

Bill by creditors to bring assignment to close, see post § 39.

¶ 207. An assignment which contemplates simply the immediate sale of the assigned property by the assignees, for the payment of debts for which the assignees themselves were liable as indorsers, is superseded by subsequent arrangements embracing a continuation of the business of the assignors by the use of assigned property, and of advances to be made by the assignees, the arrangements involving both parties to the assignment as well as a third person. Such new arrangements are repugnant to the original assignment and subvert whatever trust was created thereby.—Craig v. Bradley, 26 Mich. 358.

¶ 208. An assignee under an assignment for the benefit of creditors may, after all debts have been paid whereby the trust is terminated by arrangement with the assignor continue the business under his own name, they being then the only parties interested.—Quimby v. Uhl, 130 Mich. 198.

¶ 209. Where a assignee under an assignment for the benefit of creditors, with the unanimous consent of the assignor and the creditors, continues to carry on business with the property assigned, the assignor and the creditors are estopped to deny his authority to do so.—Quimby v. Uhl, 130 Mich. 198.

Provisions of statute, see Jud. Act, Chap. XLII, § 12; Comp. L. 1915, § 13615.

¶ 210. The fact that an assignee has been loose in some of his methods, and negligent in not preserving the original inventory of the assigned property, which was taken on loose sheets of paper, and certain other books and documents, is not a sufficient reason for depriving him of all compensation for his services.—In re Joslin, 101 Mich. 499.

¶ 211. The assignees of a failing debtor under an assignment for the benefit of creditors must use reasonable diligence in closing up the trust, and are liable for any damage resulting from culpable negligence. Where most of the property was sold and most of the assets realized in somewhat over a year, and nearly all in a little over two years, it was held there was no delay. For mere delay in payment, interest is, in law, sufficient compensation.—Clark v. Craig, 29 Mich. 398.

¶ 213. Where certain lands, in which an undivided half interest belonged to the trust under the assignment, were put up at auction after full notice, and the assignor, in order to have the whole sold, purchased upon his individual note the other undivided half, and the lands, after being bid off at the auction sale, were conveyed to unpreferred creditors in consideration of their releasing their debts, the assignees charging themselves with the half of the purchase bid, it was held that the action of the assignees would not be held culpable in the absence of any showing of the real value of the lands, or of improper management, upon mere inferences to be drawn from a comparison of the amount of the auction price with that of the assignor's note, given for the other half, or with that of the debts released; the assignees could only be justly charged with the real value of the lands, and this will not be presumed, without evidence, to have exceeded the auction biddings.—Clark v. Craig, 29 Mich. 398.

¶ 215. An assignment was made for the benefit of creditors and under agreement the trustee continued the business. After the debts were all paid the business was still continued in the name of the assignee and under his direction, and upon the death of the assignor, it was still so continued by consent of the heirs who received the profits and assisted in the management. For some years it was profitable but later was continued at a loss, though the aggregate profits were greater than the losses, and the heirs of the assignor brought action for a receiver and for an accounting. Held, that since the heirs had acquiesced in the continuation of the business and had received and retained the profits, they could not hold the trustee for the losses.—Quimby v. Uhl, 130 Mich. 198.

Bill under supervisory jurisdiction of chancery as proper proceeding rather than bill to annul, see post § 38.

¶ 216. An assignee who, because of his failure to file bond within ten days, has taken no title, cannot in a court of law attack as fraudulent against creditors, when they do not complain, the validity of a chattel mortgage given by his assignor previous to the assignment.—Abbott v. Chaffee, 96 Mich. 294.

¶ 217. An assignee's failure to file the statutory bond required by How. St., § 8739, does not of itself entitle a mortgagee, whose mortgage is fraudulent as to creditors, to recover in trover against the assignee for the value of the mortgage interest; defendant can defeat the action by showing title in a stranger.—Abbott v. Chaffee, 83 Mich. 256.

¶ 218. Failure to file bond does not prejudice bona fide purchasers for value from assignee, where assignor and creditors—for

¶ 219. Where an assignment is fraudulent as to any of its provisions it is void in toto as against creditors who are entitled by law to take advantage of the fraud.—Pierson v. Manning, 2 Mich. 445.

¶ 220. An assignment void in part is altogether void. It cannot be sustained in part because of one good trust in it.—Kirby v. Ingersoll, H. 172.

Estoppel of participating officer to attack corporation assignments, see Corporations, XXIII.

¶ 221. The legality of a common-law assignment with preferences can be attacked only by the assignor's creditors; debtors, therefore, who have been garnished cannot plead its illegality in abatement of an action brought against them by the assignee for the amount of their debt.—Butler v. Wendell, 57 Mich. 62.

¶ 223. When an assignment was supposed by the parties to be void and so treated by them, and one of the assignors, with the knowledge of the assignee, entered into a contract with the others to purchase a part of the joint property and pay the joint debts, and also make certain payments to the other assignors, and he went on acting under this contract, making payments and improving the property, held, that other parties who were not creditors, and who with knowledge of this contract bought the land of the assignee and the other assignors, were bound by the contract, and might be compelled to deed over in specific performance of it.—Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 12.

¶ 224. Creditors may doubtless waive the avoidance which a clause authorizing the assignee to sell on credit works in the assignment.—Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 12.

¶ 225. A fraudulent assignment for the benefit of creditors is not so absolutely void that a creditor's right to complain of it may not be lost by waiver or acquiescence; he cannot attack it until he has in some way acquired a legal standing, and he may let it alone if he chooses to do so.—Blake v. Hubbard, 45 Mich. 1.

¶ 226. A creditor's right to complain of an assignment for the benefit of creditors, in the execution of which there may have been fraud and which may have been fraudulent as to creditors, may be lost by waiver or acquiescence.—In re Smith's Appeal, 86 Mich. 149.

¶ 229. Where one partner, without the consent of the other, who was on the spot and might have been consulted, made an assignment of the partnership effects to one of the creditors for the benefit of the creditors generally, preferring the debt of the assignee, it was held that the assignment was void in toto, and could not be sustained to the extent of securing the debt of the assignee.—Kirby v. Ingersoll, H. 172; Kirby v. Ingersoll, 1 D. 477.

L. 1879, by accepting the assignment and taking possession makes himself a trustee; and he may defend the trust by the institution of any necessary suit, even though his trusteeship is not yet perfected by filing a bond.—Sibley v. Prescott Ins. Co., 57 Mich. 14.

¶ 231. The assignment law regards the assignee as a trustee or representative of the creditors for all purposes auxiliary to the assignment, and if creditors could sue also, it would create great confusion.—Root v. Potter, 59 Mich. 498.

¶ 232. Under the assignment law the assignee, when applied to by creditors interested, represents all interests for the purposes of contest, and is the proper person to contest claims; and a receiver, when appointed, stands in his place.—E. T. Barnum Wire & Iron Works v. Speed, 59 Mich. 272.

¶ 233. An assignee may be sued at law by a third person for property held under the assignment and alleged to have been wrongfully taken or converted notwithstanding the supervisory jurisdiction given to chancery over assignments for creditors by How. St., § 8749.—Edwards v. Symons, 65 Mich. 348.

¶ 234. An assignee for the benefit of creditors, may, after taking possession of and asserting title to the assigned property, be made a defendant in replevin brought for it by third persons notwithstanding that he has turned over the property to the holder of a chattel mortgage on the same.—Beach v. Davis, 78 Mich. 602.

¶ 235. Under How. St., § 8741, which provides that every assignment for the benefit of creditors shall confer upon the assignee the right to recover all property, or rights or equities therein which might be reached by creditors, a creditor's special right or lien that was not a lien when the assignment was made must be enforced through the assignee.—Farrell Foundry & Machine Co. v. Preston Nat Bank, 93 Mich. 582.

¶ 236. A debtor, who had made an assignment, afterward resumed control of the goods, and the assignee brought replevin for them. Held, that losses by the assignee's negligence could not be charged on him in this or in any suit at law, an accounting in respect to a trust being the correct procedure.—Rodman v. Nathan, 45 Mich. 607.

¶ 237. An assignee has no such title or right as will sustain trover against the United States marshal for goods taken by him from the possession of mortgagees holding adversely to the assignee, whatever may be the right thereto as between the marshal and the mortgages.—Axford v. Mathews, 43 Mich. 327.

¶ 237a. An assignee for the benefit of creditors can maintain trover against a sheriff for the full value of property assigned subject to valid mortgages and seized by defendant on attachments issued after the assignment was made and before actual filing of the assignee's bond.—Coots v. Radford, 47 Mich. 37.

¶ 238. Where any claim is disputed by assignee, receiver or creditor of an assigned estate, a trial is to be had on the law side of the same court, in a contest entered as a cause between creditor and assignor, and on a verdict a judgment is to be entered but no execution can be issued on it. Provision is also made concerning the declaration of dividends and other matters, and it is finally provided that the circuit court in chancery shall have supervisory power over all matters, questions and disputes arising under assignments, and may, upon the application of the assignee, or any person interested, make all necessary and proper orders for management, disposition and distribution, and for the recovery of property claimed by third persons, and may from time to time require new bonds or securities (How. St., § 8749).—Scott v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 58 Mich. 311.

¶ 240. An assignment for the benefit of creditors does not bar a creditor's right to sue or to proceed to judgment whether suit is commenced before or after the assignment is made.—Detroit Stove Works v. Osmun, 74 Mich. 7.

¶ 242. An assignment for creditors does not abate an action of replevin previously brought by the assignor's vendee against an officer who had attached the goods in favor of creditors of the assignor and vendor.—Bedford v. Penney, 65 Mich. 667.

¶ 244. The term "proceedings," as used in the statute, relating to assignments for creditors (How. St., § 8749), includes all matters connected with or attending the exercise of the power conferred upon the circuit courts in chancery which are necessary to enable the court to exercise the superintending control and authority conferred by the statute.—Kittridge v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 80 Mich. 200.

¶ 245. The authority of the court in chancery to exercise its supervisory powers is called into being whenever application is made by any one authorized by the act relating to assignments for creditors (How. St., § 8749), to invoke such powers.—Kittridge v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 80 Mich. 200.

¶ 246. Common-law assignments for the benefit of creditors are by statute placed fully under the control and supervision of the courts of chancery.—Kittridge v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 80 Mich. 200.

¶ 247. Under How. St., § 8749, the circuit court of the proper county is the court which has jurisdiction of matters arising out of or under an assignment for creditors, and the validity of such an assignment cannot be attacked elsewhere.—Smith v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 84 Mich. 564.

¶ 248. An assignment for the benefit of creditors under How. St., chap. 303, § 1, providing "that all assignments commonly called common law assignments for the benefit of creditors shall be void, unless the same shall be without preferences as between such creditors," when fully perfected, cannot be set aside at the suit of an attachment or execution creditor where he himself is seeking a preference, by proof of an unlawful preference, or of "any fraud in the matter of such assignment," but relief against such preference or fraud is to be sought in chancery under How. St., §§ 8744, 8749, for the benefit of all the creditors.—Wolf v. Slosson, 83 Mich. 543, explaining Kendall v. Bishop, 76 Mich. 634, which is held not to have overruled Coots v. Radford, 47 Mich. 37.

¶ 250. How. St., § 8749 (2nd Ed., § 14175), does not vest in chancery the right of determining the claims of third persons to property in the assignee's hands, and held by him under the assignment, nor does it prevent a third person from suing at law to recover property so held; but chancery may dispose of such claims if the parties are willing and voluntarily submit to the jurisdiction; and its decision will be binding.—Edwards v. Symons, 65 Mich. 348; Sawyer v. McAdie, 70 Mich. 386; Gordon v. Sherman, 178 Mich. 629.

¶ 252. A mere interloper claiming nothing under the assignment and related to the property only in that it is a trespasser liable to one or the other party according to the outcome of a chancery bill cannot by cross-bill seek to be protected and have its liability adjudicated.—Gordon v. Sherman, 178 Mich. 629.

Office and propriety of cross-bills generally, see Equity, VII, D.
Enforcing administration within reasonable time, see ante ¶ 27.
For removal of assignee and appointment of successor, see ante §§ 27, 28.

¶ 254. General creditors of an assignor may file a bill to reach assets fraudulently conveyed, under How. St., §§ 8744, 8749, which allow "any person interested" to enforce the trust created by an assignment or to sue to recover property or prevent any fraudulent transfer; where the assignee, having refused to sue, is joined as a defendant with the transferee.—Burnham v. Dillon, 100 Mich. 352.

¶ 256. A creditor of the assignors, after the statutory time to file the bond has expired, may proceed upon the equity side of the court to have the trust carried out through the intervention of a receiver and the supervisory powers of chancery; or, if no other creditor invokes the aid of chancery, he may proceed to enforce his claim against the debtor's property by attachment or execution.—Beard v. Clippert, 63 Mich. 716.

¶ 257. If the assignee refuses to move to attack fraudulent transfers or mortgages, or his interest be such that the court is satisfied he ought not to direct or control the proceedings, leave should be granted to the creditor to file his bill.—Sweetzer v. Higby, 63 Mich. 13.

¶ 258. The fraud referred to in How. St., § 8744, is one "in the matter of such assignment" with which the assignee is connected as well as the assignor. The section was intended to give the creditors relief against the assignee's incompetency, neglect or fraud, and not to cover cases where he could and would act.—Sweetzer v. Higby, 63 Mich. 13.

¶ 259. Under How. St., § 8744, a creditor may file a bill to set aside a chattel mortgage alleged to have been given in anticipation of an assignment by the mortgagor, and to secure to the mortgagee a preference, to which transaction the assignee is alleged to have been a party; and it is not necessary that the complainant should have obtained an order from the court requiring the assignee to institute proceedings.—Burnham v. Haskins, 72 Mich. 235.

¶ 261. Defrauded creditors are entitled to have fraudulent mortgages executed a few days before the assignment set aside, to have an accounting by the assignor for the property received by him, and to have a receiver appointed to enforce the trust on the assignee's refusal to do so, and may maintain for that purpose a bill to enforce the assignee's trust.—Funke v. Cone, 65 Mich. 581.

¶ 263. Where an assignee for the benefit of creditors holds the assigned property during the period allowed him to file his bond, and then, instead of filing it, relinquishes his trust and at once attaches the goods as a creditor, other creditors over whom he has thereby obtained an undue advantage should proceed, under L. 1879, Act No. 198 (How. St., § 8744), to compel a proper execution of the

¶ 264. A single creditor may file a bill to enforce the prompt execution of an assignee's trust; and the other creditors need not be made parties.—Wilhelm v. Byles, 60 Mich. 561.

¶ 265. The trust being under a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, some of the creditors filed a bill to have the assignment set aside as fraudulent, or, in case it was sustained, then to have the trust enforced. The bill averred that certain creditors had been paid their demands in full. Held, not necessary to make such persons parties to the bill.—Suydam v. Dequindre, H. 347.

¶ 267. Under How. St., § 8749, proceedings in the circuit court in chancery against the assignee to recover a dividend may be commenced by petition; and jurisdiction of the assignee may be acquired by an order requiring him to appear and answer. It is not necessary to serve the creditors with notice of the petition or with a copy of the order, since the assignee represents them.—Southern Michigan Nat. Bank v. Byles, 67 Mich. 296.

¶ 268. An assignee for creditors failed, after the creditors' written request, to contest mortgages made by the assignor and claimed to be fraudulent, whereupon the creditors filed a bill for the purpose. The issue upon the validity of the mortgages was fairly made in the pleadings and upon the testimony, and no question as to the right to litigate such validity was made in the court below. Held, that any necessity for an application for leave to file the bill must be deemed waived.—Funke v. Cone, 65 Mich. 581.

¶ 269. An objection that general creditors of an insolvent debtor, who has made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, are not authorized, on the refusal of the assignee, to file a bill to set aside an alleged fraudulent chattel mortgage executed by the assignor prior to and in anticipation of the assignment, will not be regarded as fatal when raised for the first time after all of the testimony has been taken, and with all of the parties before the court who could be brought in had the bill been filed by the assignee.—Burnham v. Dillon, 100 Mich. 352.

¶ 270. The right of creditors, on the refusal of the assignee, to sue to set aside a chattel mortgage by bill in equity cannot be defeated by the contention that the fact that the assignee of the mortgage was in possession of the mortgaged property under his security, and hence the general assignee might have maintained an action at law.—Burnham v. Dillon, 100 Mich. 352.

Rights of assignee, see ante §§ 20, 21.

¶ 272. The assignee or receiver is the proper person to attack as fraudulent against the assignment conveyances, mortgages or payments by the assignor to third persons; and the creditors must move through the assignee or ask chancery to compel him to move or allow them to do so.—Root v. Potter, 59 Mich. 498; Angell v. Pickard, 61 Mich. 561; Scott v. Chambers, 62 Mich. 532; Sweetzer v. Higby, 63 Mich. 13.

¶ 274. The assignee of an insolvent debtor may seek in chancery the dissolution of an attachment upon the assigned property; he cannot intervene in the law action.—Turner v. Hatch, 100 Mich. 65; Emerson v. Detroit Steel & Spring Co., 100 Mich. 127.

¶ 276. An assignee can bring trover against the sheriff or other stranger for the full value of assigned property seized and sold by him on writ of attachment issued after the assignment was made and before the assignee's bond was filed.—Coots v. Radford, 47 Mich. 37.

Pleading assignments generally, see Assignments, §§ 31, 32.

¶ 277. The declaration by an assignee for the benefit of creditors to recover for goods sold and delivered by the assignor should aver defendant's indebtedness to the assignor for goods and assignment of the claim by the assignor to plaintiff.—Powell v. Williams, 99 Mich. 30.

ASSISTANCE, WRIT OF.

TREATS of the chancery writ to assist the sheriff or executive officer of the court to put the purchaser in possession of land sold under decree. The writ of possession used in a law court in ejectment is treated in Ejectment, V; and the writ of restitution used in summary proceedings is treated in Forcible Entry.

Analysis.

§ 1. Nature and office of writ.
§ 3. For and against whom issuable.
§ 4. ——Purchasers and others in privity with defendant.
§ 5. ——Hostile claimants.

¶ 1. A writ of assistance is the regular process for carrying out a decree of possession, and it lies on foreclosure sales.—Ramsdell v. Maxwell, 32 Mich. 285.

¶ 2. A writ of assistance will be granted to put the purchaser of mortgaged premises in possession if the defendant, on being shown the master's deed and a certified copy of the order confirming the sale under the seal of the court, refuses to deliver possession.—Hart v. Linsday, W. 144.

¶ 3. The object of a writ of assistance is to compel parties who are bound by a decree in foreclosure to give up the possession which the decree and sale under it estop them from further asserting. It cannot be proper where there is any real controversy as to the right of possession not precluded by the decree and sale.—Ramsdell v. Maxwell, 32 Mich. 285.

¶ 4. A writ of assistance is proper only where a party concluded by the proceedings refuses to give up possession on request; and it should not be granted without proper evidence of such refusal after the right of possession is established.—Howard v. Bond, 42 Mich. 131.

Necessity of service of deed, see ante § 1.

Necessity of notice and demand on person not party, see also post ¶ 8.

Appealability of order on application for writ, see Appeal and Error, § 48, ¶ 219.

Irreviewableness on appeal from decree, see Appeal and Error, § 297.

Conclusiveness of order on application for writ as an adjudication of fact, see Former Adjudication.

¶ 5. A decree was made in the Supreme Court requiring the complainant to deliver up possession of certain premises, and the cause was remitted to the court below for the purposes of an accounting. Held, that any application for a writ of assistance under the decree should be made in the court below.—Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 195.

¶ 6. Where exceptions to the report of sale in a mortgage foreclosure case were overruled, and the sale was confirmed, and an order made on the same day for a writ of assistance, based upon the petition of the complainant, showing the exhibition on that day to the mortgagor of the commissioner's deed and of a certified copy of the order confirming the sale, it will not be assumed, from the fact that the mortgagor resided 20 miles from the place where the court was held, that the complainant could not get a copy of the order of confirmation on the morning of the day it was made, make the service, and return in time to get the writ of assistance on the same day, or that it was the nisi order of confirmation, instead of the court order, which was served, in the absence of proof of that fact.—Tucker v. Stone, 99 Mich. 419.

[Note. The writ is by statute allowable in tax cases to put the purchaser in possession and the issuance of it in such cases is regulated by statute. For that reason all such cases will be treated in Taxes, XII, C.]

Writ as process to put public or condemnor in possession in condemnation proceedings, see Eminent Domain, IX; Highways, II, B.

¶ 7. A defendant in a foreclosure proceeding whose interest in the property has been cut off by the sheriff's deed, has no standing to resist an order granting a writ of assistance to obtain possession of the property.—Farr v. Lachman, 130 Mich. 40.

¶ 8. A writ of assistance will not be granted against a person not a party to the suit, who has come into possession of mortgaged premises since the suit was commenced, unless notice of the motion, with a copy of the affidavit on which it is founded, is served upon him.—Benhard v. Darrow, W. 519.

¶ 10. Where, in a foreclosure suit, a subsequent mortgagee was not made a party, and no lis pendens was filed, and after decree, and just before sale under it, such subsequent mortgagee was, by some arrangement with the owner of the equity of redemption (who was a party), placed in possession of the mortgaged premises, having, at the time, notice of the foreclosure proceedings, held, that any right to possession thus acquired ceased on the sale, and that the purchaser at such sale was entitled to a writ of assistance to put him in possession.—Baker v. Pierson, 5 Mich. 456.

¶ 11. Where in a foreclosure suit a defendant, in addition to claiming rights in the mortgaged premises as a subsequent purchaser at an execution sale, claims under tax titles, which cannot be litigated in said suit, no writ of assistance will be awarded to put him out of possession of the mortgaged premises.—Hayward v. Kinney, 84 Mich. 591.

¶ 12. A mere oral statement by one not a party of record, made in the course of proceedings for a writ of assistance in behalf of a purchaser at foreclosure sale, that he claims possession by virtue of a sale for taxes, is too informal to warrant consideration.—Aldrich v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 111 Mich. 525.

Doubt or controversy as to right, see also ante § 1.

That person in possession is not bound by decree, see also ante §§ 3-5.

¶ 14. Where proceedings by writ of assistance were taken on the foot of a foreclosure decree against a wife, leave being given to discontinue as against the husband, the objection that the papers were wrongly entitled in the names of both defendants was held a mere technicality, especially where it was not clear from the record whether the order of discontinuance had been entered.—Howe v. Lemon, 47 Mich. 544.

¶ 15. An assignee of a decree of foreclosure who, in a proceeding brought by him to set aside the sale made thereunder without notice of the assignment, waives all objections to the sale and prays for an order granting six months' time for redemption, which is denied, will not thereafter be heard to resist a writ of assistance based on the sale on the ground that the decree had been assigned and the sale had without a petition being made and allowed as required by 1897 Chancery Rule 34.—Farr v. Lachman, 130 Mich. 40.

¶ 16. Matters set up in defence to a motion for the writ cannot be received to affect the decree of assistance which is the basis of the application.—Howe v. Lemon, 47 Mich. 544.

¶ 5. Under Comp. L. 1897, c. 207, relating to summer resort associations, power is given to make reasonable by-laws for the management, control and disposition of the property, affairs and concerns of corporations organized thereunder.—Highland Park Ass'n v. Boseker, 169 Mich. 4.

¶ 6. The validity of by-laws and regulations of a resort association organized under Comp. L. 1897, c. 207, relating to the management of the property, affairs and business of said association, depends upon the fact of their being reasonable, and their reasonableness depends upon particular circumstances or matters in pais.—Highland Park Ass'n v. ¶ 9. No corporation can allow its members to be disfranchised for any cause or in any manner which it could not have adopted itself.—Allnutt v. Subsidiary High Court of A. O. F., 62 Mich. 110.

¶ 10. Articles of association which provide for expelling members "guilty of improper conduct calculated to bring this society into disrepute" doubtless cover cases of misconduct injurious to the society and damaging to the reputation of the person charged, e. g., where a member received and kept the initiation fee of an applicant for admission to the society and took the roll of the society without leave and refused to return it.—Burton v. St. George's Soc. of Detroit, 28 Mich. 261.

¶ 11. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 3429, How. St., § 4861, in the general corporation law, limiting penalties for violations of by-laws, expulsion for any mere infraction of a by-law would not be allowable.—People ex rel. Pulford v. Detroit Fire Department, 31 Mich. 458.

¶ 12. Where the constitution of a corporation was so amended as to introduce a new provision that any member who should fail, by a given date, to pay the whole of his dues then in arrears, or any indebtedness to the corporation, should thereafter cease absolutely to be a member without any further action of the corporation or its trustees, and that the secretary should drop the names of all such delinquent persons from the roll, such amendment was held void.—People ex rel. Pulford v. Detroit Fire Department, 31 Mich. 458.

¶ 13. Where, by the by-laws of a corporation, personal notice must be given by a specified date, annually, to members defaulting in the payment of their dues, and there can be no forfeiture of their membership without notice, it is incompetent to so amend the constitution of the corporation as to leave the declaration of the forfeiture to the secretary, acting as witness and judge on his own assertion, and without either hearing or appeal, and so that his action in a manner depends on his own performance of a prior duty.—People ex rel. ment as well as a third person. Such new arrangements are repugnant to the original assignment and subvert whatever trust was created thereby.—Craig v. Bradley, 26 Mich. 353.

¶ 208. An assignee under an assignment for the benefit of creditors may, after all debts have been paid whereby the trust is terminated by arrangement with the assignor continue the business under his own name, they being then the only parties interested.—Quimby v. Uhl, 130 Mich. 198.

¶ 209. Where a assignee under an assignment for the benefit of creditors, with the unanimous consent of the assignor and the creditors, continues to carry on business with the property assigned, the assignor and the creditors are estopped to deny his authority to do so.—Quimby v. Uhl, 130 Mich. 198.

Provisions of statute, see Jud. Act, Chap. XLII, § 12; Comp. L. 1915, § 13615.

¶ 210. The fact that an assignee has been loose in some of his methods, and negligent in not preserving the original inventory of the assigned property, which was taken on loose sheets of paper, and certain other books and documents, is not a sufficient reason for depriving him of all compensation for his services.—In re Joslin, 101 Mich. 499.

¶ 211. The assignees of a failing debtor under an assignment for the benefit of creditors must use reasonable diligence in closing up the trust, and are liable for any damage resulting from culpable negligence. Where most of the property was sold and most of the assets realized in somewhat over a year, and nearly all in a little over two years, it was held there was no delay. For mere delay in payment, interest is, in law, sufficient compensation.—Clark v. Craig, 29 Mich. 398.

¶ 213. Where certain lands, in which an undivided half interest belonged to the trust under the assignment, were put up at auction after full notice, and the assignor, in order to have the whole sold, purchased upon his individual note the other undivided half, and the lands, after being bid off at the auction sale, were conveyed to unpreferred creditors in consideration of their releasing their debts, the assignees charging themselves with the half of the purchase bid, it was held that the action of the assignees would not be held culpable in the absence of any showing of the real value of the lands, or of improper management, upon mere inferences to be drawn from a comparison of the amount of the auction price with that of the assignor's note, given for the other half, or with that of the debts released; the assignees could only be justly charged with the real value of the lands, and this will not be presumed, without evidence, to have exceeded the auction biddings.—Clark v. Craig, 29 Mich. 398.

¶ 215. An assignment was made for the benefit of creditors and under agreement the trustee continued the business. After the debts were all paid the business was still continued in the name of the assignee and under his direction, and upon the death of the assignor, it was still so continued by consent of the heirs who received the profits and assisted in the management. For some years it was profitable but later was continued at a loss, though the aggregate profits were greater than the losses, and the heirs of the assignor brought action for a receiver and for an accounting. Held, that since the heirs had acquiesced in the continuation of the business and had received and retained the profits, they could not hold the trustee for the losses.—Quimby v. Uhl, 130 Mich. 198.

Bill under supervisory jurisdiction of chancery as proper proceeding rather than bill to annul, see post § 38.

¶ 216. An assignee who, because of his failure to file bond within ten days, has taken no title, cannot in a court of law attack as fraudulent against creditors, when they do not complain, the validity of a chattel mortgage given by his assignor previous to the assignment.—Abbott v. Chaffee, 96 Mich. 294.

¶ 217. An assignee's failure to file the statutory bond required by How. St., § 8739, does not of itself entitle a mortgagee, whose mortgage is fraudulent as to creditors, to recover in trover against the assignee for the value of the mortgage interest; defendant can defeat the action by showing title in a stranger.—Abbott v. Chaffee, 83 Mich. 256.

¶ 219. Where an assignment is fraudulent as to any of its provisions it is void in toto as against creditors who are entitled by law to take advantage of the fraud.—Pierson v. Manning, 2 Mich. 445.

¶ 220. An assignment void in part is altogether void. It cannot be sustained in part because of one good trust in it.—Kirby v. Ingersoll, H. 172.

Estoppel of participating officer to attack corporation assignments, see Corporations, XXIII.

¶ 221. The legality of a common-law assignment with preferences can be attacked only by the assignor's creditors; debtors, therefore, who have been garnished cannot plead its illegality in abatement of an action brought against them by the assignee for the amount of their debt.—Butler v. Wendell, 57 Mich. 62.

¶ 223. When an assignment was supposed by the parties to be void and so treated by them, and one of the assignors, with the knowledge of the assignee, entered into a contract with the others to purchase a part of the joint property and pay the joint debts, and also make certain payments to the other assignors, and he went on acting under this contract, making payments and improving the property, held, that other parties who were not creditors, and who with knowledge of this contract bought the land of the assignee and the other assignors, were bound by the contract, and might be compelled to deed over in specific performance of it.—Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 12.

¶ 224. Creditors may doubtless waive the avoidance which a clause authorizing the assignee to sell on credit works in the assignment.—Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 12.

¶ 225. A fraudulent assignment for the benefit of creditors is not so absolutely void that a creditor's right to complain of it may not be lost by waiver or acquiescence; he cannot attack it until he has in some way acquired a legal standing, and he may let it alone if he chooses to do so.—Blake v. Hubbard, 45 Mich. 1.

¶ 226. A creditor's right to complain of an assignment for the benefit of creditors, in the execution of which there may have been fraud and which may have been fraudulent as to creditors, may be lost by waiver or acquiescence.—In re Smith's Appeal, 86 Mich. 149.

¶ 230. The assignee of an insolvent debtor under Pub. L. 1879, by accepting the assignment and taking possession makes himself a trustee; and he may defend the trust by the institution of any necessary suit, even though his trusteeship is not yet perfected by filing a bond.—Sibley v. Prescott Ins. Co., 57 Mich. 14.

¶ 231. The assignment law regards the assignee as a trustee or representative of the creditors for all purposes auxiliary to the assignment, and if creditors could sue also, it would create great confusion.—Root v. Potter, 59 Mich. 498,

¶ 232. Under the assignment law the assignee, when applied to by creditors interested, represents all interests for the purposes of contest, and is the proper person to contest claims; and a receiver, when appointed, stands in his place.—E. T. Barnum Wire & Iron Works v. Speed, 59 Mich. 272.

¶ 233. An assignee may be sued at law by a third person for property held under the assignment and alleged to have been wrongfully taken or converted notwithstanding the supervisory jurisdiction given to chancery over assignments for creditors by How. St., § 8749.—Edwards v. Symons, 65 Mich. 348.

¶ 234. An assignee for the benefit of creditors, may, after taking possession of and asserting title to the assigned property, be made a defendant in replevin brought for it by third persons notwithstanding that he has turned over the property to the holder of a chattel mortgage on the same.—Beach v. Davis, 78 Mich. 602,

¶ 235. Under How. St., § 8741, which provides that every assignment for the benefit of creditors shall confer upon the assignee the right to recover all property, or rights or equities therein which might be reached by creditors, a creditor's special right or equity that was not a lien when the assignment was made must be enforced through the assignee.—Farrell Foundry & Machine Co. v. Preston Nat Bank, 93 Mich. 582.

¶ 236. A debtor, who had made an assignment, afterward resumed control of the goods, and the assignee brought replevin for them. Held, that losses by the assignee's negligence could not be charged on him in this or in any suit at law, an accounting in respect to a trust being the correct procedure.—Rodman v. Nathan, 45 Mich. 607.

¶ 237. An assignee has no such title or right as will sustain trover against the United States marshal for goods taken by him from the possession of mortgagees holding adversely to the assignee, whatever may be the right thereto as between the marshal and the mortgages.—Axford v. Mathews, 43 Mich. 327.

¶ 237a. An assignee for the benefit of creditors can maintain trover against a sheriff for the full value of property assigned subject to valid mortgages and seized by defendant on attachments issued after the assignment was made and before actual filing of the assignee's bond.—Coots v. Radford, 47 Mich. 37.

¶ 238. Where any claim is disputed by assignee, receiver or creditor of an assigned estate, a trial is to be had on the law side of the same court, in a contest entered as a cause between creditor and assignor, and on a verdict a judgment is to be entered but no execution can be issued on it. Provision is also made concerning the declaration of dividends and other matters, and it is finally provided that the circuit court in chancery shall have supervisory power over all matters, questions and disputes arising under assignments, and may, upon the application of the assignee, or any person interested, make all necessary and proper orders for management, disposition and distribution, and for the recovery of property claimed by third persons, and may from time to time require new bonds or securities (How. St., § 8749).—Scott v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 58 Mich. 311.

Assignment as invalidating levies, see ante § 26.
Discharge of arrested debtor on making assignment for creditors, see Civil Arrest and Bail.

¶ 240. An assignment for the benefit of creditors does not bar a creditor's right to sue or to proceed to judgment whether suit is commenced before or after the assignment is made.—Detroit Stove Works v. Osmun, 74 Mich. 7.

¶ 242. An assignment for creditors does not abate an action of replevin previously brought by the assignor's vendee against an officer who had attached the goods in favor of creditors of the assignor and vendor.—Bedford v. Penney, 65 Mich. 667.

Concurrent remedy at law, see also ante § 36, ¶ 233.

Conclusiveness of decree on one who submits issues beyond scope of suit, see Former Adjudication, II, A.

See generally Jud. Act, Chap. XLII, § 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 13612.

¶ 244. The term "proceedings," as used in the statute, relating to assignments for creditors (How. St., § 8749), includes all matters connected with or attending the exercise of the power conferred upon the circuit courts in chancery which are necessary to enable the court to exercise the superintending control and authority conferred by the statute.—Kittridge v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 80 Mich. 200.

¶ 245. The authority of the court in chancery to exercise its supervisory powers is called into being whenever application is made by any one authorized by the act relating to assignments for creditors (How. St., § 8749), to invoke such powers.—Kittridge v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 80 Mich. 200.

¶ 246. Common-law assignments for the benefit of creditors are by statute placed fully under the control and supervision of the courts of chancery.—Kittridge v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 80 Mich. 200.

¶ 247. Under How. St., § 8749, the circuit court of the proper county is the court which has jurisdiction of matters arising out of or under an assignment for creditors, and the validity of such an assignment cannot be attacked elsewhere.—Smith v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 84 Mich. 564.

¶ 248. An assignment for the benefit of creditors under How. St., chap. 303, § 1, providing "that all assignments commonly called common law assignments for the benefit of creditors shall be void, unless the same shall be without preferences as between such creditors," when fully perfected, cannot be set aside at the suit of an attachment or execution creditor where he himself is seeking a preference, by proof of an unlawful preference, or of "any fraud in the matter of such assignment," but relief against such preference or fraud is to be sought in chancery under How. St., §§ 8744, 8749, for the benefit of all the creditors.—Wolf v. Slosson, 83 Mich. 543, explaining Kendall v. Bishop, 76 Mich. 634, which is held not to have overruled Coots v. Radford, 47 Mich. 37.

¶ 250. How. St., § 8749 (2nd Ed., § 14175), does not vest in chancery the right of determining the claims of third persons to property in the assignee's hands, and held by him under the assignment, nor does it prevent a third person from suing at law to recover property so held; but chancery may dispose of such claims if the parties are willing and voluntarily submit to the jurisdiction; and its decision will be binding.—Edwards v. Symons, 65 Mich. 348; Sawyer v. McAdie, 70 Mich. 386; Gordon v. Sherman, 178 Mich. 629.

property only in that it is a trespasser liable to one or the other party according to the outcome of a chancery bill cannot by cross-bill seek to be protected and have its liability adjudicated.—Gordon v. Sherman, 178 Mich. 629.

Office and propriety of cross-bills generally, see Equity, VII, D.

¶ 254. General creditors of an assignor may file a bill to reach assets fraudulently conveyed, under How. St., §§ 8744, 8749, which allow "any person interested" to enforce the trust created by an assignment or to sue to recover property or prevent any fraudulent transfer; where the assignee, having refused to sue, is joined as a defendant with the transferee.—Burnham v. Dillon, 100 Mich. 352.

¶ 256. A creditor of the assignors, after the statutory time to file the bond has expired, may proceed upon the equity side of the court to have the trust carried out through the intervention of a receiver and the supervisory powers of chancery; or, if no other creditor invokes the aid of chancery, he may proceed to enforce his claim against the debtor's property by attachment or execution.—Beard v. Clippert, 63 Mich. 716.

¶ 257. If the assignee refuses to move to attack fraudulent transfers or mortgages, or his interest be such that the court is satisfied he ought not to direct or control the proceedings, leave should be granted to the creditor to file his bill.—Sweetzer v. Higby, 63 Mich. 13.

¶ 258. The fraud referred to in How. St., § 8744, is one "in the matter of such assignment" with which the assignee is connected as well as the assignor. The section was intended to give the creditors relief against the assignee's incompetency, neglect or fraud, and not to cover cases where he could and would act.—Sweetzer v. Higby, 63 Mich. 13.

¶ 259. Under How. St., § 8744, a creditor may file a bill to set aside a chattel mortgage alleged to have been given in anticipation of an assignment by the mortgagor, and to secure to the mortgagee a preference, to which transaction the assignee is alleged to have been a party; and it is not necessary that the complainant should have obtained an order from the court requiring the assignee to institute proceedings.—Burnham v. Haskins, 72 Mich. 235.

¶ 263. Where an assignee for the benefit of creditors holds the assigned property during the period allowed him to file his bond, and then, instead of filing it, relinquishes his trust and at once attaches the goods as a creditor, other creditors over whom he has thereby obtained an undue advantage should proceed, under L. 1879, Act No. 198 (How. St., § 8744), to compel a proper execution of the

¶ 264. A single creditor may file a bill to enforce the prompt execution of an assignee's trust; and the other creditors need not be made parties.—Wilhelm v. Byles, 60 Mich. 561.

¶ 265. The trust being under a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, some of the creditors filed a bill to have the assignment set aside as fraudulent, or, in case it was sustained, then to have the trust enforced. The bill averred that certain creditors had been paid their demands in full. Held, not necessary to make such persons parties to the bill.—Suydam v. Dequindre, H. 347.

¶ 267. Under How. St., § 8749, proceedings in the circuit court in chancery against the assignee to recover a dividend may be commenced by petition; and jurisdiction of the assignee may be acquired by an order requiring him to appear and answer. It is not necessary to serve the creditors with notice of the petition or with a copy of the order, since the assignee represents them.—Southern Michigan Nat. Bank v. Byles, 67 Mich. 296.

¶ 268. An assignee for creditors failed, after the creditors' written request, to contest mortgages made by the assignor and claimed to be fraudulent, whereupon the creditors filed a bill for the purpose. The issue upon the validity of the mortgages was fairly made in the pleadings and upon the testimony, and no question as to the right to litigate such validity was made in the court below. Held, that any necessity for an application for leave to file the bill must be deemed waived.—Funke v. Cone, 65 Mich. 581.

¶ 269. An objection that general creditors of an insolvent debtor, who has made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, are not authorized, on the refusal of the assignee, to file a bill to set aside an alleged fraudulent chattel mortgage executed by the assignor prior to and in anticipation of the assignment, will not be regarded as fatal when raised for the first time after all of the testimony has been taken, and with all of the parties before the court who could be brought in had the bill been filed by the assignee.—Burnham v. Dillon, 100 Mich. 352.

¶ 270. The right of creditors, on the refusal of the assignee, to sue to set aside a chattel mortgage by bill in equity cannot be defeated by the contention that the fact that the assignee of the mortgage was in possession of the mortgaged property under his security, and hence the general assignee might have maintained an action at law.—Burnham v. Dillon, 100 Mich. 352.

¶ 272. The assignee or receiver is the proper person to attack as fraudulent against the assignment conveyances, mortgages or payments by the assignor to third persons; and the creditors must move through the assignee or ask chancery to compel him to move or allow them to do so.—Root v. Potter, 59 Mich. 498; Angell v. Pickard, 61 Mich. 561; Scott v. Chambers, 62 Mich. 532; Sweetzer v. Higby, 63 Mich. 13.

¶ 274. The assignee of an insolvent debtor may seek in chancery the dissolution of an attachment upon the assigned property; he cannot intervene in the law action.—Turner v. Hatch, 100 Mich. 65; Emerson v. Detroit Steel & Spring Co., 100 Mich. 127.

¶ 276. An assignee can bring trover against the sheriff or other stranger for the full value of assigned property seized and sold by him on writ of attachment issued after the assignment was made and before the assignee's bond was filed.—Coots v. Radford, 47 Mich. 37.

Pleading assignments generally, see Assignments, §§ 31, 32.

¶ 277. The declaration by an assignee for the benefit of creditors to recover for goods sold and delivered by the assignor should aver defendant's indebtedness to the assignor for goods and assignment of the claim by the assignor to plaintiff.—Powell v. Williams, 99 Mich. 30.

ASSISTANCE, WRIT OF.

TREATS of the chancery writ to assist the sheriff or executive officer of the court to put the purchaser in possession of land sold under decree. The writ of possession used in a law court in ejectment is treated in Ejectment, V; and the writ of restitution used in summary proceedings is treated in Forcible Entry.

§ 4. ——Purchasers and others in privity with defendant.
§ 5. ——Hostile claimants.

¶ 1. A writ of assistance is the regular process for carrying out a decree of possession, and it lies on foreclosure sales.—Ramsdell v. Maxwell, 32 Mich. 285.

¶ 2. A writ of assistance will be granted to put the purchaser of mortgaged premises in possession if the defendant, on being shown the master's deed and a certified copy of the order confirming the sale under the seal of the court, refuses to deliver possession.—Hart v. Linsday, W. 144.

¶ 3. The object of a writ of assistance is to compel parties who are bound by a decree in foreclosure to give up the possession which the decree and sale under it estop them from further asserting. It cannot be proper where there is any real controversy as to the right of possession not precluded by the decree and sale.—Ramsdell v. Maxwell, 32 Mich. 285.

¶ 4. A writ of assistance is proper only where a party concluded by the proceedings refuses to give up possession on request; and it should not be granted without proper evidence of such refusal after the right of possession is established.—Howard v. Bond, 42 Mich. 131.

¶ 5. A decree was made in the Supreme Court requiring the complainant to deliver up possession of certain premises, and the cause was remitted to the court below for the purposes of an accounting. Held, that any application for a writ of assistance under the decree should be made in the court below.—Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 195.

¶ 6. Where exceptions to the report of sale in a mortgage foreclosure case were overruled, and the sale was confirmed, and an order made on the same day for a writ of assistance, based upon the petition of the complainant, showing the exhibition on that day to the mortgagor of the commissioner's deed and of a certified copy of the order confirming the sale, it will not be assumed, from the fact that the mortgagor resided 20 miles from the place where the court was held, that the complainant could not get a copy of the order of confirmation on the morning of the day it was made, make the service, and return in time to get the writ of assistance on the same day, or that it was the nisi order of confirmation, instead of the court order, which was served, in the absence of proof of that fact.—Tucker v. Stone, 99 Mich. 419.

¶ 7. A defendant in a foreclosure proceeding whose interest in the property has been cut off by the sheriff's deed, has no standing to resist an order granting a writ of assistance to obtain possession of the property.—Farr v. Lachman, 130 Mich. 40.

¶ 10. Where, in a foreclosure suit, a subsequent mortgagee was not made a party, and no lis pendens was filed, and after decree, and just before sale under it, such subsequent mortgagee was, by some arrangement with the owner of the equity of redemption (who was a party), placed in possession of the mortgaged premises, having, at the time, notice of the foreclosure proceedings, held, that any right to possession thus acquired ceased on the sale, and that the purchaser at such sale was entitled to a writ of assistance to put him in possession.—Baker v. Pierson, 5 Mich. 456.

¶ 11. Where in a foreclosure suit a defendant, in addition to claiming rights in the mortgaged premises as a subsequent purchaser at an execution sale, claims under tax titles, which cannot be litigated in said suit, no writ of assistance will be awarded to put him out of possession of the mortgaged premises.—Hayward v. Kinney, 84 Mich. 591.

¶ 12. A mere oral statement by one not a party of record, made in the course of proceedings for a writ of assistance in behalf of a purchaser at foreclosure sale, that he claims possession by virtue of a sale for taxes, is too informal to warrant consideration.—Aldrich v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 111 Mich. 525.

Doubt or controversy as to right, see also ante § 1.

That person in possession is not bound by decree, see also ante §§ 3-5.

¶ 14. Where proceedings by writ of assistance were taken on the foot of a foreclosure decree against a wife, leave being given to discontinue as against the husband, the objection that the papers were wrongly entitled in the names of both defendants was held a mere technicality, especially where it was not clear from the record whether the order of discontinuance had been entered.—Howe v. Lemon, 47 Mich. 544.

¶ 15. An assignee of a decree of foreclosure who, in a proceeding brought by him to set aside the sale made thereunder without notice of the assignment, waives all objections to the sale and prays for an order granting six months' time for redemption, which is denied, will not thereafter be heard to resist a writ of assistance based on the sale on the ground that the decree had been assigned and the sale had without a petition being made and allowed as required by 1897 Chancery Rule 34.—Farr v. Lachman, 130 Mich. 40.

¶ 16. Matters set up in defence to a motion for the writ cannot be received to affect the decree of assistance which is the basis of the application.—Howe v. Lemon, 47 Mich. 544.

¶ 35. The right of a tenant in common to maintain assumpsit against his cotenant for a conversion of the common property is based upon a violation of the contractual obligation, and it is not essential to the existence of the right that the goods converted should be susceptible of division by weight or measure.—Williams v. Rogers, 110 Mich. 418.

¶ 37. A tenant in common, excluded by his cotenant from his share of harvested crops, may waive the tort and sue in assumpsit for the value, but he must show just what property has been appropriated in such case by defendant.—Coe v. Wager, 42 Mich. 49.

¶ 38. The refusal of a tenant in common of crops to recognize his cotenant's rights is a conversion, and the cotenant may waive the tort and sue in assumpsit.—Loomis v. O'Neal, 73 Mich. 582.

¶ 39. A tenant in common of a stock of goods whose co-tenant, without her consent, sells the entire stock to purchasers who ignore her rights, cannot waive the tort and bring assumpsit so long as the goods remain unsold in the purchaser's hands.—Tuttle v. Campbell, 74 Mich. 652.

¶ 40. Where a vendor has been induced by the purchaser's representations to receive in part payment a mortgage which he afterwards found to be unavailable, it was held that assumpsit would lie upon the purchaser's representations, as well as an action of tort for fraudulent statements.—Chandler v. Childs, 42 Mich. 128.

¶ 42. A defense that the assumpsit attempts a waiver of a tort to land, is untenable where the basis of the assumpsit is an implied promise to repay a consideration in land passed to discharge a supposed debt, which consideration failed because there was no debt, and where the wrong was in representing that the debt did exist and was secured by a mortgage on the land. The implication is not based on the wrong but on the failure of consideration collateral thereto. —Child v. Pierce, 37 Mich. 155.

¶ 43. Assumpsit for money had and received, lies against one whose false and fraudulent statements have procured plaintiff's money to be paid to a corporation whereof defendant was a director and stockholder, which money has been paid over to defendant or credit given for it on account.—Coon v. Anderson, 101 Mich. 295.

II. THE COMMON COUNTS.

¶ 44. As a general rule, when money has been received by a defendant under any state of facts that would in a court of equity entitle the plaintiff to a decree for the money when that is the specific relief sought, the same state of facts will entitle him to recover at law in an action for money had and received.—Moore v. Mandlebaum, 8 Mich. 433.

¶ 45. Assumpsit for money had and received is an equitable action and is subject to equitable principles.—Atkinson v. Scott, 36 Mich. 18.

¶ 46. Assumpsit for money had and received, being equitable in its nature, lies whenever an express or implied trust to pay over money has been violated.—Catlin v. Birchard, 13 Mich. 110; Twitchell v. Drury, 25 Mich. 393.

¶ 47. Assumpsit for money had and received does not depend upon any preliminary agreement, but upon the receipt of money by one that he is bound to pay over to another.—Spencer v. Towles, 18 Mich. 9.

¶ 48. An action in assumpsit for money had and received will lie where defendant has in his possession money which in equity and good conscience belongs to the plaintiff; and it is not essential that there should be an express promise to pay, or any privity between the parties.—Beardslee v. Horton, 3 Mich. 560; Walker v. Conant, 65 Mich. 194.

¶ 49. The mere receipt of money by one not entitled to it creates no equity in his favor.—People ex rel. Village of Decatur v. Decatur Township Board, 33 Mich. 335.

¶ 50. In the action of assumpsit for money had and received the right to recover must be based upon the claim that defendant has money which in equity and good conscience belongs to plaintiff.—Minor Lumber Co. v. Alpena, 97 Mich. 499.

¶ 51. In order to sustain an action for money received by defendant for the use of plaintiff, it is sufficient to show that defendant had obtained possession of money or received something as money, which, in equity and good conscience, belongs to plaintiff.—Harty v. Teagan, 150 Mich. 75.

¶ 52. The right to bring assumpsit for money had and received exists whenever a person, natural or artificial, has in his or its possession money which in equity and good conscience belongs to the plaintiff, and neither express promise nor privity between the parties is essential.—Hoyt v. Paw Paw Grape Juice Co., 158 Mich. 619.

¶ 53. Where an agent collected money for his principal, and the latter afterwards assigned it to the plaintiff, it was held that the plaintiff might recover it in this action after demand.—Beardslee v. Horton, 3 Mich. 560.

¶ 54. Assumpsit to recover back the amount paid for a shipping receipt lies against the persons who originally issued the receipt, if the merchandise therein described was not actually shipped as agreed in the receipt, and the defendants have by words or acts authorized, consented to, connived at or sanctioned the act of the person selling the receipt in thereby obtaining from plaintiff money which he has turned over to defendants in payment of a debt due them from himself.—Tregent v. Maybee, 51 Mich. 191.

¶ 55. In every action at law upon a contract the contest must be between the two alleged contracting parties; a third person beneficiary's right to resort to the equitable action for money had and received exists only where the parties to the contract have given him such a right as transfers the fund to his control.—Davis v. Lenawee County Sav. Bank, 53 Mich. 163.

¶ 57. A married woman, having a mortgage upon which there was due principal and interest, made an oral gift to her husband of the interest which was due and put the mortgage into his hands. The mortgagor exchanged the mortgaged lands for others under an agreement whereby he was to pay off the interest. He deeded the lands, and at the same time paid the grantees the interest, on their promise to hand it over to the husband. The grantees having failed to pay it, held, that the husband might maintain an action against them for money received to his use. And the wife having subsequently purchased the lands, subject to the mortgage excluding this interest, and then discharged the mortgage of record, held, that this did not affect the husband's right of action.—Fay v. Sanderson, 48 Mich. 259.

¶ 58. Where a note is made payable to one man in trust for another, and the payee receives the money upon it, he is liable to the party in interest for the amount in an action for money had and received.—Catlin v. Burchard, 13 Mich. 110.

¶ 59. An action for money had and received lies against a grantee for the proceeds of the sale of land conveyed to him under a parol trust to make such sale and divide the proceeds among the grantors, such trust having been recognized by him.—Collar v. Collar, 75 Mich. 414; Collar v. Collar, 86 Mich. 507.

¶ 60. One who has collected accounts assigned to him under an agreement that he will pay the proceeds, less a reasonable collection fee, to the creditors of the assignor "or to" a third party, is liable to such party, after having discharged the indebtedness, in an action for money had and received, even though a trust may have been created by the arrangement.—Tanner v. Page, 106 Mich. 155.

¶ 61. One who, being duly authorized to do so, has collected money for another is liable to him in this action.—Liesemer v. Burg, 106 Mich. 124.

¶ 62. The common money counts in assumpsit lie against an agent for moneys received in making collections on a mortgage belonging to his principal, and for moneys advanced to be used in foreclosure.—Schmemann v. Rothfuss, 46 Mich. 453.

¶ 63. A father who has employed a person to collect damages from the seducer of his daughter may sue such person for money obtained but withheld.—Heimbach v. Weinberg, 18 Mich. 48.

¶ 64. The count for money had and received includes any dealings whereby money due to plaintiff came into defendant's hands as factor from sales on commission.—Freehling v. Ketchum, 39 Mich. 299.

¶ 65. A count for money had and received includes any dealings whereby money due to plaintiff came into defendant's hands as factor from sales on commission.—Freehling v. Ketchum, 39 Mich. 299.

¶ 66. The common counts are sufficient for recovering the amount collected and wrongfully retained by defendant on securities which plaintiff had put up to indemnify defendant for going on a bond, the condition of which plaintiff has performed.—Blackwood v. Brown, 34 Mich. 4.

¶ 67. Where an agent, intrusted with the collection of debts and foreclosure of mortgages, seeks to deceive his principal by representing that payments have not been made on a mortgage, the latter can maintain assumpsit on the common money counts against him for moneys received in making collections thereon and for moneys advanced to be used in foreclosing it.—Schmemann v. Rothfuss, 46 Mich. 453.

¶ 68. An action for money had and received will not lie for money paid by plaintiff to defendant on a subscription to the use of a third party, where it is not shown that defendant paved any interest in the money or that it did not come into the third party's hands before the suit was brought.—Wilson v. Haywood, 33 Mich. 99.

¶ 72. The common counts lie to recover the amount of a tax paid by plaintiff for defendant's use, though defendant's duty to pay the tax arose on his sealed contract to sell the land to plaintiff, since the action is not based upon the contract; the contract is a matter of evidence only.—Curtis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 32 Mich. 291.

¶ 75. One who by his contract has agreed to receive payment in something else than money cannot, where he has broken the contract, recover on the quantum meruit the value of his labor performed under the contract.—Roberts v. Wilkinson, 34 Mich. 129.

¶ 76. Where, under a non-apportionable contract, a party has done anything from which the other party has received substantial benefit, and which he has appropriated, a recovery may be had on the quantum meruit, based on that benefit.—Allen v. McKibbin, 5 Mich. 449.

Proper and available remedies on performance or breach of contract, see Contracts, VII, D, X.

¶ 77. Where there is a contract for a set sum it is not allowable to show quantum valebat.—Closs v. Thiefels, 79 Mich. 589.

¶ 78. Assumpsit on the common count for goods sold and delivered cannot be maintained where the goods were sold as part of a bill to a third person, and were charged and delivered to him, and never went into the hands of defendant, and the conditions proposed by defendant in his offer to buy were not observed, and his liability if any was on a later agreement.—Carpenter v. Butterfield, 34 Mich. 97.

¶ 79. The count for goods sold and delivered lies for the value of such articles delivered in part performance of an entire contract of sale as have been retained by the vendee.—Clark v. Moore, 8 Mich. 55.

¶ 80. The count for goods sold and delivered lies where a vendee has actually received and appropriated articles delivered in partial performance of a special contract that the vendor has not fully carried out.—Begole v. McKenzie, 26 Mich. 470.

¶ 81. Under the common counts, for goods sold, plaintiff cannot show that he had, at defendant's request, repossessed himself of the product, expended money thereon and sold it to third persons, crediting defendant with the proceeds.—Yelter v. Campau, 174 Mich. 94.

§ 23. Use and occupation; when proper.

Necessary allegations, see post § 48.
Defenses under the general issue, see post § 52.
Right to recover for use and occupation or for rent, see Landlord and Tenant, IV, G.
Actions for rent or for use and occupation, see generally Landlord and Tenant, V, A.

¶ 82. Assumpsit for use and occupation lies at common law.—Dwight v. Cutler, 3 Mich. 566; Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351; Dalton v. Laudahn, 30 Mich. 349.

¶ 83. Use and occupation may be sued for generally or specially without reference to the form of the lease.—Conkling v. Tuttle, 52 Mich. 630.

¶ 84. Where the count for use, etc., is omitted, the other common counts will not sustain an action for the use of land demised.—Heyerman v. Kanter, 36 Mich. 316.

¶ 85. The common counts are proper in suing for a debt which defendant has assumed by novation, where defendant has retained, for the purpose of paying it, the money originally due to the person whose debt is thus assumed, and where, also, the amount to be paid under the novation agreement is a sum certain. The count for money had and received covers the first case, and indebitatus assumpsit the other.—Mulcrone v. American Lumber Co., 55 Mich. 622.

¶ 86. In order to make a principal contractor liable for money had and received to the use of creditors of the subcontractor, on the ground of withholding or failure to pay to the subcontractor, or on his account, a sum claimed to be his due, there must be a showing at least that there had been a settlement with him, under which the sum so withheld had been allowed as so much money, and that defendants had agreed to pay as their own obligation from such sum, the sum owing to plaintiff by the subcontractor.—Barden v. Briscoe, 36 Mich. 254.

When the action is on a note, bill or check, see Negotiable Instruments, XIV.

¶ 87. The common counts are not adapted to a recovery upon a promise to pay plaintiff a given sum in consideration of the plaintiff's deeding to defendants certain land, to be by them deeded to a third person in exchange for land the latter was to convey to a railroad company for depot grounds.—Mace v. Page, 33 Mich. 38.

¶ 88. An action, the gist of which is defendant's failure to pay a note that he has agreed to pay, should be laid in assumpsit rather than in case, though the undertaking set up includes also a promise to become a co-signer of the note, by which the other was induced to sign it; the case is in effect one to compel defendant to make plaintiff good for money paid to defendant's use at his request.—Potter v. Brown, 35 Mich. 274.

¶ 89. A certificate of deposit may be sued under the common counts with copy appended.—Cate v. Patterson, 25 Mich. 191.

¶ 90. It has always been competent to sue the makers of notes, negotiable or otherwise, on the common counts.—Port Huron & S. W. R. Co. v. Potter, 55 Mich. 627.

¶ 91. The payee of a conditional railroad aid note may, after condition performed, sue upon the note under the common counts.—Port Huron & S. W. R. Co. v. Potter, 55 Mich. 627.

¶ 92. Where one has promised the maker of a promissory note, for a consideration proceeding from the latter alone, to pay the note when due, the holder of the note cannot recover upon such promise on the common counts in assumpsit, but, if entitled to recover at all, must declare specially.—Halstead v. Francis, 31 Mich. 113.

¶ 93. A draft that had been accepted by the drawees was on maturity presented at the bank where it was made payable, but payment was refused for want of funds, and the drawee's bookkeeper told the cashier of the bank that the drawers should pay, and not he, who would have to make a draft back on them to pay with. Said drawers had promised the drawees to take care of the sight draft, the cashier on being so informed agreed to take the time draft, and thereupon the bank charged the amount of the accepted draft to the drawees and credited them with the proceeds of the sight draft. Held, that there was no privity of contract between the bank and the drawees of the sight draft such as would entitle the former to recover from the latter as for money paid for their use.—Bay City Bank v. Lindsay, 94 Mich. 176.

¶ 94. The indebitatus count includes a count for the price of real property sold, and may be used to recover the price or value of an estate sold by plaintiff to defendant.—Nugent v. Teachout, 67 Mich. 571.

¶ 95. Purchase money paid for land can be recovered in an action for money had and received, whether the consideration fails for want of title or for want of a valid contract to convey.—Wright v. Dickinson, 67 Mich. 580.

¶ 96. Where a contract for the sale and delivery of goods has been completely performed, the price may be recovered under the common counts in assumpsit.—McGraw v. Sturgeon, 29 Mich. 436; Richards v. Burroughs, 62 Mich. 117.

¶ 97. The price of cattle may be recovered under the common count for goods, wares and merchandise sold and delivered.—Weston v. McAswell, 30 Mich. 353.

¶ 98. The amount of a fully executed contract for the sale and delivery of goods may be recovered either under a general count for goods sold and delivered or under a special count upon the contract. The basis of the action under the general count is an undertaking which the law imposes to the defendant as a consequence of the full execution of the special agreement by the plaintiff.—Begole v. McKenzie, 36 Mich. 470.

¶ 99. Recovery can be had under the common counts for personal property, bought by defendant of plaintiff, which he refuses to return or pay for.—Gunsberg v. Cutler & Savidge Lumber Co., 55 Mich. 439.

¶ 100. Where goods are sold on credit to be paid for in a note, if the note is not given, the vendor, if he sues before the time of credit expires, must declare on the contract; but after the expiration of the time of credit he may sue on the common counts.—Gibbs v. Blanchard, 15 Mich. 290.

¶ 101. Where plaintiff sold goods and received securities for the purchase price, one of which he collected and the other offered to return, and he afterwards brought suit to recover the balance, it was held not necessary that he should declare specially.—Gardner v. Gorham, 1 D. 507.

¶ 102. The common counts will lie for the price of articles sold, on the vendee's refusal to give an order which the plaintiff had agreed to take in payment, and which was to be drawn on a third person and be payable in labor.—Stone v. Nichols, 43 Mich. 16.

§ 30. Aliquot or undivided shares owing.

¶ 103. One who sues for his share of a payment can sue as for money had and received if he can show by any evidence how much belongs to him, and notwithstanding the fact that defendant has lumped the whole amount so that there is no direct way of showing it.—Harrison v. Ingersoll, 56 Mich. 36.

¶ 104. A share of profits realized under executed oral agreement for purchase and sale of land is recoverable by an agent from his principal under declaration on common counts amplified by bill of particulars stating the facts.—Davis v. Gerber, 69 Mich. 246.

Waiver of tort by cotenant, see ante § 10.

¶ 105. Where one of two joint owners of personalty, who bought under an agreement that it should be sold and the proceeds equally divided, refuses to make division of certain corporate stock assigned to him on such sale, the other may recover in assumpsit the admitted value of one-half of the stock.—Murphy v. Craig, 76 Mich. 155.

¶ 106. The common counts in assumpsit sustain recovery for the value of the share of a crop of wheat belonging to a tenant in common of the wheat under a valid agreement between them.—McLaughlin v. Salley, 46 Mich. 219.

§ 32. On executed performance of express contract.

See generally Contracts, VII, D, X.
On executed sale of goods or land, see ante §§ 28, 29.
Where contract is invalid or services were not under it, see post §§ 35-37.
Necessity of special allegations of breach, see post § 58.
Against drain commissioners, see Drains, II.

¶ 107. Where the contract between two parties has been executed by plaintiff, and nothing remains but payment to be made by defendant, the former may sue upon the common counts and need not declare specially.—Bush v. Brooks, 70 Mich. 446.

¶ 108. Where a contract has been fully performed a party may, in general, recover under the common counts.—Shaw v. Bradley, 59 Mich. 199.

¶ 109. The common counts constitute a sufficient declaration upon a contract performed by plaintiff, where nothing remains but the payment of money.—White v. Taylor, 113 Mich. 543.

¶ 110. Where there is a special contract between the parties, one cannot recover upon a general count for money paid to the other's use, except where he could have recovered without any special contract.—Carney v. O'Neil, 27 Mich. 495.

¶ 111. Recovery under the common counts cannot be had on a special contract performed on plaintiff's part, except for money due.—Pierson v. Spaulding, 61 Mich. 90.

¶ 112. Money actually due under an express contract is recoverable under the common counts.—Thomas v. Caulkett, 57 Mich. 392.

¶ 113. The common counts in assumpsit lie to recover the agreed compensation for services fully performed by plaintiff's assignor under a contract with defendant to procure freight for vessels, though one was lost and could not carry it.—Nicol v. Fitch, 115 Mich. 15.

¶ 114. Where plaintiff had performed for defendant services shown to be worth more than plaintiff had received for them, and for which no bargain was made as to price, except one which defendant shortly after repudiated and refused to regard, it was error to rule that no recovery could be had on the common counts, and that the action should have been brought on the contract.—McQueen v. Gamble, 33 Mich. 344.

¶ 116. Recovery can be had under the common counts upon an agreement to pay for services in forwarding the sale of one's land.—Fletcher v. Bradford, 45 Mich. 349.

¶ 117. An attorney's retainer is recoverable under the common courts, and there need not have been an express promise to pay it.—Eggleston v. Boardman, 37 Mich. 14.

¶ 118. Where a contract for the construction of a building has been substantially performed, the contract price may be recovered in an action on the common counts.—Strome v. Lyon, 110 Mich. 680.

¶ 119. The count in indebitatus assumpsit is appropriate to recover the value of work done and materials furnished in erecting a building under contract, where the terms of the contract have not been strictly complied with, but the defaults have been waived.—Andre v. Hardin, 32 Mich. 324.

¶ 120. Where plaintiff is at liberty to treat the contract as at an end, though only partly performed, or where he has not performed in the manner or time agreed upon in the contract, but what he did was beneficial to defendant and was accepted by him, plaintiff may declare on the common counts.—Bush v. Brooks, 70 Mich. 446.

¶ 121. An action will lie on the common counts for wages fairly earned by past services already rendered under an express agreement of which defendant has prevented full performance.—Mitchell v. Scott, 41 Mich. 108; and see Butterfield v. Seligman, 17 Mich. 95.

¶ 122. Where labor has been performed by one party under a contract which the other party breaks, the former may recover on the quantum meruit for work done.—Hemminger v. Western Assur. Co., 95 Mich. 355.

¶ 123. A logging contractor who is obliged to abandon his contract because of the failure of the other party to furnish funds is entitled to recover the value of his services at the contract price so far as rendered either under indebitatus assumpsit or under quantum meruit where the declaration sets out the contract and alleges specifically what the contractor had done in compliance therewith, and that he was prevented from completing it by reason of the refusal of the defendant to furnish funds for labor and supplies in accordance with the contract, and where he only undertakes to recover on the contract so far as it is executed.—Brooks v. Bellows, 192 Mich. 109.

¶ 124. A broker may recover not exceeding an agreed commission (this being in effect an agreed compensation for services rendered) under the common counts in assumpsit, where he has been discharged, and the sale later made by the owner to the persons with whom he had been negotiating.—McGovern v. Bennett, 146 Mich. 558.

¶ 126. A. conveyed to B. land in part payment for which it had been orally agreed that B. should convey a house and lot, which, however, B. refused to do, and afterwards B. sold to another. Held, that as B.'s agreement was void under the statute of frauds, his refusal to convey rescinded the contract and raised an implied promise to pay for the land which he had received on the contract, and that the value of such land could be recovered on the indebitatus count for real property sold.—Nugent v. Teachout, 67 Mich. 571.

¶ 127. Quantum meruit lies for the recovery of the value of services performed under a contract void under the statute of frauds, the benefit of which services has been accepted by the other party.—Cadman v. Markle, 76 Mich. 448.

¶ 128. An action lies upon the common counts for work and labor done and materials furnished which plaintiff was induced to do and furnish by reason of a contract made between the parties, but not binding upon plaintiff because of the frauds and mistakes of defendant. Such is not to be regarded as assumpsit based on waiver of a tort or as assumpsit based on the contract itself.—Bush v. Brooks, 70 Mich. 446.

¶ 129. Compensation for services rendered under a contract void under the statute of frauds may be recovered under the common counts in assumpsit.—Carroll v. Palmer Mfg. Co., 181 Mich. 280.

§ 36. Services rendered outside of contract.

¶ 130. A party is entitled under the common counts to recover for services performed by him outside of his contract.—Burroughs v. Morse, 48 Mich. 520.

¶ 131. One may recover under a quantum meruit where there has been a change in the express contract and the mode of performing an unapportionable part is so changed that the original contract price cannot be determined.—Boyce v. Martin, 46 Mich. 239.

¶ 132. In an action to recover on a written contract for logging, where plaintiff was ordered by an authorized agent of defendant to change the character of the operation as provided by the contract and to perform extra services to meet an emergency, such agent agreeing that defendant would pay therefor, plaintiff may recover under the common counts for the value of such services as are shown by the evidence. —Martindale v. Lobdell-Emery Mfg. Co., 180 Mich. 477.

§ 38. Recovery upon failure of consideration.

¶ 133. Money paid without consideration may be recovered under the common counts in assumpsit.—Murphy v. McGraw, 74 Mich. 318.

¶ 134. Money paid without consideration may be recovered under a declaration on the common counts for money had and received. —Ripley v. Case, 78 Mich. 126.

¶ 135. Assumpsit is the proper form of action to recover back moneys that have been received by a person without consideration and against law and equity.—Friend v. Dunks, 37 Mich. 25.

¶ 137. Where a horse purchased under a warranty that he was sound, and just the kind of an animal the purchaser wanted for a driving horse, proved to have an incurable disease of the feet which rendered him worthless for the purpose named, the price paid is recoverable as money paid without consideration, although there was no stipulation that the horse might be returned if he proved worthless.—Murphy v. McGraw, 74 Mich. 318.

¶ 138. A recovery in assumpsit on the common counts may be had on the theory of having received no consideration for the payment of a certain sum of money where plaintiff traded his team for a team belonging to defendant, paying a certain sum in addition, and, in pursuance with the agreement, returned one of the horses which was unsatisfactory and received another in place, and, the latter horse becoming ill, returned it to defendant at the latter's request, and this horse died while in defendant's custody, the latter refusing to pay plaintiff the price equal to one-half the agreed valuation of the team or to give plaintiff a new horse. —Taylor v. Belton, 188 Mich. 302.

¶ 139. Assumpsit lies where defendant has received the entire consideration for personalty to which he represented he had title, whereas he had not.—Fitzpatrick v. Hoffman, 104 Mich. 228.

¶ 140. The common counts lie to recover the purchase price of felled timber where the vendor's title has failed; and this, although the consideration both for the timber and for the land it had been cut from was included in a deed of the land.—Fitzpatrick v. Hoffman, 104 Mich. 228.

Question for the jury, see post § 64, ¶ 248.

¶ 141. Money paid for a worthless bond in reliance upon the seller's representation that it is good is recoverable in assumpsit. —Ripley v. Case, 86 Mich. 261.

¶ 142. Assumpsit for money had and received will lie without a special count at the suit of an insurance company to recover back the amount paid on a loss where the policy had been made void by fraudulent representations as to the extent of the loss.—Johnson v. Continental Ins. Co. of New York, 39 Mich. 33.

¶ 143. When a person who has contracted to sell land proceeds to rescind the contract and oust the other party, the latter may acquiesce and consider it at an end; and as there is a failure of consideration for whatever he has paid on the contract, he may recover it back under the equitable count for money had and received.—Davis v. Strebridge, 44 Mich. 157.

¶ 144. In an action for money had and received, the equities attending a rescission of a contract and the placing of the parties as far as possible in statu quo can be settled without resorting to a court of equity.—Wright v. Dickinson, 67 Mich. 580; Wright v. Dickinson, 67 Mich. 590.

¶ 145. The common counts lie on waiver of tort for the value of goods which the purchaser, after rescinding the contract of sale, has refused to return to the vendor.—Aldine Mfg. Co. v. Barnard, 84 Mich. 632.

¶ 146. Recovery may be had on the common counts for money paid on a contract into which plaintiff was induced to enter by fraudulent representations of the defendant, and which plaintiff repudiated.—Billig v. Goodrich, 199 Mich. 423.

without consideration unless possession has been given to the vendee so as to take the case out of the statute of frauds.—Scott v. Bush, 26 Mich. 418; Scott v. Bush, 29 Mich. 523; Colgrove v. Solomon, 34 Mich. 494; Cilley v. Burkholder, 41 Mich. 749; Nims v. Sherman, 43 Mich. 45; Kelly v. Kelly, 54 Mich. 30.

¶ 149. A count for money had and received sustains a recovery of money received by a grantee on sale of land conveyed to him under a parol trust to make such sale and distribute the proceeds among the grantors.—Collar v. Collar, 75 Mich. 414; Collar v. Collar, 86 Mich. 507.

§ 43. Overpayments and payments by mistake, fraud or duress.

For overcharge amounting to breach of contract, see Contracts, VII, D.

¶ 150. The common count for money had and received sustains recovery of money paid on an express contract by mistake and in ignorance of material facts.—Lane v. Pere Marquette Boom Co., 62 Mich. 63.

¶ 151. Assumpsit on the common counts, as for money had and received, lies where plaintiff sues for the excess paid under a written contract for timber, where the estimated quantity falls short and the vendor is bound to refund an amount corresponding to the shortage and reckoned according to a fixed basis of calculation. And under the common counts testimony is admissible to show the amount due for shortage.—Phippen v. Morehouse, 50 Mich. 537.

¶ 152. Assumpsit for money had and received to plaintiff's use lies to recover back the amount of the overpayment where a purchaser who had agreed to pay what the property had cost his vendor found, after paying, that the latter had deceived him as to the amount. The false representation will not support an action for tort.—Barnard v. Colwell, 39 Mich. 215.

¶ 153. Where plaintiff has fraudulently been induced to enter into a contract and pay money thereon, he may recover damages for the fraud and deceit either through an action on the case or in assumpsit, but in neither case would the common counts be a proper declaration.—Barbour v. Hurlburt, 137 Mich. 584.

¶ 154. The action against a city to recover the surplus of money assessed for improvements is equitable and is maintainable for money that in equity and good conscience belongs to plaintiff.—Thayer v. City of Grand Rapids, 82 Mich. 298.

III. SPECIAL ASSUMPSIT.

§ 44. In general.

[Note. Many decisions turn on the question whether the common counts will lie or whether the cause of action must be pleaded specially. Others turn on the nature of the contract or cause of action, holding that certain facts must be specially alleged. In the judgment of the editor it would be misleading to endeavor to collect such decisions here, especially in view of the abolishment of special forms by the Judicature Act. For the cases on propriety of the common counts, see division II, ante, but particularly see the topics treating of the particular contracts, viz., those portions treating of pleading and procedure.]

Joint liability of corporation and stockholders for labor debts, see Corporations, XXIV.
Who are parties to contract, see Contracts, II.

¶ 155. Two persons, each of whom has received for safe keeping a part of a sum of money, cannot be made joint defendants in assumpsit.—O'Connor v. O'Connor, 86 Mich. 189.

§ 47. Diverse counts; joinder of counts.

General rule as to joinder of counts in declaration, see Pleading, II.
Present statutory rule, see Jud. Act, Chap. VIII, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 12309.

¶ 156. Comp. L. 1857, § 4550, How. St., § 7778, authorizes, in actions of assumpsit, the joinder of the common counts with special counts upon judgments, a count for use and occupation, a count upon a special contract to pay rent, and a special contract to purchase a house and lot.—Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

¶ 157. It is not necessary that special counts in assumpsit should be harmonious, even when the same instrument is set out in each as the foundation of an action. And the court cannot refuse to receive evidence under the declaration on any such ground as that what would support one count would defeat another.—Barton v. Gray, 48 Mich. 164.

¶ 158. A special count for breach of a contract is properly joined with common counts in assumpsit, as all causes of action enforceable in assumpsit may be joined.—Carland v. Western Union Tel. Co., 118 Mich. 369.

¶ 159. An action to enforce the personal liability of directors for the debts of the corporation, provided by Comp. L. 1897, § 7059, could not be joined with a suit upon the common counts in assumpsit, or with a count charging defendants with fraud.—Wachusett Nat. Bank v. Steel, 135 Mich. 688.

¶ 160. Defendant was employed by plaintiff to act as a broker in negotiating the purchase for the plaintiff of a certain piece of real estate. The defendant secured from the seller an option at the price of $19,110, but represented to plaintiff that the seller demanded $20,000, and upon putting the deal through pocketed the difference, $890. Plaintiff, in ignorance of the fraud, paid him a commission of $200. In a suit in assumpsit under section 10421, 3 Comp. L. 1897, held, plaintiff could recover under the common counts the $200 paid in commissions, and under a special count joined therewith, the $890.—Hogle v. Meyering, 161 Mich. 472.

Variance due to want of special allegations or use of wrong count, see post §§ 53-58.
To admit proof of damages, see Damages, X.
Allegation of promise to decedent when suit is by personal representative, see Estates of Decedents, XI, B.
Necessity of special allegations in assumpsit for labor debt of corporation under the statute, see Corporations, XXIV.
In actions for commissions, see Brokers.
In action to recover indemnity, see Indemnity, III, A.
In action for use and occupation, see Landlord and Tenant, V, A.
To recover for support of poor in action by poor superintendents, see Poor Persons.
Actions on contract of sale, see Sales, VIII, IX.

¶ 162. A count to recover money paid for taxes under duress must allege that defendant had and received it or some portion of it to its use.—Weston v. County of Luce, 102 Mich. 528.

¶ 163. Declaration against township to recover money paid under protest for illegally assessed taxes is sufficiently specific if it states that the money was paid to the town under protest, and that the town received such money never having been entitled thereto.—Mills v. Township of Richland, 72 Mich. 100.

¶ 164. Where a township sues in assumpsit for the amount of township orders wrongfully obtained and used as money by defendant, the declaration need not be special.—Township of Buckeye v. Clark, 90 Mich. 432.

¶ 165. Where one had promised to pay for certain repairs which another was to have made and had refused to pay for them after they were made, it was held that in an action to recover the money the latter would be at liberty to declare upon the common counts without setting up special circumstances or stating the consideration, that being matter of evidence.—Crane v. Grassman, 27 Mich. 443.

¶ 166. It is not error to allow under the common counts proof that plaintiff had undertaken to log certain lands of defendant, that owing to inability to market the logs plaintiff became unable to carry out his contract, and that defendant thereupon took over all of the logging operations and supplies and agreed to pay plaintiff and plaintiff's debts in connection therewith, and to have the logs that were cut, where defendant was misled in no respect by such testimony; but it would have been better pleading to have stated that as matter of inducement to defendant's alleged promise to pay for the labor and supplies.—Howe v. Morey, 141 Mich. 383.

¶ 167. Where the count for use and occupation is omitted, the common counts for goods sold and delivered, work and materials, money lent, money paid, money had and received, and money found due on an accounting will not sustain recovery for the use of land demised at a specified yearly rental.—Heyerman v. Kanter, 36 Mich. 316.

¶ 168. A declaration in assumpsit for the value of personalty, where tort is waived, need not set forth the waiver.—Aldine Mfg. Co. v. Barnard, 84 Mich. 632.

¶ 169. A declaration in assumpsit for a conversion need not allege that plaintiff has waived the tort.—McDonald v. McDonald, 67 Mich. 122.

¶ 170. A count in assumpsit, waiving a tort on which it rests, may properly state the facts that constitute the tort, as they will have to be proved.—Tregent v. Marbe, 54 Mich. 226.

Pleading in actions under logging law, see Forestry, III.

¶ 173. Laws 1885, Act No. 165 (prior to its amendment in 1891, see How. St., § 8024), permitting one to waive a trespass on lands and bring assumpsit, only applies to cases where damages have been sustained, and the declaration must show that the damages accrued from the trespass. The action cannot rest upon any theory of a contract, as for use and occupation.—Lockwood v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 42 Mich. 536.

¶ 175. There can be no recovery under the common counts for fraud and deceit as provided in Comp. L. 1897, § 10421, unless the declaration refers to the statute or brings the case within its provisions by averment.—Anderson Carriage Co. v. Pungs, 134 Mich. 79.

¶ 176. Where a declaration is in assumpsit and upon the common counts, without reference to 3 Comp. L. 1897, § 11207, authorizing a recovery in assumpsit for certain trespasses upon land, plaintiff is not entitled to recover upon the theory that his action is based upon such statute.—Weidman v. Williams, 133 Mich. 82.

¶ 177. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10421, providing that assumpsit lies to recover damages for injuries in all cases where a person is injured by fraudulent representations or conduct, while it would be better practice to refer to the statute, a declaration setting up representations claimed to be false and fraudulent and in which deceit will lie is sufficient to support a judgment, although in the form of an action for breach of contract.—Hallet v. Gordon, 128 Mich. 364.

In general, see Pleading, V.

Variance from cause particularized, see post § 53 et seq.

Bill of particulars under common counts as sufficient allegation of assignment, see Assignments, § 33.

¶ 178. In a suit for money had and received it is not necessary that the bill of particulars put in by plaintiff contain credit items covering payments made by defendant. —Cairbre v. McQuillen, 162 Mich. 679.

¶ 179. In an action of assumpsit to recover advances made on contracts, one of which was mutually abandoned, and the other repudiated by defendant, a bill of particulars specifying that the money was "lent" to defendant, while not technically correct, is sufficient where defendant's plea and notice show that he fully understood what was meant, and hence was not taken by surprise.—Murphy v. Dalton, 129 Mich. 79.

In action on negotiable paper, see Negotiable Instruments, XIV.

¶ 180. The general issue in assumpsit, as a general rule, denies and puts in issue every fact and combination of facts essential to the plaintiff's cause of action as set up in the declaration.—Wilson v. Wagar, 26 Mich. 452.

¶ 181. Plea of the general issue to an implied assumpsit denies the cause of action altogether, and leaves the plaintiff to prove not only performance but the understanding on which it was based. It would be different if only payment or other discharge were pleaded.—Berringer v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 41 Mich. 305.

¶ 182. Defenses to an action of assumpsit going to the existence of any promise having legal force are admissible under the general issue.—Snyder v. Willey, 33 Mich. 483.

¶ 183. Under the general issue in an action for price, defendant may prove that the article delivered was not the article he purchased.—Grieb v. Cole, 60 Mich. 397.

¶ 184. In assumpsit for the sale of chattels, evidence that they were sold in violation of the United States revenue laws is admissible under the general issue.—Dean v. Chapin, 22 Mich. 275.

¶ 185. In pleading the statutory general issue to a declaration upon the money counts on an accepted order, it is proper to show, without giving special notice of such a defense, that the instrument sued on was never valid, as, by evidence that the sole consideration for it was the sale of spirituous liquors, contrary to the prohibitory law.—Hill v. Callaghan, 31 Mich. 424.

¶ 186. In an action upon the common counts for use and occupation the tenant can, under the general issue, set up a new agreement.—Conkling v. Tuttle, 52 Mich. 630.

¶ 188. The claim of an exposition commissioner intrusted to prepare an exhibit that, though he was the agent of the state, and the money he received and for which he was being sued in assumpsit by the state, was state money, the state was not in position to claim such money, and that if he was liable at all, it was because as an officer of the state he had failed to account for moneys which he had received to disburse as such officer under How. St., § 309, was not tenable; since it sufficiently appeared that the defendant, by pleading the general issue, denying all indebtedness, refused to recognize the state as interested in such fund. —People v. Swineford, 77 Mich. 573.

¶ 189. In an action to recover the proportionate share of the expense of running logs, under Comp. L. 1897, chap. 129, the defendants who were driving at the same time may prove an agreement under which their services balance plaintiff's, under a plea of the general issue.—Bellows v. Crane Lumber Co., 126 Mich. 476.

¶ 190. Where a contract for work to be done by plaintiff calls for payment in notes, a claim that defendant never gave the notes called for by the contract requires that the contract should be sued on, and cannot be considered in a suit for the value of the work. —Whitaker v. Kilroy, 70 Mich. 635.

¶ 192. In an action where the declaration was on the common counts in assumpsit, and a bill of particulars was filed stating an account between plaintiff and defendant for items furnished defendant, evidence is not admissible that the account for items was furnished to defendant's deceased husband and that defendant promised to pay the bill if plaintiff would not make expense and would release the estate.—Hosken v. Carr, 147 Mich. 633.

¶ 193. A declaration charging a defendant with receiving lumber as plaintiff's agent to sell, and with collecting and not paying over the proceeds, cannot be supported by proof of a sale of the lumber to defendant, and the partial non-payment of the price by him as original purchaser.—Peppler v. Ratz, 38 Mich. 96.

¶ 194. A declaration on the common counts will not support a claim to recover for six months' services at $125, upon evidence of an express agreement for two years' employment at $1,500 a year, if satisfactory to the employer.—Kalamazoo Novelty Mfg. Works v. Macalister, 40 Mich. 84.

¶ 195. A charge for money lent, in a bill of particulars, will not warrant evidence of the loan of a United States bond, but only of coin, bank-bills or some well known circulating medium popularly designated as money.—Waterman v. Waterman, 34 Mich. 490.

¶ 196. Under the count for money paid to defendant's use, plaintiff can put in evidence a note given by defendant, and secured by chattel mortgage upon horses which plaintiff afterward purchased of him, and to save which plaintiff paid the note, taking an assignment of the debt and security. Such note is also admissible under the count for money had and received.—Brown v. McHugh, 35 Mich. 50.

¶ 197. Under a bill of particulars limiting plaintiff's demands to pay for services rendered and money lent defendant, recovery cannot be had for money had and received by defendant for plaintiff's use.—Feiertag v. Feiertag, 73 Mich. 297.

¶ 198. In a suit for money had and received, plaintiff may testify as to payments made by defendant, although such items do not appear in the bill of particulars. It need not show credit items.—Cairbre v. McQuillen, 162 Mich. 679.

¶ 199. Where no objection is made to the form of action in an action of assumpsit to recover a judgment for the value of a second-hand automobile which defendant has lawfully received and wrongfully detained after cancellation of a contract for the sale of an automobile by defendant under which plaintiff was to turn in the second-hand car as part payment, both the question of title and right of possession may be tried as well as in an action of trover on defendant's denial of ownership and possession.—McDonald v. Young, 198 Mich. 620.

¶ 200. Defendant agreed to purchase certain wood of plaintiff. Plaintiff cut the wood and a portion of it was attacked by fire while lying in plaintiff's timber, undelivered. Plaintiff without the request of defendant rendered services in fighting the fire and sent defendant a bill of thirty-six dollars therefor. Defendant in a statement in which it failed to credit plaintiff with the proper amount of money due him credited plaintiff with this item. Held, plaintiff could not recover the thirty-six dollars in a suit in assumpsit for the price of the wood.—Kelley v. East Jordan Chemical Co., 162 Mich. 525.

§ 54. ——As to joint or several liability.

See generally Negotiable Instruments, XIV.

¶ 203. A declaration on the common counts with copy of a negotiable instrument appended is equivalent to an assertion that plaintiff is entitled to sue upon it in manner and form as set out.—Wilcox v. Sweet, 24 Mich. 355.

§ 56. ——Under special counts.

Proof of express contract under common counts, see ante § 53, ¶ 194.

Immateriality of variance where common counts cover the proof, see post § 57.

Declaring on express agreement and proving implied one, see Contracts, X; Sales, VIII, IX.

¶ 204. One cannot recover under a special count upon a promise which it does not count on.—Beecher v. Pettee, 40 Mich. 181.

¶ 205. Where a plaintiff especially pleads a written contract as evidencing her right to recover, she cannot base said right upon implied rights springing up outside the terms of the written instrument.—Hickey v. Lundy, 168 Mich. 336.

§ 57. ——Under joinder of special and common counts.

Admissibility of instrument under common counts joined with the special count, see post ¶ 230.

¶ 206. Where no special counts are needed in an action on a contract, in which both special and common counts are used, the objection that the contract as proved differs from that set forth in the special count is unimportant. Even if the contract were void recovery might be had upon the common counts.—Fuller v. Rice, 52 Mich. 435.

¶ 207. Where a plaintiff brought an action in assumpsit and filed a declaration with a special count and the common counts for money, the special count averring that the defendants were officers of a corporation with whom he entered into an optional contract for the purchase of their property and that he had paid $1,000, and that there had been fraudulent representations on the part of the defendants, by filing a bill of particulars for the $1,000 paid and interest thereon; plaintiff was not limited in his proofs to the common counts, and he could show that he was induced by the false statements to enter into the contract and had parted with his money through such misstatements. —Gubbins v. Ashley, 146 Mich. 453.

¶ 208. An attorney was sued upon common and special counts for his client's share of a judgment that he had agreed to collect for a certain compensation, which the testimony showed he was to be paid if he collected it without any compromise. The claim was compromised, however, by another person, who had an assignment of the judgment. held that the case should have been submitted to the jury upon the count for money had and received instead of the special counts which the proofs did not support, and that the defendant should have been allowed to prove as a setoff the value of his services and his disbursements in attempting to collect the judgment.—Dustin v. Radford, 57 Mich. 163.

¶ 209. A declaration in assumpsit contained general counts for work done and money paid, and a special count on a contract by defendant to pay plaintiff a certain sum for his services. The case was tried on the theory of a special count and the value of plaintiff's services was not shown. Held, that plaintiff, though the services were admitted, could not recover under the general counts.—Wyatt v. Herring, 90 Mich. 581.

¶ 210. Where the first two counts of a declaration allege guaranty of payment of a note, etc., and the third count is a common count in assumpsit, with copy of the note annexed, and an alleged indorsement on the back by defendant without guaranty over it, refusal to exclude the note under the third count as variance between declaration and proof is unimportant, as it was admissible under the other counts.—Roberts v. Hawkins, 70 Mich. 566.

¶ 211. Where the declaration contains a special count as well as the common counts, the introduction of a note in evidence under the common counts without objection will not preclude raising the objection that it varies from the special count.—Freeman v. Ellison, 37 Mich. 459.

¶ 212. Where a declaration in assumpsit is only on the common counts, damages for a breach of contract cannot be recovered thereunder.—Detroit River Transit Co. v. Aldrich, 176 Mich. 857.

¶ 213. An action on the common counts will not lie where proof of the breach of a contract is necessary to recovery.—Phippen v. Morehouse, 50 Mich. 537.

¶ 214. Money due upon a contract that has been fully performed is recoverable under the common counts; but the breach of a special contract cannot be shown in such action.—Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 80.

V. EVIDENCE.

§ 59. Burden of proof.

General rule as to burden, and general presumptions, see Evidence, II.

Burden of particular issues, see generally Contracts, X; and see topics treating of the issue presented, e. g., Payment; Fraud; Duress; etc.

¶ 215. Where the plaintiff in assumpsit relies upon the liability of the defendant which the law implies from facts and circumstances, it is just as essential to a recovery to prove all the facts and circumstances which create the liability alleged in the declaration as it is where a special contract is declared on to prove the contract as alleged. —Michigan Southern & Northern I. R. Co. v. McDonough, 21 Mich. 165.

¶ 216. When goods are purchased by another person without authority and are brought into a merchant's store without his knowledge or consent, and placed upon his shelves, there must be some evidence that he sold the goods and received the money therefor in order to make him liable to the vendor in an action for money had and received to his use.—Lesher v. Loudon, 85 Mich. 52.

¶ 217. An action to recover back $6 per car load for freight paid under protest at the rate of $22 per car for lumber transported by a railroad company, based on an alleged contract that, in consideration that plaintiff would build a mill and cause the pine timber on his lands near by to be sawed thereat and furnish the lumber to the company for transportation, the company would carry the same for $16 per car, will fail in the absence of evidence that such an undertaking, binding on the company, was in fact made. —Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Edwards, 33 Mich. 16.

¶ 218. Where a party sues for the repayment of money paid under protest, and the defendant claims the amount under color of right, as having been paid out by him for plaintiff's benefit, the plaintiff has the burden of proving that defendant has no right to it; and if he does not do so the question of the admissibility of the receipt taken by defendant in proof of his payment becomes immaterial.—Congdon v. Preston, 49 Mich. 204.

¶ 219. A defendant in an action for money had and received, who admits the receipt of the money, must establish his affirmative defense by a preponderance of evidence.—Dillon v. Pinch, 110 Mich. 149.

¶ 220. Where it is proved that a certain sum was placed in defendant's hands to be expended for a specific purpose, and he has refused to account for it, the burden in assumpsit is upon him to show that it has been so expended, or what disposition has been made thereof.—People v. Swineford, 77 Mich. 573.

Issues presented and variance, see ante §§ 52-58.

[Note. So far as concerns the admissibility of evidence to prove particular facts, see topics treating of the contract or fact in question, e. g., Contracts, X; Sales, VIII, IX; Fraud; Mistake; and the like.]

Competency of evidence in general, such as best and secondary, opinions and conclusions, hearsay, documents, etc., see Evidence.

Evidence of values of goods or services, see Values.

¶ 221. An arrangement was made whereby A. was to deduct from the wages of his workmen the amounts due for goods sold to them by B.; but A., after making such deduction, with the consent of the workmen, refused to pay the same to B. Held, that B. had an action against A. for money had and received; that written statements of accounts furnished by A. were admissible against him under the bill of particulars, and that a question asked B. as to how much A. owed him was not necessarily improper, as being too general, especially where it appeared that details were gone into, and evidence of items submitted that was not given in the record. —Donkersley v. Levy, 38 Mich. 54.

¶ 223. One who is sued under the common counts for advertising done for him by plaintiff, cannot object to the introduction of testimony on the ground that the advertising was done under a written contract.—Record Pub. Co. v. Merwin, 115 Mich. 10.

¶ 224. The firm of A. & B., through B., borrowed from Mrs. B. and gave notes to other persons whom A. supposed to be the lenders. Two of these notes were payable to C. In a suit by Mrs. B. for the money lent, it was held inadmissible for A. to show in defense that he had made an arrangement with C. whereby the latter was to look to B. for payment of one of the notes, if he, A., would pay the other, and that he did pay it. C.'s promise was nudum pactum.—Smith v. Van Tine, 39 Mich. 491.

ing upon the land which he conveys, the rest of the debt being assumed by B., it is immaterial, as affecting A.'s liability to reimburse B. for money paid by the latter on the debt in excess of the amount so assumed, whether or not A. agreed to apply a certain fund in part payment of the debt. —Cummings v. Callahan, 104 Mich. 76.

¶ 226. The theory of rescission is properly excluded in an action to recover money paid on a contract alleged to have been fraudulently obtained, where no notice of rescission and offer to put defendant in statu quo was made until after the trial had begun.—Barbour v. Hurlburt, 137 Mich. 534.

§ 61. ——Written instruments; notes and bills.

¶ 227. A non-negotiable note not purporting to be for value received may be given in evidence under the common counts.—Rickey v. Morrison, 69 Mich, 139.

¶ 228. In a suit by the payee named in a note promising to pay money and containing a power of attorney to confess judgment, where a copy of the note is attached to the common counts with a notice that it constitutes plaintiff's sole cause of action, such note is admissible in evidence under the common counts.—Conrad Seipp Brewing Co. v. McKittrick, 86 Mich. 191.

¶ 230. Where a declaration to recover, because of misrepresentations, the amount paid for a contract appointing plaintiff general agent in certain counties, counted specially on the contract, mentioning the counties, and generally on the common counts, and the proofs showed that the contract had by subsequent agreement been changed by substituting other counties, the contract as changed was properly admitted in evidence because it was admissible under the common counts. —Angell v. Loomis, 97 Mich. 5.

¶ 231. Testimony tending to show the market value of plaintiff's services rendered under a contract void under the statute of frauds, the contract price being in dispute, is admissible under the quantum meruit.—Moore v. Capewell Horse Nail Co., 76 Mich. 606.

¶ 232. In an action by a father to recover on the quantum meruit for his minor son's services to defendant, evidence is admissible to show that in the course of the service the son embezzled from defendant more than the worth of such service.—Schoenberg v. Voigt, 36 Mich. 310.

¶ 233. Testimony showing a breach of a contract of employment, and damages because thereof, is inadmissible under a declaration on the common counts in assumpsit for work and labor performed for defendant at his request.—Loranger v. Davidson, 110 Mich. 605.

¶ 234. In an action to recover the reasonable value of services rendered by the plaintiff, the defendant may not show for what sum he might have hired others to render such services.—Ruttle v. Foss, 161 Mich. 132.

¶ 235. In an action to recover the reasonable value of services rendered by plaintiff to defendant in adjusting certain coal leases belonging to the latter, evidence of the quantity of coal in a field covered by one of the leases is inadmissible.—Ruttle v. Foss, 161 Mich. 132.

¶ 236. In an action to recover the reasonable value of services rendered by plaintiff to defendant, evidence of the character and value of plaintiff's previous employment is inadmissible.—Ruttle v. Foss, 161 Mich. 132.

§ 63. Weight and sufficiency.

See also ante ¶ 51.
To warrant direction of verdict or make question for jury, see post § 64.

[Note. The weight and sufficiency of the evidence to prove a given cause of action is generally treated in the topic relating thereto, e. g., Contracts, X; Sales, VIII, IX; and similar topics.]

Requisites and proof of accounts stated, see Account Stated.

¶ 237. An action on the common counts for money had and received to the plaintiff's use from the estate of plaintiff's father is supported by evidence that the father had assigned his property to another person in consideration that the latter should take care of his children; that the assignee had transferred the trust to defendant and paid him a certain sum of money for the children, defendant agreeing to pay each its proportion on becoming of age, and that he had not done so, and plaintiff had brought suit for her share on learning the facts.—Hosford v. Kanouse, 45 Mich. 620.

¶ 238. B., on dissolution of the firm of H. & B., assigned to H. all the assets, including a government claim which was afterwards paid by a draft receipted by B. in the firm name; it was held that, without producing the draft in evidence, H. could recover of B. the amount on parol proof that B. had so disposed of the draft as to enable another to collect and withhold the avails from H. Proof that B. had actually received the money is unnecessary; B. is estopped from denying it.—Bullard v. Hascall, 25 Mich. 132.

VI. TRIAL, VERDICT AND JUDGMENT.

§ 64. Questions of fact and directing verdict.

General law of instructions, see Instructions.
Particular instructions, see Contracts, X; Sales, VIII, IX; and like topics.
As to direction of verdict, see generally Directing Verdict; and see also specific topics, e. g., Contracts, X; Sales, VIII, IX.

¶ 239. Where there was a contract to remove buildings from land, and a deed to the land recited that the removal was a part of the consideration for the deed, but the undisputed evidence was that other things were the sole consideration for the deed and that the promise to remove the buildings was not based on the deed, the court should rule as matter of law that the person removing them under the contract was entitled to be paid; and in action on the common counts for work and labor should instruct for a verdict accordingly.—Cutler v. Spens, 191 Mich. 603.

¶ 241. In a suit for services rendered by plaintiff's testator to defendant there was evidence that the testator was employed as private secretary for defendant's father who occupied the same offices with defendant; that the testator did outside work for others than his employer; that he sent a bill to defendant for services; and that defendant without accepting or rejecting the same returned it to the testator for correction, with the remark that the testator had omitted to charge for drawing his breath. There was no evidence of an express agreement between the testator and defendant. Held, that the trial court erroneously directed a verdict for defendant and should have submitted the case to the jury.—McCain v. Smith, 164 Mich. 683.

¶ 242. In assumpsit for money had and received, where it appeared that plaintiff, who was of age, and was living with defendant, her step-mother, was, during all the time covered by the declaration, engaged in dressmaking, and that defendant received her earnings, disputed questions of fact as the amount of such earnings, the agreement under which defendant received them, and the periodical settlements claimed by defendant to have been made, were for the jury to determine.—Feiertag v. Feiertag, 80 Mich. 489.

¶ 244. In an action of assumpsit to recover money alleged to have been misappropriated by defendant while a clerk in plaintiff's store, evidence, in addition to proof of specific items, that the profits were less though the volume of business was greater and the cost of running it were less, and that defendant had expended and accumulated sums largely in excess of the salary received, raises a question for the jury whether sums in excess of the specific items mentioned, had been misappropriated.—Adams v. Elseffer, 132 Mich. 100.

§ 65. Verdict and findings and judgment.

See generally, Verdicts; Judgments.
Right to have conclusions of law specially found, see Verdicts and Findings, VII.

¶ 245. Where in a suit to recover for personal services rendered, the jury, in answer to special questions, find that there was no agreement that defendant should compensate plaintiff either by an interest in certain leases, by stock, or by cash, such finding does not exclude the possibility of an implied contract to pay the reasonable value of such services.—Ruttle v. Foss, 161 Mich. 132.

¶ 246. In a common assumpsit for the original amount of a compounded debt, which plaintiff claims is all due because of the breach of the composition agreement, the judgment should be for the balance due under the composition on proof that there was no actionable breach of it and no good tender of the balance by the debtor or any sufficient payment into court for plaintiff's benefit; and a judgment for defendant is error, though the composition as proved prevents judgment for the full amount.—Browning v. Crouse, 40 Mich. 339.

¶ 4. ¶ 7. The defendant was a private institution for the detention of wayward girls. It kept its inmates from escape, and made them work without pay. It was designated by Act No. 271, Pub. Acts 1885, as a place to which the courts might commit girls convicted of certain offenses. Held, it was not such a governmental agency as would exempt it from liability for illegal detention of an infant.—Galvin v. House of Good Shepherd, 158 Mich. 361.

I. GENERAL NATURE AND REQUISITES.

§ 1. In general; construction and policy of the statutes.

Policy as to dissolution proceedings, see post § 115.

¶ 2. Attachment is a harsh and extraordinary remedy, unknown to the common law, and the statutory provisions therefor must be strictly construed, and cannot be extended beyond their terms.—Galloway v. Holmes, 1 D. 330; Welles v. Mayor, etc., of City of Detroit, 2 D. 77; Greenvault v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan, 2 D. 498; Buckley v. Lowry, 2 Mich. 418; Tannahill v. Tuttle, 3 Mich. 104; Roelofson v. Hatch, 3 Mich. 277; Brigham v. Eglinton, 7 Mich. 291; King v. Harrington, 14 Mich. 532; Cross v. McMaken, 17 Mich. 511; Barker v. Thorn, 20 Mich. 264; Macumber v. Beam, 22 Mich. 395; Millar v. Babcock, 29 Mich. 526; Adams v. Abram, 38 Mich. 302; Mathews v. Densmore, 43 Mich. 461, reversed 109 U. S. 216, 27 L. ed 912, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 126; Van Norman v. Jackson County Circuit Judge, 45 Mich. 204; Fairbanks v. Bennett, 52 Mich. 61; Borland v. Kingsbury, 65 Mich. 59; Steere v. Vanderberg, 67 Mich. 530; Langtry v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 68 Mich. 451; Drake v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 69 Mich. 168; Nugent v. Nugent, 70 Mich. 52; Estlow v. Hanna, 75 Mich. 219; Jaffray v. Jennings, 101 Mich. 515; Cary v. Everett, 107 Mich. 654.

¶ 3. Statutory attachment proceedings are in derogation of the common law, and the statute must be strictly complied with.—Dutcher v. Grand Rapids Fire Ins. Co., 131 Mich. 671.

¶ 4. Proceedings by attachment are entirely statutory in their inception, and the statute must be looked to in order to ascertain their requisites. They have no foundation outside of statutes, and must therefore in all things essential, conform to them.—Knack v. Berlin, 150 Mich. 550.

¶ 5. Proceedings by attachment are statutory in their inception, and as such are to be strictly construed.—De Carie v. Marks, 171 Mich. 167.

Necessity of affidavit to give jurisdiction, see post § 22, ¶ 49.
Mode of levy under Log Lien Law, and service requisite to complete jurisdiction, see post VI, A-C; and post § 80, 83.
Requisites of writ for attachment of logs, see post § 46.
Jurisdictional amount involved under Log Lien Act, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14849.

¶ 6. Attachment proceedings under the log lien law are purely statutory and must be followed substantially.—Davison v. Davison, 99 Mich. 625.

§ 3. Jurisdiction and venue of the writ.

Acquiring jurisdiction for personal judgment or for entry of default and judgment against the property, see post VII, XII.
Combining claims to give jurisdiction under Log Lien Law, see Forestry, III.
Necessity of strict procedure, see ante §§ 1, 2.
Necessity of affidavit, see post § 22.
Necessity of averments as to county of residence, see post § 27.
Place for levy, see post § 49.
Effect of dissolution to oust jurisdiction, see post § 125.
Effect of want of jurisdictional amount on priority of resultant judgment over other attachment, see post § 98.
County in which to apply for dissolution when commissioner is disqualified, see post ¶ 301.
Right to sue in attachment to gain venue not otherwise open, see Venue.
Jurisdiction of action between nonresidents on foreign cause, see Courts, V.
Necessary jurisdictional amount in controversy, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 13032.

¶ 7. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10555, providing that any creditor shall be entitled to proceed by attachment against a non-resident debtor in the circuit court of any county where property of the debtor subject to attachment may be found, jurisdiction may be obtained in this state of an action to which all parties are non-residents, where the subject matter is a note executed in the state of such parties, valid in that state, but which would have been invalid if made in this state.—State Bank of Eldorado v. Maxson, 123 Mich. 250.

¶ 8. How. St., § 7986, requires attachment proceedings to be begun in the county where one of the parties resides, if the debtor has property there, unless the debtor is a nonresident of the state.—Stringer v. Dean, 61 Mich. 196; Schloss v. Joslyn, 61 Mich. 267.

¶ 9. The writ of attachment must, under the statute, be sued out in the county where one of the parties resides, if the debtor has property there, and the fact that the property in the defendant's county of residence is land that is claimed to be encumbered to its full value does not alter the rule.—Schloss v. Joslyn, 61 Mich. 267.

¶ 10. Under How. St., § 8137, as amended by Laws 1887, Act. No. 242, attachment may issue against a domestic corporation other than a railroad or navigation company, in the county of its location, in favor of one also a resident of that county, in like cases as in suits between individuals; though before the amendment no substituted service could be made on such a corporation in other than the county of its home office.—Michigan Dairy Co. v. Runnels, 96 Mich. 109.

Commencement of the action, see post § 5.
Completion of procedure by filing declaration and serving on person, see post § 77 et seq.
Filing the declaration to complete the action, see post § 77.

¶ 11. To entitle a party to commence a suit by attachment he must have a cause of action at the time he makes his affidavit and sues out his writ; he cannot declare for one accruing afterwards.—Galloway v. Holmes, 1 D. 330; Hale v. Chandler, 3 Mich. 531; and see Hinchman v. Town, 10 Mich. 508.

¶ 12. The filing of a statement of lien is a condition precedent to the right to maintain a suit by attachment under the Log Lien Law.—Eales v. Francis, 115 Mich. 636.

Filing the declaration, see post § 77.
Inception of lien, see post § 91.
Commencement of actions for limitation purposes, see Limitations of Actions, V.

¶ 13. An attachment proceeding is begun when the writ issues, not when the declaration is filed.—Galloway v. Holmes, 1 D. 330.

II. GROUNDS AND OCCASION FOR ATTACHMENT.

§ 6. In general; nature of the cause of action.

Necessity for existing cause of action, see ante § 4.
Against joint parties, necessity of grounds good against all, see post § 20.
Averments and description in affidavit, see post, §§ 23-25.
Averments of grounds where debt is not yet due, see post § 29.
Necessary and sufficient averments in log lien attachments, see post § 30.
Dissolution for want of good cause or because grounds averred do not exist, see post §§ 112, 113.
Quashal of writ for insufficiency of cause as declared on, see post ¶ 290.
In justice's courts, see Justices of the Peace, IV, C.
Inhibition against replevin of attached goods, see Replevin, I.
General statute defining grounds, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 1, Comp. L. 1915, § 13028.
Against joint parties, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 33; Comp. L. 1915, § 13060.
Provisions where action is on tort, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 22; Comp. L. 1915, § 13049.
In actions for trespass on lands waived to sue in assumpsit, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 44; Comp. L. 1915, § 13071.
After action is begun, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 36; Comp. L. 1915, § 13063.
On debts not yet due, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 35; Comp. L. 1915, § 13062.
Under Log Lien Law, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14847.

¶ 14. The remedy by attachment is not limited to the case of liquidated damages; it may be based upon demand arising ex contractu, the amount of which is capable of ascertainment by some standard referable to the contract itself, sufficiently certain to enable the plaintiff by his affidavit to aver it, in the words of the statute, "as near as may be," or a jury to find it.—Roelofson v. Hatch, 3 Mich. 277.

¶ 15. Where by reference to the contract, the amount of damages for its breach are reasonably ascertainable, the remedy of attachment under the attachment statutes lies.—Showen v. J. L. Owens Co., 158 Mich. 321.

§ 8. Fraud, concealment or absconding.

Absconding, defined, see also post ¶ 352.
Sufficiency of averments of grounds in affidavit see post §§ 27-29.
Evidence on motion to dissolve, see post §§ 122-124.

¶ 17. Where, at the time plaintiff agreed to indorse certain paper for defendant, amounting to about $1,000 as represented, the latter represented her other indebtedness to be $1,200, whereas it was really more than $3,000, the fact that plaintiff indorsed paper such as agreed to the amount of $1,800, not knowing that there was more of it which defendant had secretly paid from the proceeds of her stock in trade, thereby depleted, did not show part of the claim was with notice and hence unaffected by the fraud, and prevent plaintiff's right to an attachment as for fraud for all sums for which he had become liable and which, by the agreement between plaintiff and defendant, were due and payable from the latter to the former.—May v. Newman, 95 Mich. 501.

¶ 18. Application of the proceeds of a mortgage in preference of such creditors as came into a composition agreement to discharge liabilities as indorser is not a fraud on other creditors.—Iosco County Sav. Bank v. Barnes, 100 Mich. 1.

¶ 19. The intent to defraud must be found to exist as a fact in order to maintain the writ of attachment. It is not enough to show that the debtor has conveyed or mortgaged his property to pay or secure honest debts to one creditor excluding others.—First Nat. Bank v. Steele, 81 Mich. 93.

§ 9. Disposal of property.

By corporation, see post § 11.
Sufficiency of averments of grounds, see post §§ 27-29.

¶ 20. Attachment proceedings cannot properly rest on the ground merely that the debtor's mortgagees in possession are, with his assent, selling his stock at private sale instead of at auction, as provided in the mortgage, and are closing out the remnant at barter.—Densmore v. Mathews, 58 Mich. 616.

¶ 21. Attachment cannot be based upon a debtor's executing chattel mortgages to secure bona fide creditors, or to procure money actually used in payment of honest debts, though such mortgages cut off, and are intended to cut off, another creditor's redress.—Gore v. Ray, 73 Mich. 385.

¶ 22. Those who sell goods while a chattel mortgage by the buyer is withheld from file are not in fact defrauded so as to warrant attachment, their rights not being jeoparded by the mortgage; and such attachment based on that ground should be dissolved because the mortgage was void under How. St., § 6193.—Lord v. Wirt, 96 Mich. 415.

¶ 23. Evidence of circumstances indicating that the debtor's property is being disposed of, or seized by others, and that there is danger that the creditor may lose his claim, is sufficient to justify the allowance of the writ before the maturity of the debt under Pub. Acts 1889, No. 149.—Mosher v. Bay Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 503.

¶ 24. One who stays most of his time in this state, but claims that his home is in another state from which he came, and where his wife lives, and who frequently visits and lives with her, is a non-resident subject to attachment.—Loder v. Littlefield, 39 Mich. 512.

§ 11. Against corporations.

Proper county, see ante ¶ 10.
Proper procedure for writ, see post § 22, ¶ 49a.
Sufficiency of averments of grounds, see post § 27, ¶ 70a.
Attachability of shares and certificates, see post § 14.
Against corporations, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 13030.

¶ 25. How. St., §§ 7986, 7987, providing that any creditor shall be entitled to proceed by attachment against "his debtor" in the circuit court of the county in which either of them shall reside, etc., and that an affidavit shall set out the cause for issuing an attachment (among the causes being that the debtor is a foreign corporation), embrace domestic corporations in the term "debtor"; but in the case of a domestic corporation the cause shown by the affidavit must be one of those grounds, e. g., fraudulently transferring its property; which it might do by or through its agents.—Michigan Dairy Co. v. Runnels, 96 Mich. 109.

III. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO ATTACHMENT.

§ 12. In general; contingent and immature rights.

Right to release attached crops on bonds, see post ¶ 161.
Property subject to levy in general, see Executions, IV; Exemptions.

¶ 27. Any property subject to execution is subject also to attachment.—King v. Hubbell, 42 Mich. 597.

¶ 28. Growing crops may be attached.—King v. Moore, 10 Mich. 538.

§ 13. Choses in action; book accounts.

¶ 29. While books of account may be evidences of debt, their seizure on a writ of attachment is not the attaching or seizure of the debt itself, nor are they so intimately connected with the demands charged therein as to make the seizure of the books equivalent to the seizure of the demands; and there is no means by which such demands can be transferred by a direct levy and sale.—Rosenthal v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 98 Mich. 208.

Transfer of shares by execution and sale in general, see Corporations, XXIV, B.

¶ 30. An attachment cannot be levied upon corporate stock where the defendant has regularly assigned his interest therein.—Van Norman v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 45 Mich. 204.

¶ 31. Shares of stock in which the debtor has only a beneficial interest, and the legal title to which is vested in a third person as trustee, are not subject to attachment.—Gypsum, Plaster & Stucco Co. v. Kent Circuit Judge, 97 Mich. 631.

¶ 32. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 7009, 7012, 7020, 10335, 10336, 10339, 10562 (How. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 7798, 7801, 7809, 13036, 13037, 13040, 13363), the shares of stock in a mining company are personal property, transferable on the books of the company, and the share or interest of a stockholder may be taken in execution or reached by attachment, a copy of the execution or attachment being left by the officer with the clerk, treasurer, or cashier of the company.—Jellenik v. Huron Copper Mining Co., 177 U. S. 1, 44 L. ed. 647, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 559, reversing 82 Fed. 778.

¶ 33. Prior to Laws 1861, Act. No. 214 (see How. St., § 7682), mortgaged goods and chattels were not subject to seizure and sale against the mortgagor except during the time he was entitled to retain possession by express agreement with the mortgagee, but they may now be taken.—Tannahill v. Tuttle, 3 Mich. 104; Eggleston v. Mundy, 4 Mich. 295; Bacon v. Kimmel, 14 Mich. 201; Haynes v. Leppig, 40 Mich. 602; King v. Hubbell, 42 Mich. 597.

¶ 34. In the case of a chattel mortgage the mortgagee's possession does not invalidate an attachment levy.—Barber v. Smith, 41 Mich. 138.

¶ 35. A mortgagee of chattels, like an attaching creditor, has only a lien thereon until sale, but under How. St., § 7682, a creditor can levy an attachment on mortgaged property at any time before foreclosure, but only to get control of the equity of redemption, which pertains to the whole and is not apportionable.—Wilson v. Montague, 57 Mich. 638.

¶ 36. The right to the possession of real estate for a term of years, if subject to execution at all, must be as a chattel interest and not as real estate.—Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 453.

¶ 37. The interest of a mortgagee in lands is not subject to attachment.—Columbia Bank v. Jacobs, 10 Mich. 349.

§ 18. Equitable interests in land.

Trust estates, see post § 19.
Mortgagee's interest, see ante § 17.

¶ 38. The whole interest of the purchaser of land under an executory contract having been assigned in good faith and the assignee being in possession, such interest cannot be attached by a creditor for a debt assumed before the assignment even though the creditor may have been ignorant of the assignment.—Dumas v. Geer, 144 Mich. 377.

§ 19. Trust property and estates.

¶ 39. Trust estates in lands are not liable to attachment.—Trask v. Green, 9 Mich. 358; Maynard v. Hoskins, 9 Mich. 485; Gorham v. Wing, 10 Mich. 486.

¶ 40. The estate of a cestui que trust is not subject to attachment or execution.—Feldman v. Preston, 194 Mich. 352.

¶ 41. Trust property held by a trustee is not subject to direct attack and seizure by attachment for his personal liability or debts contracted as trustee.—Feldman v. Preston, 194 Mich. 352.

¶ 42. The equitable interest of a trustee in trust property, consisting of a lien thereon for earned compensation or advances made to the trust estate by him, is not subject to attachment in an action against him individually and as trustee.—Feldman v. Preston, 194 Mich. 352.

Averment in affidavit as to cause of action, see post § 24.

¶ 43. An attachment against partnership property is unauthorized unless grounds for issuing it exist against all the partners. And the separate property of one partner cannot be attached unless a cause for issuing the writ against him is shown by the affidavit.—Edwards v. Hughes, 20 Mich. 289.

¶ 44. A levy on a partner's interest, if it can be made at all, cannot be made on specific chattels.—Haynes v. Knowles, 36 Mich. 407.

§ 21. Exemptions and property exempted.

Appraisal and selection, see post § 56.
Immateriality of question of exemptions in action for wrongful attachment, see post ¶ 399.
What property is exempt, see Exemptions.
Homesteads, and exemptions of homesteads, see Homesteads.
Applicability of exemption laws, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 8; Comp. L. 1915. § 13035.

¶ 46. Attachment will not run for property exempt from execution, such as a horse, wagon and harness used in defendant's business and transferred by him to a third person, whether absolutely or by way of security.—Emerson v. Bacon, 58 Mich. 526.

IV. PROCEDURE TO OBTAIN WRIT.

A. AFFIDAVIT, APPLICATION AND ALLOWANCE.

Necessity of strict conformity to statute, see ante §§ 1, 2.
Positiveness of affidavit, averments on information and belief, see post § 31.
Affidavits by agents, see post § 32.
Title and caption of affidavit, see post § 33.
Oath, jurat and signature of affidavit, see post § 34.
Filing and indorsements, see post § 35.
Amendments, see post § 36.
Application for second writ, see post § 37.
For attachment under Log Lien Act, see post § 30.
Mode of challenging truth of affidavit, see post § 109.
Waiver of objections by appearance and plea, see post § 107.
Affidavit as proper evidence in suit for wrongful attachment, see post § 144.
Affidavit of publication, see post § 89.
Under the Log Lien Act, necessity for statement with affidavit, see also Forestry, III.
Before justices, see Justices of the Peace, IV, C.
Statutory contents, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13029.
On attachment for trespass to lands, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, §§ 44, 45; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13071, 13072.

¶ 47. The affidavit is essential to the jurisdiction, and the statutory requirements therefor must be strictly complied with.—Wight v. Warner, 1 D. 384; Greenvault v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan, 2 D. 498; Wilson v. Arnold, 5 Mich. 98; Goodrich v. Burdick, 26 Mich. 39; Wells v. Parker, 26 Mich. 102; Mathews v. Densmore, 43 Mich. 461, reversed 109 U. S. 216, 27 L. ed. 912, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 126; Borland v. Kingsbury, 65 Mich. 59; Burnside v. Davis, 65 Mich. 74; Estlow v. Hanna, 75 Mich. 219.

¶ 48. There can be no valid writ of attachment without a sufficient affidavit.—Beebe v. Morrell, 76 Mich. 114.

¶ 49. The affidavit for attachment under the Log Lien Act is jurisdictional, and if it omits any material statutory allegation it will afford no protection to the officer executing the writ.—Woodruff v. Ives, 34 Mich. 320.

As to joint liability, see post § 24.
As to amount due, see post § 25.
Description in notice as published, see post § 88.

¶ 50. The affidavit must state the character, whether express or implied, of the contract upon which plaintiff claims.—Wilson v. Arnold, 5 Mich. 98; People v. Blanchard, 61 Mich. 478.

¶ 51. The statute, How. St., § 7987, requires the affidavit in attachment to state that the indebtedness is due upon contract, express or implied, or upon judgment.—People v. Blanchard, 61 Mich. 478.

¶ 52. It is enough to state that the indebtedness is upon express contract without specifying more particularly the contract's nature.—Drew v. Dequindre, 2 D. 93.

¶ 53. An averment that there is a debt due to plaintiff from defendants upon express and implied contract is equivalent to averring that the debt is due upon express and upon implied contract, and is sufficient.—Buehler v. De Lemos, 84 Mich. 554; Emerson v. Detroit Steel & Spring Co., 100 Mich. 127.

¶ 54. It is not enough to state that defendant is "indebted" to plaintiff in an amount specified, without averring that such sum is "due."—Cross v. McMaken, 17 Mich. 511; Mathews v. Densmore, 43 Mich. 461, reversed 109 U. S. 216, 27 L. ed. 912, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 126.

¶ 55. An affidavit which states that "there is justly due" to the plaintiff a specified sum, as near as the deponent can estimate the same, is not open to the objection that it contains no allegation that the indebtedness sworn to is due.—Nicolls v. Lawrence, 30 Mich. 395.

Conjunctive averments, see also post § 28, ¶ 80.
Debt not yet due from partners, see post ¶ 83.
Amendment to show individual names, see post § 36.

¶ 57. An affidavit imports a joint indebtedness if it avers that "A. and B., the defendants named in the annexed writ of attachment, are justly indebted to" the plaintiff therein.—Geiges v. Greiner, 68 Mich. 153.

¶ 58. An affidavit that certain named persons, "a co-partnership under the firm name of the Lake Huron & Southwestern Railway Company, are indebted" to affiant, etc., imports a joint partnership debt, and will support an attachment against such of them as are nonresidents.—Miller v. Bay Circuit Court, 41 Mich. 326.

¶ 59. Joint indebtedness is imported by allegation that two defendants named "are jointly indebted" to plaintiff.—Geiges v. Greiner, 68 Mich. 153; Sword v. Lenawee Circuit Judge, 71 Mich. 284.

¶ 60. An affidavit that A. and B. are justly indebted to plaintiff in a sum named, and that said sum is now due from A. upon express contract, imports a joint indebtedness, and, therefore, sufficiently alleges that there is a debt due from B. upon express contract.—Sword v. Lenawee Circuit Judge, 71 Mich. 284.

§ 25. ——Amount due or owing.

Averment as to absence of setoffs, see post § 26.
Averments of reasons for attachment for debt not yet due, see post § 20.
Judgment for greater amount, see post § 134.

¶ 61. The amount claimed to be due must be stated.—Hale v. Chandler, 3 Mich. 531.

¶ 62. An averment that the indebtedness is $3,000 "as near as can be specified by this deponent" sufficiently states the amount.—Barker v. Thorn, 20 Mich. 264.

¶ 63. An affidavit that states positively the fact of the indebtedness and the amount "as near as deponent can estimate the same" is sufficient though made by plaintiff's agent; the affiant must be understood as speaking of his own knowledge as to the fact of indebtedness, and the qualifying clause must be understood as limiting only the statement of its exact amount, which the statute permits to be thus stated.—Nicolls v. Lawrence, 30 Mich. 395.

¶ 64. The affidavit is void if it fails to state that the debt is due "over and above all legal setoffs."—Wells v. Parker, 26 Mich. 102.

¶ 65. If the affidavit states positively the amount due over and above all legal setoffs, it is not objectionable for omitting the qualifying words "as near as may be."—Grover v. Buck, 34 Mich. 519.

§ 27. Averments as to grounds and reasons.

Sufficiency of reasons and proof, see ante §§ 8-10.
Stating diverse grounds in disjunctive, see post § 28.
Positiveness of affidavit, information and belief, see post § 31.
Dissolution on traverse of averments in affidavit, see post § 113.
Allegations of denial or traverse in petition to dissolve, see post §§ 117, 118.
Burden of proof and evidence on motion to dissolve, see post §§ 122-124.
When debt is not yet due, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 35; Comp. L. 1915, § 13062.
For attachment after action begun, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 37; Comp. L. 1915, § 13064.

¶ 66. The reason for the issue of the writ must be shown by facts and circumstances so detailed as to enable the circuit judge to satisfy himself therefrom that the writ ought to issue.—Howell v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 88 Mich. 361.

¶ 67. The affidavit in attachment need not state either that one of the parties resides in the county of issue, or that defendant has no property in the county where he resides, or is a nonresident of the state; the averments prescribed by How. St., § 7987, are sufficient.—Stringer v. Dean, 61 Mich. 196.

¶ 68. It is not enough that the affidavit should aver that defendant has absconded from the state; it must set forth that he has done so to the injury of his creditors.—Hewitt v. Terry, 56 Mich. 591.

¶ 69. An attachment affidavit is void if it omits "not" from the statutory averment that defendant is a nonresident, and has "not" resided in this state for one month next preceding the date of the affidavit.—Freer v. White, 91 Mich. 74.

¶ 70. An affidavit stating that the two defendants "are not residents of the state of Michigan, and have not resided therein for three months immediately preceding the time of making this affidavit, and that [they] reside in the state of New York," sufficiently shows that neither of the defendants has resided in Michigan within three months.—Dorr v. Clark, 7 Mich. 310.

¶ 71. An affidavit for attachment showing the indebtedness of a defendant, facts entitling the deponent to relief if the debt had been due, fraud because of the removal of his goods and disposal to various other parties, and a necessity for the writ before the debt comes due, entitles the deponent to a writ of attachment under How. St., § 8016a, as to the requirements for issuing writs of attachment.—E. H. Chase & Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 118 Mich. 358.

¶ 72. A statement that affiant knows that defendant has assigned, disposed of or concealed his property with intent to defraud his creditors is not sufficient; the facts attending such disposition or concealment of the property, and the value relative to that of the rest of the debtor's property, must be set forth.—Howell v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 88 Mich. 361.

¶ 73. The fact that other creditors have levied upon a part of the debtor's property, or that he has not enough property to pay his debts, will not warrant an attachment; and the allegation that plaintiff will lose his debt if the writ is not issued before the debt becomes due is a mere conclusion of fact—Howell v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 88 Mich. 361.

¶ 74. Where, in an action begun by attachment against a nonresident, the gist of the action is the alleged negligent failure of defendant, a physician, to remove plaintiff's left eye, which had been injured, and which defendant was treating, before the right eye had become so far diseased as to render its removal also necessary, an affidavit which, after stating how and when the injury was received, the employment of defendant, and frequent suggestions to him by plaintiff, in view of the inflammation in both eyes and the increasing impairment of the vision of the right eye, of the advisability of the removal of the injured eye, avers that on or about a certain date the plaintiff, after consultation with other physicians and surgeons, became of the opinion that it was necessary to remove the left eye, in order to save the right eye, is insufficient, as, conceding that plaintiff was possessed of sufficient skill to express an opinion upon the subject, the affidavit shows that he did not do so, but relied upon the unsworn statements of other physicians, the precise nature of which does not appear.—McCrea v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 100 Mich. 375.

Allegations in petition to dissolve, see post §§ 117, 118.

¶ 75. The affidavit may allege that defendant "has assigned, disposed of and concealed," and also that he "is about to assign, dispose of and conceal, his property with intent to defraud his creditors." Several good reasons may co-exist for suing out the writ, and one does not destroy the other where all are consistent.—Detroit Free Press Co. v. Drs. K. & K. U. S. Medical & Surgical Ass'n, 64 Mich. 605.

¶ 76. An affidavit stating that defendant has assigned, etc., or is about to assign his property is fatally defective for being in the alternative.—Kegel v. Schrenkheisen, 87 Mich. 174.

¶ 78. The use of the disjunctive "or," in an averment that defendant "fraudulently contracted the debt or incurred the obligation respecting which the suit is brought," will not invalidate the affidavit.—Emerson v. Detroit Steel & Spring Co., 100 Mich. 127.

¶ 79. The use of the disjunctive "or," in an averment in an affidavit in attachment that defendant "is about to assign, dispose of, or conceal her property, with intent to defraud her creditors," will not invalidate the affidavit, as it states but one ground for the writ.—Jones v. Peek, 101 Mich. 389.

¶ 80. An affidavit in attachment sufficiently charges both defendants with a wrong where it recites that "this deponent has good reason to believe and does believe that the said C. and H. have assigned, disposed of and concealed their property with intent to defraud their creditors."—Van Benschoten v. Fales, 126 Mich. 176.

§ 29. ——On debts not yet matured or due.

Presentment of affidavit to judge, see post ¶ 109.

¶ 81. An affidavit under Laws of 1889, Act No. 149, § 32 (How. St., § 8016a), for attachment before the debt is due, must show reasons for immediate issue of the writ, and such showing must consist of facts within affiant's knowledge, and not of mere conclusion of fact.—Howell v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 88 Mich. 361.

¶ 82. Under the statute (Laws 1889, Act No. 149) authorizing attachment before the debt is due, an affidavit that defendants who are copartners have recently executed a chattel mortgage covering all the firm property, and that the mortgagee's assignee has taken possession and is rapidly selling, and that one of the partners has executed a bill of sale of all his personal property, and the firm is wholly insolvent, is not sufficient to support an attachment, it not being claimed that the chattel mortgage and bill of sale were not given to secure bona fide debts, and the facts alleged being consistent with an honest purpose on defendant's part to secure their just claims.—Pierce v. Johnson, 93 Mich. 125.

§ 83. An affidavit for attachment under Pub. Acts 1889, No. 149, showed that the debt was evidenced by copartnership notes indorsed by the payee, that the notes were made and negotiated upon a joint venture, and that the indorser himself negotiated them fraudulently. Held, that the affidavit was sufficient to authorize an attachment against the indorser as well as the makers, even though presentation and notice of nonpayment might be necessary to hold the indorser before judgment taken—a point not decided.—Mosher v. Bay Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 508.

§ 30. Averments under Log Lien Act.

Date of affidavit with respect to issuance of writ, see post § 34.

Statement of lien and other papers under the act, see Forestry, III.

Affidavit in circuit court under Log Lien Act, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14850.

§ 84. Where an affidavit for writ of attachment under Laws 1873, Act No. 185, alleges that plaintiffs performed labor upon the logs sought to be attached, but fails to specify the kind of labor or services performed, or to show that it was labor or services of the specific character prescribed by the statute, it is fatally defective. The defect cannot be waived by appearing and pleading to the merits.—Woodruff v. Ives, 34 Mich. 320.

§ 85. A judgment enforcing a lien upon logs for labor done thereon (How. St. §§ 8412-8427) was affirmed by the equal division of the Supreme Court, which did not agree that the affidavit filed by the claimants was sufficient to sustain the judgment, if not objected to before. The objections considered fatal were that it did not allege that the parties represented by plaintiff had united their claims, or that they had designated plaintiff as their agent or attorney to enforce the lien, or that the respective sums claimed were less than $300 each, or as to who was the owner of the logs.—Babcock v. Cook, 55 Mich. 1.

§ 86. An affidavit under How. St. § 8413, showed that the logs were separate lots belonging to different owners, and that some of the labor mentioned was not such as entitled plaintiff to a lien, and it did not show that the labor not supporting a lien was not the only labor performed upon the logs of the objecting defendant. Held, that the affidavit was sufficient.—Pack, Woods & Co. v. Iosco Circuit Judge, 70 Mich. 135.

§ 87. Under How. St., § 8419, the affidavit need not show how much work was done on each lot of logs, where the work was done for a contractor on four lots, all of which were attached.—Pack, Woods & Co. v. Iosco Circuit Judge, 70 Mich. 135.

§ 88. Under How. St., § 8419, an affidavit which states that "the said plaintiff, and each of said claimants, have filed a claim for the amount due each," sufficiently avers the filing of a statement of the lien.—Pack, Woods & Co. v. Iosco Circuit Judge, 70 Mich. 135.

§ 89. Where it appeared from the statement filed and from the evidence that the labor was performed within thirty days before filing the statement of lien, the affidavit for attachment was held sufficient though it did not state the date of the last day of labor.—Wiggins v. Houghton, 89 Mich. 468.

§ 90. The affidavit for an attachment issued under the Log Lien Law (Laws 1887, Act No. 229) need not state who owns the logs upon which such lien is claimed.—Grand Rapids Chair Co. v. Runnels, 77 Mich. 104; Wiggins v. Houghton, 89 Mich. 468.

§ 91. The affidavit for attachment under the Log Lien Law (Laws 1881, Act No. 145) need not state that the defendant employer was the owner of the logs, or that the work was done for the owner or for whom, or who is the owner. If it states everything that the statute requires in prescribing its form, it suffices.—Reilly v. Stephenson, 62 Mich. 500.

§ 31. Knowledge or grounds of affiant's belief. Positiveness as to amount due, see ante § 25.

§ 93. The affidavit must state positively, and not on information and belief only, that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff, and the amount of such indebtedness as near as may be, over and above all legal setoffs.—Wilson v. Arnold, 5 Mich. 98.

§ 94. An affidavit which states that deponent "has this deponent has good reason to believe, has disposed of his property," etc., is sufficiently positive in its allegation that affiant has good reason to believe the fact stated.—Nicolls v. Lawrence, 30 Mich. 395.

¶ 95. The affidavit is bad if it states only that the affiant believes that the debtor is about to remove his property, and does not state that he has any reason to believe it. —Hunt v. Strew, 39 Mich. 368.

¶ 96. Laws 1893, Act No. 89, amending How. St., §§ 8025a-8025d, providing for the commencement of actions of tort against non-residents by attachment, should be strictly construed, and the facts required to be stated in the affidavit for the writ must be set out upon the knowledge of the affiant, and with reasonable certainty.—McCrea v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 100 Mich. 375.

¶ 97. The statute (Pub. Acts 1889, No. 149) authorizes the issue of the writ upon an affidavit complying with the requirements of the previous general statute, except that, instead of stating the indebtedness to be due, it shall set up facts sufficient to satisfy the circuit judge of the propriety of allowing the writ to issue before the debt is due. Held, that, as under the general statute, the writ may issue where the requisite facts, except the fact of indebtedness, are stated on information and belief.—Mosher v. Bay Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 508.

§ 32. Affidavit by agent or attorney.

¶ 98. If the affidavit for attachment states that the affiant "is the agent of" the plaintiff, it is a sufficient averment of agency.—Adams v. Kellogg, 63 Mich. 105.

¶ 99. If the affidavit is not made by the plaintiff it must appear on its face to have been made by some one in his behalf.—Borland v. Kingsbury, 65 Mich. 59.

¶ 100. Where an affidavit for an attachment in the circuit court is made by one who states that he is "the attorney for the plaintiff named in the annexed writ," etc., it sufficiently appears by legal inference that he made it in plaintiff's behalf, and the writ (to which, in the circuit court, the affidavit must be attached) identifies the plaintiff.—Stringer v. Dean, 61 Mich. 196.

¶ 101. An unentitled affidavit is not void when fully identified by being annexed to the writ which gives full title of the cause.—Beebe v. Morrell, 76 Mich. 114.

To petition to dissolve, see post § 119.

¶ 103. An affidavit sworn to before a deputy county clerk is good, though it does not appear that the clerk was absent at the time (Comp. L. 1857, § 4041, How. St., § 573). —Dorr v. Clark, 7 Mich. 310.

¶ 104. Affidavit is good though the name of the county for which notary was appointed is not appended to his signature to jurat, where the caption of affidavit names county. —Smith v. Runnells, 94 Mich. 617.

¶ 105. Previous to the amendment of March 16, 1861 (How. St., § 7987), it was held that the affidavit must be made on the same day of the issuing of the writ.—Drew v. Dequindre, 2 D. 93; Buckley v. Lowry, 2 Mich. 418; Wilson v. Arnold, 5 Mich. 98; Fessenden v. Hill, 6 Mich. 242.

¶ 106. It makes no difference in respect to the date that the party or his agent making the affidavit resided at a distance from the office of the clerk issuing the writ, and that the affidavit was transmitted to the clerk as soon as practicable by the usual course of mail.—Wilson v. Arnold, 5 Mich. 98.

¶ 107. An affidavit for attachment in a log lien case is void if sworn to before the day when the writ issues; How. St., § 7987. allowing a day's interval, does not apply to these proceedings.—McPherson v. McGillis, 93 Mich. 525; Northern Mich. Lumber Co. v. Lyon, 95 Mich. 584.

§ 35. Filings and indorsements.

Date with reference to issuance of writ, see ante § 34.
Time for issuance of writ after filing, see post § 42.
Indorsements on the writ, and attachment of the affidavit, see post § 43.
Filing of the writ and return, see post § 69.

¶ 108. The failure of the clerk to indorse upon an affidavit for attachment the time it was received, or his neglect to keep it on file, or his attaching it to the writ of attachment, will not affect the validity of the writ.—Beebe v. Morrell, 76 Mich. 114.

¶ 109. Before the clerk can issue an attachment under Laws of 1889, Act No. 149, § 32 (How. St., § 8016a), the statutory affidavit indorsed with the order of allowance by the circuit judge must be presented to him; indorsement of order upon the writ will not suffice.—Howell v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 88 Mich. 369.

See also post ¶ 258.
Of the bond, see post § 40.
Of the writ, see post § 47.
Curative amendments, see post §§ 103, 104.

¶ 110. An affidavit for attachment that is jurisdictionally defective is not subject to amendment.—Butcher v. Cappon & Bertsch Leather Co., 148 Mich. 552.

¶ 111. After an attachment case had been started, where the affidavit gave the firm name of the plaintiffs "Evans & Walker, of Detroit, Michigan," and averred that their Christian names were unknown to affiant, the goods were replevied on account of this defect in the affidavit, but the court held it could be amended.—Barber v. Smith, 41 Mich. 138.

§ 37. Application for alias or pluries writ.

¶ 114. Syllabus 2 of Van Benschoten v. Fales, 126 Mich. 176, states: "No new affidavit is required to support an alias or pluries writ of attachment, where the property has been seized under the original writ and the further writ is desired merely to subserve the purposes of a summons." (Counsel's contention was that the original affidavit was faulty and no new one was made to take its place. The point in the syllabus seems to be a correct implication from the decision.—Editor.)

B. BOND OR SECURITY.

§ 38. In general.
Bond by defendant to release from levy, see post VI, D.
Waiver of defects by appearance and plea, see post § 107.
Nature of liability on bond, and satisfaction or discharge of bond and sureties thereon, see post XIV.
General law of bonds, see Bonds.
Provisions as to tort actions, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 22; Comp. L. 1915. § 13049.

§ 39. By agent of plaintiff.

¶ 115. The bond required to be executed by a nonresident plaintiff, his agent or attorney, by Sess. L. 1842, p. 118, § 3, might when executed by such agent or attorney, be, in form, his personal obligation and be executed by him in his own name describing himself as such agent, and not in the name or on behalf of his principal.—Walbridge v. Spalding, 1 D. 451.

§ 40. Amendment of bond, and new bonds.
Curative effect of bond where inventory was defective, see post ¶ 261.

¶ 117. If the bond is defective, How. St., § 7771, permits a new one to be filed, and jurisdiction is not lost.—Kidd v. Dougherty, 59 Mich. 240; Adams v. Kellogg, 63 Mich. 105.

V. THE WRIT, ISSUANCE AND DELIVERY, AND RECALL.

Execution of the writ and levy under it, see post VI, VII.
Return to the writ, see post VI, E.
By justices, see Justices of the Peace, IV, C.
General requisities of process, see Process.
Writs of execution, see Executions.
Writ as justification of sheriff acting under it, see Sheriffs, IV, A.
Form under Log Lien Law, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14849.
On attachment after action begun, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 38; Comp. L. 1915, § 13065.
When against joint parties, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVI, § 33; Comp. L. 1915. § 13060.

Time of affidavit with respect to issuance, see ante § 34.
Presentment of affidavit to judge, see also ante ¶ 109.
Application for alias or second writ, see ante § 37.

Indorsement as showing issuance before affidavit filed, see post ¶ 250.
Presumptions as to regularity, see post § 102.

¶ 118. The statute relating to attachments (How. St., § 8020) requires the clerk of court, on filing the affidavit, to issue the writ which writ shall recite the commencement of the action.—Beebe v. Morrell, 76 Mich. 114.

¶ 119. The day allowed by How. St., § 7987, subd. 6, to intervene between the date of the jurat to an affidavit for attachment and the issue of the writ does not begin to run until after the expiration of the day upon which the affidavit is executed, and the writ may issue after the intervening day has expired.—Horton v. Monroe, 98 Mich. 195.

Conclusiveness of indorsement as to time of filing, see post ¶ 250.
Attachment to writ, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13029.
Indorsement of security for costs, when against corporation, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 13031.

Of writ to attach logs for lien, see post § 46.
Amendment of descriptions, see post ¶ 128.
Effect of misnomer, see post § 111.
Effect of imperfect name where writ is still amendable, see post ¶ 253.
Description in inventory, see post § 55.
Direction and command of writ, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 6; Comp. L. 1915, § 13033.

¶ 122. Under 2 How. St., § 7991, and C. C. Rule 1e, which followed the amendatory act of 1895—providing that in case any property of a defendant in attachment is found and seized in the county (in which the writ issues), but not sufficient to satisfy the demand and costs, then the officer shall seize other property of the defendant wherever found in the state, and shall serve a copy of the attachment and inventory upon defendant if found in either of such counties, but if not found in either county where property has been seized, service on him may be had in any county within the state wherein the defendant may be—a writ which commanded service if the defendant "can be found in either county where property has been seized under the writ," was in substantial compliance with said amendatory act and not open to the objection that it did not command the sheriff to whom the writ was issued, to serve the defendant if he could be found within the county of issue.—Skeels v. Oceana Circuit Judge, 119 Mich. 290.

§ 45. ——Return day.

Time for return to writ, see post § 69.
Time to appear and plead, see post § 79.

¶ 123. A writ tested February 7, 1867, and made returnable April 2, without naming the year, must be understood as referring to April of the then current year.—Nash v. Mallory, 17 Mich. 232; and see Vinton v. Mead, 17 Mich. 388.

§ 46. ——Writ to attach logs for lien.

Interpretation of return to writ, see post § 71.

¶ 124. A writ of attachment under Laws 1881, Act No. 145, to enforce a lien on logs for labor, is not void because it authorizes service to be made on the owner at any time on the return day, and therefore may authorize service after judgment has passed; since in such a case the judgment would not be binding for want of reasonable notice.—Reilly v. Stephenson, 62 Mich. 509.

¶ 125. Where a statement of lien, affidavit for attachment, and declaration all describe the property as "about 400,000 feet of pine saw-logs (marks, if any, unknown) now lying upon" certain lands, and the officer returns that he seized about 100,000 feet of the logs mentioned and described in the writ, and some of the logs had been cut and skidded when plaintiff began work, but all belonged to the same owner, as no rights of third persons intervened, a judgment for lien upon all the logs was proper.—Huntoon v. O'Brien, 79 Mich. 227.

¶ 126. Description of property in a writ of attachment to enforce a lien upon logs need not be more precise than is required in replevin; and a description as "about 200,000 feet of pine and hemlock timber, and also about 300 cords of slabs," is sufficient.—Dillon v. Howe, 98 Mich. 168.

Of the bond for the writ, see ante § 40.
Curative amendments in general, see post §§ 103, 104.

¶ 127. The general statute of amendments applies to attachment proceedings.—Drew v. Dequindre, 2 D. 93; Barber v. Smith, 41 Mich. 138.

¶ 128. Attachment proceedings in favor of persons whose surnames only are given in the writ, but who are otherwise identified, are not void, but may be amended, and the full names may be inserted by leave of the court.—Barber v. Smith, 41 Mich. 138.

VI. THE LEVY AND ITS INCIDENTS, AND RETURN OF WRIT.

A. IN GENERAL; HOW, WHEN AND WHERE MADE.

Fees of sheriff, see Sheriffs, III.

§ 48. Mode and sufficiency of levy.

Time for execution and sale, see post § 138.
Presumptions as to levy on defendant's property, see post § 102, ¶ 257.
Effect to create lien, and extent of lien, and priorities, see post VIII.
Return to the writ, see post VI, E.
For personal service, see post §§ 80-84.
See also Executions, VI.
Completion of levy where sheriff goes out of office, see Sheriffs, III.
Right of sheriff to indemnification before executing writ, see Sheriffs, IV, A.
Applicability of provisions of executions and exemption laws, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 7; Comp. L. 1915, § 13034.
How made on shares of stock, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 10; Comp. L. 1915, § 13037.
Mode as to real estate, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, §§ 10-14; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13037-13041.
How to be executed, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 8; Comp. L. 1915, § 13035.
Under Log Lien Act, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14848.

¶ 129. In case of an attachment of a growing crop constructive possession on the officer's part is all that is necessary.—Grover v. Buck, 34 Mich. 519.

¶ 130. A sheriff making an attachment upon machinery bolted to the freehold need not in order to make good or retain his levy detach and remove the property from the place he found it, and such is under his custody and control where he has placed a deputy in charge of it.—Patch v. Wessels, 46 Mich. 249.

For personal service, see post § 80.

¶ 131. How. St., § 6831, subd. 2, as to the issuance of attachments, permits attachment of property in counties other than that in which the defendant resides, where removal of the property is about to be made with fraudulent intent, and treats neglect or refusal to pay as equivalent to evidence of fraudulent intent, where the debtor is about to remove his property.—Stock v. Reynolds, 121 Mich. 356.

¶ 132. Property in transit, such as a car of wheat shipped to a purchaser by a defendant, is in the county and is subject to attachment while passing through the county, and being held at a station awaiting a freight train, within How. St., § 6831, subd. 2, which provides for the issuance of an attachment against a defendant upon affidavit "that he is about to remove any of his property from the county in which such application is made, or from the county where the defendant resides," with fraudulent intent, "or that he has removed or is about to remove himself or his property from the county, and refuses or neglects to pay or secure the payment of the debt.—Stock v. Reynolds, 121 Mich. 356.

Effect on the proceedings of excessive levy, see post ¶ 249.
Liability of sheriff for excessive levy, see Sheriffs, IV.

¶ 134. An attachment cannot be levied for any greater sum than that actually due when the writ issued.—Hinchman v. Town, 10 Mich 508.

§ 52. Indorsement of levy on writ.

¶ 135. The fact that no levy is indorsed upon an attachment is immaterial where the sheriff's return upon the writ recites a levy and is accompanied by the appraisal.—Grover v. Buck, 34 Mich. 519.

Necessity to attach lien, see post § 92.
Filing the notice with the register, see post § 93.
Superiority of resumed homestead over prior levy with subsequent notice of attachment, see Homesteads, IV.

¶ 136. Notice of the levy of an attachment on land must be definite and certain to be good as against persons holding in good faith under conveyances subsequent to the institution of suit.—Davis Sewing Mach. Co. v. Whitney, 61 Mich. 518.

¶ 137. A sheriff's notice of attachment was held ineffectual where by mistake it failed to describe the land attached.—Barnard v. Campau, 29 Mich. 162.

B. INVENTORY, APPRAISAL AND SETTING OUT EXEMPTIONS.

Sufficiency of return to show inventory, appraisal and service of copies, see post § 70.
Necessity and sufficiency of service of copies, see post §§ 82-84.
Statutory provisions, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 8; Comp. L. 1915, § 13035.

¶ 138. It is the duty of an officer levying on attachment on the stock in trade of a judgment debtor to have an inventory and appraisal made out, and permit the debtor to select the amount exempt from execution; and, on the debtor failing to do so, to make the selection for him. And if the officer neglect this duty he is liable to the debtor for the value of the property exempt.—Wyckoff v. Wyllis, 8 Mich. 48.

¶ 139. In attachment of logs in transit no inventory is required in view of the provisions of How. St., § 8427f (Log Lien Law, § 6), expressly providing that levy and attachment shall be made by serving a copy of the attachment on the person or corporation driving or holding the logs, and further that such person or corporation shall be deemed to hold them for himself and the sheriff until the logs can be driven and sorted out.—McGuire v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 101 Mich. 275.

¶ 140. Under attachment for the enforcement of a log lien under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10756-10770, no appraisal is necessary.—Ruggles v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 124 Mich. 472.

¶ 141. When logs are attached under Laws of 1887, Act No. 229 (How. St., §§ 8427a-8427p), the property need not be appraised; nor need service be made upon a log owner who is not a defendant, either of an inventory or of a certified copy of the writ.—Federspiel v. Johnstone, 87 Mich. 303, separate appeal in same case, 87 Mich. 309.

Sufficiency of certification of copy served, see post § 84.

¶ 142. An inventory in attachment proceedings is not sufficient where it merely describes the property attached as "One carload household furniture."—Knack v. Berlin, 150 Mich. 550.

¶ 143. An inventory of land taken on writ of attachment is sufficient, although the state and county are omitted, where they are named in the attached certificate of the officer making the levy.—John D. Gruber Co. v. Montcalm Circuit Judge, 183 Mich. 477.

§ 56. Appraisal and selection of exemptions.

See also ante ¶ 138.
Statutory provisions as to appraisal, see Jud. Act. Chap. XXVI, § 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 13036.

¶ 144. An officer levying an attachment on property of which a certain amount is exempt from execution must, under Comp. L. 1871, §§ 6102-6103 (How. St., §§ 7687-7688), appraise it and give the defendant an opportunity to select that which he is entitled to retain, whether a writ is issued by a justice or from the circuit court.—Michels v. Stork, 44 Mich. 2.

¶ 145. Where the appraisals of attached property are referred to in and form a part of the return, they must be considered in connection therewith.—Horton v. Monroe, 98 Mich. 195.

¶ 146. In attaching a defendant's part interest in land, an appraisal of the whole tract, irrespective of the extent of his interest, held sufficient.—Drew v. Dequindre, 2 D. 93.

§ 57. ——Who may act as appraisers.

¶ 147. Defendant in attachment cannot object in a collateral proceeding that the appraisers were members of his own family, and consequently not disinterested, and were not freeholders, not sworn, where, though personally served and not shown to have been ignorant of the facts, he made no such objection in the attachment suit, the return averring that the appraisers were disinterested freeholders and duly sworn; the statutory requirement of disinterested freeholders as appraisers is for his protection, and it cannot be presumed that members of his family have an interest adverse to his.—Grover v. Buck, 34 Mich. 519.

¶ 148. In an attachment suit one of the appraisers of the property attached was the county clerk who issued the writ. The return of the sheriff and the oath taken by the appraisers showed them to be disinterested parties as required by statute. Held, that the duties of county clerk and those of appraiser are not incompatible, and that there is no reason why the county clerk, if otherwise qualified, cannot act in capacity of appraiser the same as any other disinterested resident freeholder.—De Carle v. Marks, 171 Mich. 167.

C. CUSTODY AND CARE OF PROPERTY.

Right to release, and bond for, release, see post VI, D.
Lien and priorities under the levy, see post VIII.
Title and conflicting claims, see post XI.
Right and title of sheriff in goods levied on, see also generally Sheriffs, IV, G.
How and by whom to be kept, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 15; Comp. L. 1915, § 13042.

¶ 149. Attached property is under the control of the officer attaching it, and not of the plaintiff in attachment, and the latter is not responsible for its detention after dissolution of the writ; it is for the defendant to see to the enforcement of the order restoring the property.—Blanchard v. Brown, 42 Mich. 46.

¶ 150. An attaching officer who sells part of the attached goods and allows the rest to be removed beyond the court's jurisdiction, becomes a trespasser ab initio, and is liable in trover for conversion.—Terry v. Metevier, 104 Mich. 50.

¶ 151. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10761, governing attachment of forest products while in transit or while in the hands of a booming company or other person or corporation, for the purpose of being driven or sorted and delivered to the owner, and providing for delay of possession in the latter case, a carload of shingles attached while in possession of a railroad company for transportation, should be delivered at once to the sheriff or other attaching officer.—Lake v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 132 Mich. 190.

¶ 152. Where mortgaged chattels are attached in a suit against the mortgagor, the rights of the attachment creditor and of the mortgagee must be protected as far as possible without interfering with each other. The officer need only take temporary possession for the purpose of making an inventory and appraisement, which perfects his lien, and his right to take such possession cannot be defeated by any stipulation in the mortgage that the mortgagee may take possession when he deems himself insecure. But the mortgagee has the first lien, and, having a right to foreclose at a definite time, is entitled to possession, which the officer should then surrender to him on demand unless he believes the mortgage to be fraudulent or satisfied, in which case he may refuse to recognize it. If he surrenders it the mortgagee must also respect the subsequent lien, and the mortgagor's release to him would be ineffectual.—King v. Hubbell, 42 Mich. 597.

¶ 153. In case of a levy on the equity of redemption under a chattel mortgage, under How. St., § 7682, the levying officer may hold possession long enough to perfect his levy.—Wilson v. Montague, 57 Mich. 638.

¶ 154. An officer who has attached mortgaged goods is not necessarily entitled as against prior mortgagees to hold undisturbed until completion of his inventory.—Rosenfield v. Case, 87 Mich. 295.

¶ 155. By levying on mortgaged goods under an attachment subject to the mortgages, the officer recognizes the validity of the mortgages, and cannot as against the mortgagee hold possession on the ground that the mortgages are being fraudulently used to defeat other creditors.—Rosenfield v. Case, 87 Mich. 295.

On levy under chattel mortgage, see ante § 60.

¶ 156. When an attachment suit is discontinued the right to detain the goods ceases.—Orr v. Keyes, 37 Mich. 385.

¶ 157. When an attachment proceeding has gone down the officer still holds the property until notified, or until he learns that the suit is discontinued.—Vanneter v. Crossman, 39 Mich. 610.

¶ 158. Property once discharged from levy by the officer's voluntary act cannot be reclaimed by him.—Weber v. Henry, 16 Mich. 399.

§ 62. Care and protection of property.

Effect of release on liability for expenses, see post ¶ 235.

Sale of perishable property and disposal of proceeds, see post §§ 139-140.

Fees and expenses for keeping, see Sheriffs, III; and see Costs.

Duty of sheriffs in general, see Sheriffs, IV.

Liability of sheriffs and constables for neglect or malfeasance, see Sheriffs, IV.

¶ 159. The duties and liabilities of officers in possession of attached property are in the nature of a bailment. The officer must use due diligence to keep such property safely to satisfy the execution, but he is not an insurer, and is not, like a common carrier, answerable for a loss of the goods by fire; he should be held to greater, though reasonable, care than owners usually take of their property, for the reason that goods so held are more liable to be molested than goods not under seizure.—Fletcher v. Kalkaska Circuit Judge, 81 Mich. 186.

When lien attaches, see post § 92.

¶ 160. A levy of an attachment on land does not dispossess the owner.—Smith v. Collins, 41 Mich. 173.

D. RELEASE ON BOND OR OTHERWISE.

§ 64. In general; when authorized.

Effect of dissolution to release, see post § 126.

Discharge of attachment by act of parties or by operation of law, see post § 129.

On justice's attachment, see Justices of the Peace, IV, C.

Giving release bond as appearance, see Appearance, § 8, ¶¶ 29, 30.

Statutory provisions for release on bond, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, §§ 15-17; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13042-14034.

In attachments begun after action, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, §§ 40, 41; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13067, 13068.

¶ 161. The provision for a bond is applicable in case of the attachment of a growing crop, and may be important to prevent its removal.—Grover v. Buck, 34 Mich. 519.

Persons entitled to move for dissolution or quashal, see post §§ 105-108.

¶ 162. Comp. L. 1871, § 6409 (How. St., § 7998), seems to contemplate the giving of the bond only by the defendant or other person in whose possession the property may be found.—King v. Hubbell, 42 Mich. 597.

§ 66. The bond, and its operation and effect.

Transfer of bond to plaintiff, see post § 67.

Giving bond as waiver of defective procedure, see post § 108.

Measure and amount of liability, see post § 146.

Liabilities on bond, and discharge of the bond, see post XIV.

Who may complain of qualification of sureties, see post ¶ 416.

Return of bond, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 21; Comp. L. 1915, § 13048.

¶ 163. The bond must run to the sheriff, who holds it in trust, and the plaintiff in attachment has no right to sue on it or transfer it until failure of execution, and then only in the sheriff's name, unless the latter has assigned the bond to him.—Forrest v. O'Donnell, 42 Mich. 556.

§ 67. Assignment or transfer of bond.

Right of assignee to sue in own name, see post § 149; and see also Assignments, IV.

¶ 164. An assignment of the release bond by the sheriff to the plaintiff is a thing which the plaintiff may require as a matter of right, and is valid if signed by the sheriff, though not in his name of office.—Dorr v. Clark, 7 Mich. 310.

¶ 165. An assignment of a judgment in attachment does not carry the legal title to the bond if it does not expressly purport to do so.—Forrest v. O'Donnell, 42 Mich. 556.

§ 68. Rights in released property.

Custody after quashal or release, see ante § 61.

Right to reclaim released goods, see ante ¶ 158.

Liability for subsequent expense of keeping property, see post ¶ 235.

¶ 166. Where suit is brought for the purchase price of certain chattels, and an attachment is levied on the property claimed to have been sold to defendants, the giving by the latter of a bond to release the property from the writ is not a recognition of it as theirs, and can have no force as a ratification of its unauthorized purchase by another as their agent.—Woods v. Robertson, 31 Mich. 64.

¶ 167. A sheriff having relinquished his rights in attached property, where the statutory bond had been given him, could not secure the attachment debtor in his possession from interference of third parties for whose acts the sheriff was not responsible.—Patch v. Wessels, 46 Mich. 249.

E. RETURN OF WRIT.

§ 69. In general; time for return and filing.

Filing the affidavit, see ante § 35.
Leave to make further return, see post § 74.
Extending time to permit publication, see also post ¶ 181.
Premature return as defeating publication of service, see post § 86.
Return on return day, effect, see post ¶ 212
To justice, see Justices of the Peace, IV, C.
Return of sale under execution, see post § 141; and see generally Executions, IX.
General law as to returns to process, see Process, II, D; and see also Executions, IX.

¶ 168. A circuit court writ of attachment, unless personally served, cannot be returned before the return day.—King v. Harrington, 14 Mich. 532; Myers v. Prosser, 40 Mich. 644; Drew v. Claypool, 61 Mich. 233.

¶ 169. A sheriff's return to a circuit court writ of attachment, bearing date as of a day prior to the return day of the writ, and certifying to the seizure of property upon a previous day, and to the inability of the officer to find the defendant, is insufficient to confer jurisdiction, although not filed until the return day, since no presumption can arise in such case that the officer continued to search for the defendant beyond the date of his return.—Millard v. Hayward, 107 Mich. 219.

¶ 170. A writ of attachment was indorsed by the clerk as "Filed January 16, 1908." The officer made a return on January 29th that he was unable to find the defendant. Held, that such a return made after the officer had filed the writ invalidated the attachment proceedings.—Holmes v. King, 158 Mich. 445.

Stating as a conclusion that "due diligence" was used, see post ¶ 217.

¶ 171. A return by a sheriff to a writ of attachment, which commands him to seize the property of the defendant therein named, that by virtue of the command of the writ he has levied upon certain described property, sufficiently shows that the property taken belonged to the defendant.—Horton v. Monroe, 98 Mich. 195.

¶ 172. A sheriff's return on a writ of attachment that "I served a certified copy of the within writ upon D. * * * and I served a certified copy, together with a copy of the inventory on C." is fairly interpreted as showing the service of a certified copy of the writ upon C.—Watson v. Dingman, 120 Mich. 443.

¶ 173. A return stated that "I have, on the 18th day of January, 1884, attached the following property, * * * and I do further return that I am unable to find the defendant," etc. The return day was February 5. Held, that the date at the commencement of the return referred to the seizure only; and that the further return took effect from the filing, which was on the return day.—Hitchcock v. Hahn, 60 Mich. 459.

Showing as to service or diligence, see post § 72.
To support service on agent, see also post ¶ 215.
Under Log Lien Act, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14853.

¶ 174. In case of the attachment of logs in a drive with others, the service of the writ amounts to a seizure of all the logs answering the description in the writ; and as there can be no assorting of the logs, if the provisions of the act are followed, until they reach the terminus of the drive, a reference in the memorandum of the sheriff to the quantity of logs must be taken simply as an estimate of the amount attached.—McGuire v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 101 Mich. 275.

¶ 175. An officer's return to an attachment of logs in transit in a drive, that he seized a certain number of logs in that drive, will not be regarded as a specific levy on a part only of the drive, such as to bring the attachment within the general requirement that in ordinary attachments an inventory must be made and a copy served with the writ.—McGuire v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 101 Mich. 275.

§ 72. Showing as to service or reasons for failure.

See also ante ¶ 173.
Sufficiency to support publication, see post § 87.

¶ 176. Proceedings in attachment are void if the return fails to show service of a certified copy of the inventory of the property seized upon either the principal defendant or the owner of the attached property.—White v. Prior, 88 Mich. 647.

¶ 177. A return of an attachment on logs that the property was not of the officer's knowledge in the possession of any one, does not give the court jurisdiction of the property under How. St., § 6841, requiring that "if the defendant cannot be found within the county, the officer shall leave a copy of the attachment and inventory at the last place of residence of defendant."—White v. Prior, 88 Mich. 647.

¶ 178. It is essential to the validity of attachment proceedings under the Log Lien Law (Pub. Acts 1887, No. 229), where the property attached was not in transit, that it appear from the officer's return that a copy of the inventory was served upon the principal defendant.—Sheridan v. Colton, 113 Mich. 112.

¶ 179. A return of an officer in an attachment suit on a log lien, showing service one day before the return of the writ, is fatal. —Reynolds v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 445.

¶ 180. In attachment proceedings under the Log Lien Law, a return made by the officer serving the writ that the owners are non-residents, and that within the life of the writ he has served a resident agent of the owners, is good, inasmuch as it follows Comp. L. 1898, § 10761.—Pepin v. Nault, 149 Mich. 180.

¶ 181. Where a sheriff neglects or refuses to make his return to a writ of attachment, application must be made to the court for an order requiring him to do so, and the time for the return of the writ may be extended for the purpose of obtaining constructive service on a non-resident defendant.—McLaughlin v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 379.

§ 74. Further returns and amendments.

Amendments and cure of defects in general, see post § 103.
Interpretation of two returns together, see ante ¶ 173.
Of return of sale under judgment, see post § 141.

¶ 182. Where an attachment has been returned before the return day without personal service, a further return cannot be made without leave of court.—Myers v. Prosser, 40 Mich. 644.

¶ 183. A void publication based on an insufficient return of attachment (it did not show that defendants could not be found) is not validated nor is jurisdiction conferred by a subsequent ex parte order of the court —made after defendants had appeared specially and moved to quash—authorizing the sheriff to amend his return so as to show that defendants could not be found; where the sheriff had already made such amendment evoked by a motion to quash but without notice to the adverse party.—Cochrane v. Johnson, 95 Mich. 67.

¶ 185. The filing of an amended return of service of a writ of attachment does not have the effect of entirely superseding the original return unless so intended, and jurisdictional averments in the original return will be given effect though not repeated in the amended return.—Pepin v. Nault, 149 Mich. 180.

Appraisals as part of return, see also ante ¶ 145.
Presumptions as to regularity of proceedings, see also post § 102.
Effect of amendment of return to supersede original, see ante ¶ 185.
Taking date of return as time from which to compute time for publication, see post ¶ 210.
Return of original inventory as "true copy," see also post ¶ 251.

¶ 186. Where the indorsement on a writ fo attachment shows that it was not levied subject to a mortgage lien, it cannot be contradicted in an action of replevin brought by the mortgagee against the attaching creditor.—Wallen v. Rossman, 45 Mich. 333.

¶ 187. In an action against a sheriff for damages to whiskey while in his custody under a writ of attachment, it was error to permit the jury to treat the return as amended so as to show that the quantity of whiskey claimed was not in fact seized by him on the writ, although his return showed that it was.—Standard Wine Co. v. Chipman, 135 Mich. 273.

¶ 188. Where action has to be taken by an attorney on the return of a writ of attachment, it is permissible for the sheriff, after indorsing the return of a writ not personally served, to leave the writ and return with the attorney instead of filing it with the clerk.—Watson v. Toms, 42 Mich. 561.

¶ 189. A writ of attachment is mesne process and must be returned by the officer, and when so returned remains in the custody of the clerk as a part of the files in the case. —Fletcher v. Morrell, 78 Mich. 176.

Jurisdiction and procedure when personally served, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 19; Comp. L. 1915, § 13046.
Jurisdiction on personal service of foreign corporation, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 43; Comp. L. 1915, § 13070.
On attachment made after action is begun, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 39; Comp. L. 1915, § 13066.

¶ 190. Where there has been no personal service and no appearance, a declaration cannot be filed, nor can default be entered until proof of publication of notice of attachment has been filed, and a judgment founded on such premature proceedings is void and may be attacked collaterally.—King v. Harrington, 14 Mich. 532; Wells v. Walsh, 25 Mich. 344; Woolkins v. Haid, 49 Mich. 299; Steere v. Vanderberg, 67 Mich. 530; Nugent v. Nugent, 70 Mich. 52.

¶ 191. Delay in filing declaration until more than twenty days after return day of writ is cured by filing it subsequently where no appearance or default has been entered.—Smith v. Runnells, 94 Mich. 617.

¶ 192. A failure to file a declaration within fifteen days after the issuance of a writ of attachment, as required by Act No. 30, Pub. Acts 1907, and Circuit Court Rule No. 2, does not deprive the court of jurisdiction, since said provision of the statute is not mandatory.—Goodspeed v. Smith, 161 Mich. 688.

¶ 193. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10572, 10574, providing for six weeks' notice of attachment and that plaintiff on filing an affidavit of the publication * * * for six successive weeks * * * may file his declaration in the suit, do not require that filing be withheld until full six weeks has expired; and accordingly where the affidavit and declaration were filed after the sixth publication, but before full six weeks, but the default for want of answer was not entered until full twenty days after the full six weeks, the court had jurisdiction.—Kurtz v. Gartner, 141 Mich. 262.

¶ 195. Where service has been had upon one defendant, jurisdiction is not lost by attempting to bring in a nonresident defendant by publication; publication is required only where neither defendant can be found.—Smith v. Runnells, 94 Mich. 617.

¶ 196. Where property has been seized, and the writ returned not personally served, publication of notice as required by statute is intended as a substitute for personal service, and is necessary to confer jurisdiction.—Thompson v. Thomas, 11 Mich. 274; King v. Harrington, 14 Mich. 532; Wells v. Walsh, 25 Mich. 344.

Quashal of writ for insufficiency of declaration, see post ¶ 290.
Rules relating to joinder of counts, see Pleading, II.

¶ 197. The declaration in an attachment suit, pleading a conversion of logs, is not demurrable for varying from the affidavit for the writ stating the cause of action as a trespass to land. The proper remedy is by summary application to the court to set aside the declaration for irregularity.—Longyear v. Minnesota Lumber Co., 108 Mich. 645.

§ 79. Appearance and plea.

As waiving defects and objections, see post § 107; and see Appearance, § 11.
After default, see post § 137.

¶ 198. A defendant brought in by publication has the same time in which to serve notice of retainer, and to plead, after the filing of affidavit of publication, as he would have had after a return of the writ personally served.—Thompson v. Thomas, 11 Mich. 274; Wells v. Walsh, 25 Mich. 344.

¶ 199. Where a defendant has been brought in by publication, he may appear and plead as a matter of right; and the court cannot impose terms on his doing so in cases where terms could not have been imposed if the writ had been personally served.—Thompson v. Thomas, 11 Mich. 274.

§ 80. Mode and place for personal service.

Command and directions of writ as to place, see ante § 44.

Substituted service and publication, see post §§ 85-89.

Citation and service thereof on petition to dissolve, see post § 120.

On justices' attachments, see Justices of the Peace, IV, C.

¶ 200. Service of an attachment cannot be made in a foreign county until after service has been made in the county where the process issued. Service in a foreign county in the first instance cannot be made the basis for proceeding by publication.—Stearns v. Taylor, 27 Mich. 88.

¶ 201. How. St., § 7991, as amended by Pub. Acts 1895, Act No. 129, was broad enough to allow service upon a defendant in attachment, who could not be found in the county where the property was seized, by serving the writ and inventory upon him in the county in which he was, but where no property was seized.—Skeels v. Oceana Circuit Judge, 119 Mich. 290.

Premature return as to one, see also post ¶ 252.

¶ 202. Where, in attachment against two joint debtors, their joint property is seized and service is made upon one, it is not necessary, under Comp. L. 1871, §§ 6413, 6414, How. St., §§ 8002, 8005 to proceed by publication against the other—Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Covert, 35 Mich. 254.

Sufficiency of return of service of copies, see ante § 70.

¶ 203. Service of a copy of the attachment as well as of the inventory of goods is required for sufficient personal service of a writ of attachment under Comp. L. 1871, § 6402, How. St., § 7991, the provisions of which must be substantially followed.—Stearns v. Taylor, 27 Mich. 88.

¶ 204. Where in an attachment suit no certified copy of the inventory in attachment is served upon defendant, and defendant does not appear in the case, a judgment is invalid.—Rameau v. Valley, 168 Mich. 569.

§ 83. ——Under Log Lien Law.

¶ 205. Since in attachment of logs afloat and in transit no inventory is required, and to require one would make nugatory How. St., § 8427f; Log Lien Law, § 6, it is not required that service of the writ of attachment should include service of a copy of the inventory, as in ordinary cases under the general attachment statutes, the provisions of How. St., § 8427k Log Lien Law, § 11, being that all writs of attachment issued under "this act, * * * shall be served * * * as ordinary writs of attachment * * * except as herein otherwise provided."—McGuire v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 101 Mich. 275.

¶ 206. Service of an attachment is not void for want of a certificate to the copy served where it was in fact a true copy and was accompanied by a duly certified copy of the inventory of the property attached; such a defect is merely formal.—Leonard v. Woodward, 34 Mich. 514.

¶ 207. An attachment of real property is not invalid merely because the copy of the writ and inventory served upon the defendant was not certified to by the sheriff, where it was impossible that defendant could have supposed the service to be other than of authentic papers, and the papers were sufficient as fully to advise him of the nature of the proceedings and the property which had been levied upon as though the signature of the sheriff had appeared to the formal certificate.—De Carle v. Marks, 171 Mich. 167.

Necessity to give jurisdiction, see ante § 77.

Time for plea on substituted service, see ante § 79.

Grounds and conditions for publication, see post § 86.

Completion of publication as basis for taking and entering default, see post § 136.

Necessity of completion before filing declaration, see ante ¶ 190.

Where one joint defendant is personally served, see ante ¶ 202.

General law as to substituted service and publication, see Process.

Provisions as to publication, see Jud. Act. Chap. XXVI § 20; Comp. L. 1915, § 13047.

¶ 208. If a plaintiff in attachment does not publish notice of the proceedings within thirty days after return day of the writ as required on failure to obtain personal service on the defendant (R. S. 1838, p. 508, § 6), the court loses jurisdiction to proceed; publication after the statutory period will not preserve the attachment lien.—Millar v. Babcock, 29 Mich. 526.

¶ 209. Substituted service cannot be made until after the time for personal service has expired.—Farr v. Kilgour, 117 Mich. 227.

after the return of a writ of attachment notice by advertisement may be given to absent defendants. Held, that the date of the return as indorsed upon the writ and signed by the sheriff may properly be taken as the date from which to compute the time for advertising, though the writ is not actually filed until after notice is given.—Watson v. Toms, 42 Mich. 561.

Service of proper copies, see also ante § 82.

¶ 211. A premature return of the summons will not, in attachment, support publication or a judgment by default.—King v. Harrington, 14 Mich. 532; Drew v. Claypool, 61 Mich. 233.

¶ 212. In attachment cases, 1897 Circuit Court Rule 1, subd. a, requires the sheriff to make return on the writ in cases of substituted service, immediately "after" the return day, thus giving all of the return day for service, and therefore a return "on" the return day, is no basis for substituted service, and jurisdiction would not be acquired.—Sweet v. Gibson, 123 Mich. 699.

¶ 213. The lien of a plaintiff in attachment is not lost by the sheriff's neglect to return the writ until the day after the return day, and, if personal service has failed, proceedings to publish in the defendant, based upon such return, which shows the necessary statutory facts, may properly be taken.—Horton v. Monroe, 98 Mich. 195.

Sufficiency of return, see ante § 70.
As essential to valid return, see ante § 72.
Subsequent amendment to show basis in return, see also ante ¶ 183.

¶ 214. How. St., § 8003, which authorizes publication against a defendant in attachment if it appear by the return that he could not be found, does not contemplate a search in the sense that the sheriff must make a tour of the entire county to find the defendant, and a return that, after diligent inquiry, he is unable to find the defendant named in the writ, as therein commanded, is sufficient.—Horton v. Monroe, 98 Mich. 195.

¶ 215. The officer's return should show that the owner of logs attached could not be found in his bailiwick, as a preliminary fact to authorize substituted service upon the agent of such owner.—Noyes v. Hillier, 65 Mich. 636.

¶ 216. Publication of notice is not authorized by a return showing that property was attached, but that neither of the two defendants was personally served, and failing to show that they could not be found; How. St., § 8003, requires that it must appear by the return that they could not be found.—Cochrane v. Johnson, 95 Mich. 67.

¶ 217. Under a statute permitting substituted service where "defendant cannot be found," a return that the officer "used due diligence in trying to get service on the defendant," does not authorize substituted service.—White v. Prior, 88 Mich. 647.

¶ 218. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 10761, substituted service in attachment for log lien is not shown to be authorized where the return does not show that personal service could not be had, and it is affirmatively shown on a hearing on a motion to quash that personal service could have been had on the defendant.—Reynolds v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 445.

Requisites of publication to support default, see also post § 136.

¶ 219. Where a log lien attachment on logs is returned executed on the logs with defendant not served and the owners nonresident and not served, a published notice not describing the property as logs or showing that a log lien is to be enforced is insufficient to confer jurisdiction over either the principal defendant or the log owner in proceedings to enforce labor liens under Laws 1887, Act No. 229.—Streeter v. McMillan, 74 Mich. 123.

Nunc pro tunc filings, see post § 104.
Necessity to support default, see post § 136.

¶ 221. An affidavit of publication of a notice in attachment which declares that a notice annexed has been published for six successive weeks "preceding the said 23d day of September," there being nothing in the affidavit or papers referring to or identifying any month of September, and the notice itself not being dated, is void.—King v. Harrington, 14 Mich. 532.

¶ 222. In an affidavit of publication the affiant described himself as "printer and publisher of the Three Rivers Herald, a public newspaper, printed, published and circulated in the county of St. Joseph," etc. Held, that this was a sufficient averment that he was such printer and that the paper was so published.—Farmers' National Bank of Constantine v. Fonda, 65 Mich. 533.

¶ 223. An affidavit that a notice in attachment has been published once in each week for six successive weeks, commencing August 31, and ending October 5, shows a sufficient publication, it appearing that the affidavit and the declaration were filed November 9. —Horton v. Monroe, 98 Mich. 195.

Effect of bankruptcy proceedings, see Bankruptcy, § 17.

¶ 224. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9425, plaintiff in an attachment suit may, after the death of the defendant, proceed to judgment by reviving the suit against the administrator.—Lafferty v. Lafferty, 139 Mich. 176.

VIII. LIEN AND PRIORITIES.

Duration and termination, see post § 94.
Titles and conflicting claims in hostility to attachment, see post XI.
Superiority or inferiority of homestead, see Homesteads, IV.

¶ 225. An attachment does not bind property sold between its issue and levy.—Hunt v. Strew, 39 Mich. 368.

§ 92. ——On attached land.

Effect of filing of notice on pre-existing rights, see post § 93.

¶ 226. An attachment lien on land does not become fixed until notice of the levy is filed with the register of deeds, as required by How. St., § 7995, and until then there is no foundation for a judgment in rem, and nothing to prevent defendant from occupying the land as a homestead.—Davis Sewing Mach. Co. v. Whitney, 61 Mich. 518.

§ 93. Filing notice of levy on land.

Giving notice as incident of levy, see ante § 53.
Necessity to attach lien, see ante § 92.
General law as to notice of title or incumbrance thereon, either by equitable doctrine of notice or under the Recording Acts, see Notice and Record of Title.

¶ 227. The filing in the office of the register of deeds of a certified copy of the attachment, etc., as provided by Comp. L. 1857, §§ 4754, 4755, How. St., § 7995, merely gives the attaching creditor a lien upon the debtor's attachable interest in the land and in no way interferes with the previously acquired rights of third persons.—Columbia Bank v. Jacobs, 10 Mich. 349.

¶ 228. R. S. 1838, p. 507, requiring an attachment levy to be filed in the registry of deeds, did not make the filing of an attachment levy operate as constructive notice, inasmuch as no provision was made giving it force by way of priority over conveyances. —Millar v. Babcock, 25 Mich. 137.

¶ 229. Filing in the register's office a certified copy of an attachment on lands is not notice of the attachment proceedings to third parties.—French v. De Bow, 38 Mich. 708.

¶ 230. Under How. St., § 7993, providing for the attachment of real estate, and stating that the levy shall be made in the manner provided by law for the seizure of such property on execution, and section 7995, providing that the real estate attached shall be bound, and the attachment thereon shall be a lien thereon from the time when a certified copy of the attachment, with a description of the real estate attached, shall be deposited in the office of the register of deeds in the county where the real estate is situated, and section 7996, providing that each register of deeds shall note on every such certified copy the time of its receipt and record in a book kept for such purpose the names of the parties in such writ, designating who is plaintiff and who defendant, the time when the land was attached and the time when such copy was deposited, and section 8017, providing that any attachment on real estate shall also be discharged upon the record thereof by the register of deeds in whose custody it shall be, whenever there shall be presented to him a certificate, executed by plaintiff, his personal representatives or assigns, specifying that such attachment has been removed or otherwise satisfied or discharged, or a certified copy of the action of the court removing the same, an attachment upon real estate is nothing more than a statutory mode of recording a lien on real estate, in anticipation of a judgment and sale of the same to pay the debt.—Lant v. Manley, 75 Fed. 627.

§ 94. Duration of the lien.

Publication of service to continue lien, see also ante ¶ 208.
Effect of delay in returning to writ, see ante ¶ 213.
Effect of delaying execution, see also post ¶ 373.

¶ 231. An attachment lien continues until an execution can be levied.—Avery v. Stephens, 48 Mich. 246.

¶ 232. The office of the writ of attachment is simply to hold the property until the issue of execution on a valid judgment, which cannot be delayed by the creditor beyond a reasonable time, when such judgment does not follow.—Trowbridge v. Bullard, 81 Mich. 451.

§ 95. Rights under the levy and lien.

As to amount of lien or loss of lien, see post §§ 96, 97.
Right of custody and duty of caring for the property, see ante VI, C.

¶ 233. Rights acquired by attachment are inchoate until judgment and levy of execution.—Fuller v. Hasbrouck, 46 Mich. 78.

¶ 234. An attachment lien secured by one creditor does not inure to the benefit of other creditors, or deprive the debtor of the power of alienation.—Hauser v. Beaty, 93 Mich. 499.

§ 96. Amount of lien and items included.

¶ 235. Expenses of taking care of goods under attachment are not, it seems, a lien on the property after the goods have been released by a supersedeas bond and the case is ended; and it is doubtful if such expenses are taxable as costs.—Genesee County Sav. Bank v. Ottawa Circuit Judge, 54 Mich. 305.

§ 97. Abatement or loss of lien.

Abatement of writ and attachment proceedings, see ante § 90.
Effect of appeal on lien of attachment, see Appeal and Error, § 135.

¶ 236. The discontinuance of a suit in attachment by the original plaintiff did not impair the right of a creditor who, under R. S. 1838, had previously filed his declaration in the cause, to proceed to judgment, nor affect his lien upon the property attached.—People v. Calhoun Circuit Judges, 1 D. 417.

¶ 237. Attachment lien secured in suit against firm is not lost by reviving suit against surviving partner.—Van Kleeck v. McCabe, 87 Mich. 599.

¶ 238. Where a creditor has attached firm property in an action against the firm, he does not lose his lien by the death of one of the partners if the suit is revived and prosecuted against the survivor.—Van Kleeck v. McCabe, 87 Mich. 599.

¶ 239. While abandonment of the lien of an attachment may be largely a question of intent, secret intent to retain a lien will not control where the acts clearly indicate an opposite intent.—Lafferty v. Lafferty, 139 Mich. 176.

¶ 240. Under How. St., § 5946, providing that a claimant having a lien upon real estate of deceased, by attachment previous to his death, may, on obtaining judgment, have execution against such real estate, the lien secured by attachment upon real estate of the deceased debtor before his death may be enforced as if he were alive, and proceedings in execution and sale and procedure by bill in aid of the execution may take place without regard to the settlement of his estate in the probate court.—Lant v. Manley, 75 Fed. 627.

§ 98. Priorities between attachments or levies.

Other levies which would come into priority as reason for denying dissolution, see post § 114.
Priority of execution levies, see Executions, V.
On attached chattels, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 11; Comp. L. 1915, § 13038.
On lands attached, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, §§ 12, 13; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13039, 13040.

¶ 242. A. sued out of the circuit court an attachment, which was levied upon the property of his debtor. At the time of suing it out only $11 of his demand was due, but he subsequently recovered judgment for the whole amount on the debtor's admission. B. also sued out an attachment against the debtor, which was levied on the same property after that of A., but he recovered judgment first, and caused execution to be levied on the property. B. then filed a bill in chancery to have his lien decreed to have priority over that of A. It was held: (1) That complainant by his attachment acquired a lien on the property, subject only to any lien which A. could lawfully hold under the statute, and that this lien of complainant could not be affected by a subsequent recovery of a judgment to which he was not a party. (2) That he had a right to show, notwithstanding A.'s judgment, that the demand for which it was rendered was not due when the attachment was levied. (3) That less than $100 being due A. when his attachment was levied, the circuit court had no jurisdiction, and the whole amount of A.'s judgment was postponed to B.'s lien.—Hinchman v. Town, 10 Mich. 508.

¶ 243. B. included in his judgment a demand which he believed to be due but which was not so. It was held that he did not, by so including it, debar himself from the right to have his priority protected in equity as to the amount included which actually was due.—Hinchman v. Town, 10 Mich. 508.

¶ 244. The question of priority between A.'s judgment and that portion of B.'s which was not due when his attachment was levied must be determined by the levy of execution; and B.'s being first levied gave him the first lien.—Hinchman v. Town, 10 Mich. 508.

¶ 245. An attachment here upon goods brought into this state takes precedence over a mortgage of them executed and filed in another state, whence they were subsequently brought, but not filed in Michigan.—Corbett v. Littlefield, 84 Mich. 30.

¶ 246. An unrecorded land mortgage has priority over a subsequent attachment levy, though the attaching creditor had no notice of such mortgage at the time he commenced his attachment.—Campbell v. Keys, 130 Mich. 127.

¶ 247. An attachment on personalty in an action by an employee for wages takes priority over a prior unrecorded trust deed, in its nature partly a mortgage on realty and partly a chattel mortgage, though the plaintiff as such employee had actual knowledge of the existence of the mortgage.—City Bank & Trust Co. v. Hurd, 179 Mich. 454.

¶ 248. Comp. L. 1897, § 9224, adopted in 1889 as an amendment to "An act relative to levies of executions on real estate" and providing that "the lien thus obtained shall * * * be valid against all prior grantees and [mortgagees] mortgages of whose claims the party interested shall not have actual nor constructive notice," does not affect section 10564 governing attachments, so as to make an execution levy following a levy of attachment relate back so as to give a lien at the date of attachment superior to an unrecorded mortgage existing at that time.—Campbell v. Keys, 130 Mich. 127.

IX. OBJECTIONS TO WRIT, DISSOLUTION, QUASHAL, AND DISCHARGE.

§ 100. Defects and errors in general.

Grounds for quashal or dissolution, see post §§ 111-113.

Materiality in action for wrongful attachment, see post § 143.

Sufficiency of writ to justify sheriff acting under it, see Sheriffs, IV, A.

¶ 249. Proceeding to enforce a log lien are not vitiated by an excessive levy.—Backus v. Barber, 107 Mich. 468.

filed January 16, 1908. The affidavit was filed January 17, 1908. Held, the proceedings in attachment were invalid, as the clerk's indorsement could not be treated as a mere clerical error.—Holmes v. King, 158 Mich. 445.

¶ 251. In an attachment suit, where the sheriff in making his return certifies by mistake that the inventory is a "true copy" when it is the original, an objection that no inventory was made and filed is technical and without merit.—Yale State Bank v. Fletcher, 173 Mich. 585.

§ 101. Objections open to collateral attack.

In action on release bond, see post § 147.
On collateral attack on execution sale, see Executions, VII, F.
Collateral attack on judgments, see Judgments, VII.

¶ 252. Service having been made upon one of two joint debtors of an attachment on which their joint property had been seized, and jurisdiction thereby obtained, it is not a valid ground of objection to the introduction in evidence of the attachment proceedings, judgment, execution and levy, that the writ of attachment was prematurely returned as to the other joint debtor who was not served.—Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Covert, 35 Mich. 254.

¶ 253. Where the validity of a writ of attachment which does not give the plaintiffs' names in full is brought into question in a collateral suit while the original proceedings are yet open and correction is still possible, evidence of the issue of the writ cannot be rejected on the ground that the writ is void.—Barber v. Smith, 41 Mich. 138.

¶ 254. A writ of attachment issued by the federal court under Mich. Comp. Laws 1871, § 6433, when offered in an action of trespass in a state court against the marshal serving it, is evidence of the authority of the court to command him to attach the property of defendant in that suit, is not void, although it might be avoided on a proper proceeding because of insufficiency of the affidavit, and affords protection to such officer.—Matthews v. Densmore, 109 U. S. 216, 27 L. ed. 912, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 126, reversing 43 Mich. 461.

Sufficiency and time of filing of declaration, see ante § 77.
Failure to serve copy of inventory, see also ante ¶ 204.
On collateral attack on judgment, see Judgments, VII.

¶ 255. Where the affidavit was made the same day that the writ issued, and speaks of being annexed to the writ, it will be presumed that the writ did not pass from the clerk's hands until the affidavit was made, and it is of no consequence whether or not the writ was filled out before the making of the affidavit. Where two acts are done at the same time, that will take effect first which ought in strictness to have been done first in order to give it effect.—Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Covert, 35 Mich. 254.

¶ 256. On a bill in aid of plaintiff's execution, evidence that an affidavit in an attachment suit was filed on the date the writ was issued, is not sufficient to show the affidavit remained in the clerk's custody and was not attached to the writ as required by section 10,556 Comp. L. 1897.—Yale State Bank v. Fletcher, 173 Mich. 585.

¶ 257. In trover where an attachment against the goods and chattels of a partner is levied upon specific partnership property, item by item, the appraisal being made in like manner, there is no room for any presumption that the levy is upon defendant's partnership interest only.—Haynes v. Knowles, 36 Mich. 407.

Nunc pro tunc amendments, see post § 104.
Of affidavit, see ante § 36.
Of the bond for attachment, see ante § 40.
Of return to writ, see ante § 74.

¶ 258. Although the statute of 1839 (Sess. L., p. 228) declared that no writ should be quashed "on account of any defect in the affidavit on which the same issued, provided the plaintiff, his agent or attorney, shall, whenever objection shall be made, file such affidavit as is required by law," it was held that where the original affidavit was void, because sworn to before a person not authorized to administer oaths, this act did not authorize the filing of a new affidavit after judgment and sale of the attached lands.—Greenvault v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan, 2 D. 498.

¶ 259. Even if a new affidavit could be allowed it could not make valid the title of the purchaser of the land under the attachment proceedings against one to whom it had been mortgaged by the defendant while the proceeding was pending.—Greenvault v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan, 2 D. 498.

¶ 260. After trespass has been brought for the seizure of goods under an attachment which was not properly served, the defect in service cannot be cured, for the purpose of defeating the action in trespass, by taking out a new attachment.—Fairbanks v. Bennett, 52 Mich. 61.

¶ 261. Giving of a bond in attachment will not aid a defective inventory, where the bond is given and the property delivered to a person not a party to the proceedings, and not shown to have represented defendants. —Knack v. Berlin, 150 Mich. 550.

¶ 262. After jurisdiction in attachment proceedings is once acquired by proper personal or substituted service, no good reason exists why irregularities may not be waived or corrected.—Goodspeed v. Smith, 161 Mich. 688.

Subsequent amendment of return, see ante ¶ 188.
Subsequent filing of declaration, see ante ¶ 191.

¶ 263. Refusal by the circuit court to allow the affidavit of publication in an attachment suit to be filed nunc pro tunc is justified by the fact that the attached property has been sold to plaintiff under execution issued upon the void judgment.—Savidge v. Ottawa Circuit Judge, 105 Mich. 257.

¶ 264. On an application for leave to file affidavit of publication in attachment nunc pro tunc the point that defendant is estopped from attacking the ensuing execution sale is not necessarily controlling, although it may possibly be raised on the trial of any issue involving the title to the property derived through such sale.—Savidge v. Ottawa Circuit Judge, 105 Mich. 257.

¶ 265. The attachment cannot be dissolved on the application of a defendant who has no claim to have the property restored to him.—Price v. Reed, 20 Mich. 72.

¶ 266. If a defendant in attachment owns and is entitled to have restored to him a portion of the property, he has as clear a right to move for dissolution as if he owned it all.—Patterson v. Goodrich, 31 Mich. 225.

¶ 267. A partner is entitled to have the writ dissolved and the property restored to him where partnership property has been seized without any grounds for the writ having been shown against him.—Edwards v. Hughes, 20 Mich. 289.

¶ 268. A husband in joint possession with his wife of land belonging to her, but used as the family homestead, can apply for a dissolution of an attachment thereon.—Rowe v. Kellogg, 54 Mich. 206; and see Patterson v. Goodrich, 31 Mich. 225.

¶ 269. An attachment levied upon property after it has been conveyed in trust to sell for the benefit of specified creditors, will be set aside at the instance of the trustees in order that they may sell the property to advantage.—Geer v. Traders' Bank of Canada, 132 Mich. 215.

¶ 270. A judgment against partners in an attachment suit will not be vacated, and the writ of attachment quashed, at the instance of a defendant against whom the writ was good, on the ground that it was erroneously issued against the other defendants.—Warren v. Winterstein, 114 Mich. 647.

§ 106. ——Assignor or assignee.

Right of trustees for creditors, see ante ¶ 269.
Bill in equity by assignee, see post § 128.
General effect of assignments, see Assignments, III.

¶ 271. Where the debtor has assigned the property attached he cannot take proceedings for dissolution, as he has no claim to have the property restored to him.—Chandler v. Nash, 5 Mich. 409.

¶ 272. Assignees of an insolvent cannot move for a dissolution of an attachment improperly levied on his land.—Rowe v. Kellogg, 54 Mich. 206; Gott v. Hoschna, 57 Mich. 413.

§ 107. Waiver of objections by appearance or plea.

Appearance as waiving objection that suit was not begun at time of attachment, see Appearance, § 11, ¶ 50.

¶ 273. Judgment rendered after general appearance and plea to the merits in attachment proceedings is good notwithstanding any irregularities prior to such appearance, etc.

—Crane v. Hardy, 1 Mich. 56; Manhard v. Schott, 37 Mich. 234; Bryant v. Hendee, 40 Mich. 543.

¶ 274. A defendant in attachment by appearing and pleading to the action does not preclude himself from applying for a dissolution.—Hyde v. Nelson, 11 Mich. 353.

¶ 275. By appearance and plea to merits defendant in attachment waives all objections to the affidavit for the writ.—Gunn Hardware Co. v. Denison, 83 Mich. 40.

¶ 276. A general appearance by a defendant named in a writ of attachment, and the filing of a plea to the merits, is a waiver of defects in the affidavit for the writ.—John D. Gruber Co. v. Montcalm Circuit Judge, 183 Mich. 477.

¶ 277. A fatal defect in an affidavit for a writ of attachment under the Log Lien Act was not waived by appearing and pleading to the merits.—Woodruff v. Ives, 34 Mich. 320.

¶ 278. Where the bond has but one surety the defect is waived by defendant's appearance.—Bryant v. Hendee, 40 Mich. 543.

¶ 279. A defendant who does not rely on a motion to quash a writ of attachment because of defective service of the writ and inventory, and who brings a proceeding to dissolve the attachment on other grounds, cannot claim that the circuit court has no jurisdiction to render a judgment for costs in the dissolution proceeding when he is defeated.—Stock v. Reynolds, 121 Mich. 356.

¶ 280. Where the defendant has procured a release of the property attached, by executing a bond to the sheriff, he cannot afterwards apply for a dissolution of the attachment.—Paddock v. Matthews, 3 Mich. 18.

¶ 281. Where an attachment under How. St. § 8016a, was granted on an insufficient affidavit, and the property seized was in the possession of a third party who obtained a release by giving bond to pay any judgment that might be recovered against the defendants, such bond, neither of the defendants being a party thereto, does not operate as a waiver of their right to move to quash the attachment.—Pierce v. Johnson, 93 Mich. 125.

By bill to quash or vacate, see post § 128.

¶ 282. The truth of the grounds for the issuance of a writ of attachment alleged in the affidavit can be contested only in the manner provided by section 10595, Comp. Laws 1897, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 13400, that is, by a motion for dissolution.—John D. Gruber Co. v. Montcalm Circuit Judge, 183 Mich. 477.

¶ 283. The only mode by which a defendant in attachment can contest the truth of the facts stated in the affidavit upon which the attachment was issued is by an application for a dissolution of the attachment. He cannot, by plea in abatement, put the facts stated in the affidavit in issue.—Bower v. Town, 12 Mich. 230.

¶ 284. The defendant can only move the court to set aside the proceedings where some defect or irregularity is apparent in the writ or affidavit. If he claims that the case does not authorize an attachment he must take proceedings before a circuit court commissioner for its dissolution.—Roelofson v. Hatch, 3 Mich. 277.

§ 110. Time for motion or petition.

Effect of judgment on dissolution proceedings, see post § 135.

¶ 285. An attachment levied on defendant's goods may be dissolved on his motion made after judgment rendered against him for the debt for which the action was brought.—Gore v. Ray, 73 Mich. 385.

¶ 286. A motion to set aside attachment proceedings because the writ was issued for unliquidated damages, made after defendant has caused his appearance to be entered, is unseasonable, and its allowance irregular.—Roelofson v. Hatch, 3 Mich. 277.

§ 111. Grounds for quashal or dissolution.

Right to quash after giving bond for release, see ante ¶ 281.

Want of jurisdiction as ground for quashal, see also post ¶ 327.

Petition to dissolve as waiver of defect of jurisdiction available on motion to quash, see ante ¶ 279.

Alleging and stating grounds, see post § 117.

Suits to assert conflicting claims, see post XI.

¶ 287. Attachment proceedings are not void by reason of the use of the name George instead of John as a given name of one of the defendants, where the defendants are described as partners under the firm name, and there is no question of their identification in the community.—Van Benschoten v. Fales, 126 Mich. 176.

§ 112. ——Want of good cause for writ.

¶ 288. The commissioner can only dissolve an attachment for reasons going to show that the plaintiff has not "a good and legal cause" for suing out such writ. This includes nothing but an inquiry into the facts or the sufficiency of the affidavit. Other defects are beyond his jurisdiction.—Vinton v. Mead, 17 Mich. 388.

¶ 289. The provision in Comp. L. 1871, § 6430, How. St., § 8028, that if a circuit court commissioner "shall be satisfied that a plaintiff has not a good and legal cause for suing out the writ" he may order an attachment dissolved, refers to the state of facts made to appear at the hearing before him, and not to what appeared to the plaintiff when the affidavit was made; the "good and legal cause" for suing out the writ must be one existing in fact, and not merely in the belief of the plaintiff, however well founded that belief may have appeared to him to be.—Folsom v. Teichner, 27 Mich. 107.

¶ 290. Though an affidavit for attachment states a cause of action it is a sufficient ground for quashing a writ of attachment issued thereon if the cause of action as pleaded is not one sufficient to support the attachment.—Feldman v. Preston, 194 Mich. 352.

§ 113. —Nonexistence of grounds averred.

¶ 291. A writ of attachment issued on the ground that the debt sued for was fraudulently contracted will be dissolved if it appears that part of said claim is not affected by such fraud.—Estlow v. Hanna, 75 Mich. 219.

¶ 292. Where an attachment has been issued on an affidavit in good faith that "the plaintiff has good reason to believe that the defendant has absconded from the state," a showing that the defendant had not in fact absconded will authorize a dissolution of the attachment.—Folsom v. Teichner, 27 Mich. 107.

¶ 293. Where the alleged fraud set up by a plaintiff as the basis of the issuance of a writ of attachment was, if it existed at all, not in the making of the contract on the part of defendant but in refusal by him to carry it out, held that defendant's motion to quash the writ was improperly denied.—Feldman v. Preston, 194 Mich. 352.

¶ 294. It is no bar to the dissolution of an attachment upon property the right to which defendant has not relinquished, that an execution has meanwhile been levied upon it in favor of a third party.—Drs. K. & K. U. S. Medical & Surgical Ass'n v. Post & Tribune Job Printing Co., 58 Mich. 487, overruling Johnson v. De Witt, 36 Mich. 95.

§ 115. Dissolution or quashal procedure in general.

On justices' attachments, see Justices of the Peace, IV, C.

Pendency of dissolution proceeding as ground for dismissal of other action, see Discontinuance, Dismissal and Nonsuit, III.

Applications to dissolve attachments, and procedure thereon, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, §§ 48-51; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13075-13078.

¶ 296. Proceedings to dissolve an attachment are a special statutory remedy, not according to the course of the common law.—Chandler v. Nash, 5 Mich. 409; Genesee County Saving Bank v. Michigan Barge Co., 52 Mich. 164; Rowe v. Kellogg, 54 Mich. 206; Gore v. Ray, 69 Mich. 114.

¶ 297. The proceeding to dissolve an attachment is not to be disfavored or construed with unreasonable strictness, but the remedy cannot be extended beyond the statute.—Rowe v. Kellogg, 54 Mich. 206.

¶ 298. The statute providing for dissolution proceedings applies to attachments levied only on land.—Edgarton v. Hinchman, 7 Mich. 352.

¶ 299. The court out of which an attachment issues is not vested with exclusive jurisdiction in regard to proceedings for dissolution; and the circuit court for the county of Kent in chancery has jurisdiction of a bill by the assignee of an insolvent debtor to dissolve an attachment on the assigned property issued from the superior court of Grand Rapids.—Turner v. Hatch, 100 Mich. 65.

§ 116. ——Jurisdiction of commissioners.

Jurisdictional allegations, see post ¶ 306.

Jurisdictional scope of commissioner's inquiry, see also ante ¶ 288.

Constitutionality of laws giving commissioners and notaries jurisdiction, see Constitutional Law, II.

¶ 300. The statute authorizing circuit court commissioners to dissolve attachments applies to justices' as well as to circuit court attachments.—Albertson v. Edsall, 16 Mich. 203.

¶ 301. Where the circuit court commissioner is disqualified from acting, the application may be made to a commissioner of an adjoining county, and need not be made to the circuit judge for the county of suit.—Hayn v. Farrar, 36 Mich. 258.

¶ 302. To maintain the officer's jurisdiction it must affirmatively appear upon the record.—Chandler v. Nash, 5 Mich. 409.

§ 117. ——Motion, petition and other papers. Issues for decision on hearing, see post § 121.

¶ 303. Dissolution proceedings before a circuit court commissioner need not be entitled as in the original suit; the proceeding is a special one, and the statute so treats it as an independent judicial office and not as a reference in the cause itself.—Hayn v. Farrar, 36 Mich. 258.

¶ 304. The application for a dissolution of an attachment must show that property of the defendant has been attached.—Chandler v. Nash, 5 Mich. 409; Osborne v. Bowles, 20 Mich. 277; Macomber v. Beam, 22 Mich. 86.

¶ 305. An application for dissolution of an attachment must describe the attached property.—Osborne v. Bowles, 20 Mich. 277; Macomber v. Beam, 22 Mich. 86.

¶ 306. An application which does not describe the property, and may show that a parcel of the real property to the value of more than $5.00 was attached, and is now in possession of the sheriff, does not confer jurisdiction upon the circuit court, unless so sued out it should appear.—Nash v. Hyde, 20 Mich. 327.

¶ 307. A statement that an said attachment writ was [illegible] the goods and [illegible] of this defendant [illegible] ment.—Osborne v. Bowles, 20 Mich. 277.

¶ 308. Though an affidavit recites that the property [illegible] the writ [illegible] is not necessary that it should state on the hearing that the property was [illegible] Bowles, 42 Mich. 487.

¶ 309. The application should contain an [illegible] possession.—Nash v. De Witt, 5 Mich. 409; Bowles, 42 Mich. 487.

¶ 312. A petition which prays for the dissolution of an attachment for the reason that the affidavit made for it was false, and that the petitioner was not (as alleged therein) about to assign or dispose of his property with intent to defraud his creditors, and which is verified by the petitioner's oath, is held not open to objection after a hearing on the merits for insufficiency, in that it does not directly, under oath, negative the cause assigned for suing out the writ.—Patterson v. Goodrich, 31 Mich. 225.

¶ 313. An application for the dissolution of an attachment by one of the defendants, alleging that she has not assigned, disposed of, or concealed, or attempted to assign, dispose of, or conceal, her property, or any part thereof, with intent to defraud her creditors, is sufficient to cover all property owned by her, whether individually or jointly with a codefendant, the affidavit alleging that they had so done with "their" property.—Cottrell v. Hathaway, 108 Mich. 479.

¶ 314. A petition to dissolve an attachment is not bad because it denies, alternatively, that defendant has assigned, disposed of or concealed his property with intent, &c.—First National Bank v. Steele, 81 Mich. 83.

¶ 315. A petition for dissolution of attachment is bad which denies, conjunctively, that defendant "has assigned, disposed of, and that he is about to assign, dispose of, and conceal, his property with intent to defraud his creditors, or that he has made any fraudulent disposition whatever of his property with such intent."—Shaw v. Hays, 113 Mich. 244.

¶ 316. An affidavit for an attachment charging that "the defendant is about to remove his property from said county and refuses and neglects to pay or secure payment of his debt," is not sufficiently denied by a petition for dissolution, which contains a denial, not in broad terms the charge limited to a neglect and refusal to pay" with a traversing intent.—Shaw v. Reynolds, 111 Mich. 350.

¶ 317. A denial of the misleadingness in a petition for dissolution of an attachment, which omits a statement of the affidavit that the defendant refuses and neglects to pay the plaintiff's claim," and is important when the affidavit does not charge a refusal to pay," with the traversing intent.—Shaw v. Reynolds, 111 Mich. 350.

¶ 318. An application for the dissolution of an attachment must be verified by oath.—Osborne v. Bowles, 20 Mich. 277.

§ 120. ——Citation and service thereof.

Service of citation on attorney, see Attorneys, § 16.

Rules as to services of notices other than process in general, see Notices.

¶ 319. Unless a party follows up his application with proper citation the whole proceeding will be void.—Pearson v. Creslin, 16 Mich. 281.

¶ 320. R. S. 1838, p. 3, § 3, subd. 11, How. St., § 8028, requires that a citation for the dissolution of an attachment shall be served at least three days before the return day. Held, that the day of service and the day of return must both be excluded in computing the time.—Dousman v. O'Malley, 1 D. 450.

¶ 321. Under How. St., § 8028, requiring a citation for dissolution of attachment to be "served three days at least before the return day thereof," Sunday is to be excluded in computing the three days; accordingly service on the fourth day before return day is bad.—Caupfield v. Cook, 92 Mich. 626.

¶ 322. Under How. St., § 8028, requiring the citation in proceedings to dissolve an attachment to be served on the plaintiff at least three days before the return day, a service made on the fourth day before the return day, one of the intervening days being a Sunday, is insufficient.—First Nat. Bank v. Williams Milling Co., 110 Mich. 15.

¶ 323. Under How. St., § 8028, providing that the citation in proceedings to dissolve an attachment shall be served by reading it to the plaintiff, if found within the county, and, if not, that it may be served upon his agent or attorney, service upon the attorney of a triplicate original instead of a copy and without reading the citation to him is insufficient.—Cleland v. Clark, 111 Mich. 336.

See also ante ¶ 288.

Office and scope of motion to quash or petition to dissolve, see also ante § 109.

¶ 324. An application for dissolution is in the nature of a motion and can be disposed of at chambers. (Comp. L. ch. 201, How. St ch. 275.) But there must be a hearing and a trial of the questions of fact involved before a judge or circuit court commissioner, and he is to adjudicate questions of both law and fact, and may apply the rules that govern the trial of such issues.—Genesee County Sav. Bank v. Michigan Barge Co., 52 Mich. 164.

¶ 325. Proceedings in applications for dissolving attachments stand upon the same basis as other suits, so that the rights of the parties upon the hearing are to be adjudicated as they were at the time the proceedings were commenced, unless the defendant, by his own acts, has lost his right to the possession of the property; and the right to determine the legality of the issue of the writ and the levy thereunder remains, and is not affected by a judgment in the main case.—Calvert Lithographing, Engraving & Map Pub. Co. v. Doctors K. & K. U. S. Medical & Surgical Ass'n, 61 Mich. 336.

¶ 326. Proceedings to dissolve an attachment are interlocutory, and do not affect the merits of the main action.—Genesee County Sav. Bank v. Michigan Barge Co., 52 Mich. 164.

¶ 327. A defendant in attachment may appear and move to quash the writ and vacate the judgment for want of jurisdiction, and may support his motion by affidavits showing that plaintiff, under How. St., § 7986, had no right to proceed in attachment; and where upon the face of the proceedings no want of jurisdiction to issue the writ or enter judgment appears, plaintiff is entitled to frame an issue upon each motion and contest the questions raised outside of the record.—Stringer v. Dean, 61 Mich. 196.

¶ 328. Where a motion to quash a writ of attachment is based on a denial by the defendant of the truth of the plaintiff's affidavit on which the attachment was issued, stating that the defendant was guilty of fraud in contracting with the plaintiff, the fundamental question is whether the defendant is shown to have been guilty of some material deceptive act, word or concealment done, said or suffered by him with intent to induce and which did induce the plaintiff to enter into the contract sued upon and consent to the debt, and not merely whether he subsequently dishonestly breached the contract and thereby wronged or defrauded the plaintiff.—Feldman v. Preston, 194 Mich. 352.

¶ 329. A writ of attachment is good if the party who sues it out has good reason to believe that a proper cause exists for it; but in proceedings to dissolve it the existence of reasons for his belief is not necessarily in issue, but the court inquires whether the defendant had actually done as plaintiff believed.—Blanchard v. Brown, 42 Mich. 46.

¶ 330. A question as to the existence of the indebtedness cannot be tried in a proceeding to dissolve an attachment, as the contention that there was no debt to refuse payment of, is addressed to the merits of the action.—Stock v. Reynolds, 121 Mich. 356.

10770, are void because the relators included in their statement more than was due, can only be disposed of at the hearing and cannot be tried upon ex parte affidavits in a motion to quash.—Ruggles v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 124 Mich. 472.

§ 122. ——Presumptions and burden of proof.

¶ 332. Plaintiff has the burden of showing that attachment should not be dissolved.—Carver v. Chapell, 70 Mich. 49.

¶ 333. On an application for dissolution the burden of proof is upon plaintiff to sustain the averments in the affidavit for the writ as to the existence of the statutory causes authorizing its issue.—Iosco County Sav. Bank v. Barnes, 100 Mich. 1.

¶ 334. Upon proceedings to dissolve an attachment plaintiff has the burden of showing affirmatively, sufficient cause for issuing the writ, existing and continuing at the time of the hearing of the motion to dissolve.—McMorran v. [illegible], 111 Mich. [illegible].

¶ 335. In dissolution proceedings the burden is upon the plaintiff in attachment to show cause why the attachment should not be dissolved, and he must establish the existence of such facts as justified the issuance of the writ.—Mumford v. Ryan, 72 Mich. 386; Brown v. Kimball, 76 Mich. 74; Genesee County Sav. Bank v. Michigan Buggy Co., 82 Mich. 164; Carver v. Chapell, 70 Mich. 49.

¶ 336. Proof is not admissible from mere hearsay of account, and where an attachment is issued on the ground of fraud, the burden of proving it is upon the plaintiff.—[illegible] v. Wells, 44 Mich. 527.

den of proof is on the plaintiff to sustain the truth of the affidavit on which the writ was issued.—Feldman v. Preston, 194 Mich. 352.

¶ 343. In action begun by attachment based on the ground of assignment of property with intent to defraud creditors, the burden is on plaintiff to prove the grounds alleged in the affidavit; and proof that defendant stated to plaintiff that he owed only certain debts, whereas there were others, coupled with proof that he then gave a chattel mortgage to secure plaintiff and all the others does not shift the burden to defendant to show that the debts secured by the mortgage were bona fide.—Rickel v. Strelinger, 102 Mich. 41.

Weight and sufficiency, see post § 124.
General law of evidence, see Evidence.
Examination and cross-examination of witnesses, see Examination of Witnesses.

¶ 344. In a proceeding to dissolve an attachment, evidence is admissible that the debt for the same has been secured by mortgage, and the defendant can be examined as to its execution.—Brown v. Kimball, 76 Mich. 74.

¶ 345. In a proceeding to dissolve an attachment sued out on plaintiff's belief that defendant had disposed of and was disposing of property with intent to defraud creditors, it being shown that the property seized was exempt from execution, it did not become defendant, but was bound by his duty to surrender the same to the officer, and not to plaintiff.—Carver v. Chapell, 70 Mich. 49.

¶ 346. In proceedings to dissolve an attachment, evidence that one [illegible] the attachment was defendant's homestead is not [illegible]. Though [illegible] the time when defendant had a right to dispose of property with intent to defraud creditors, and not to plaintiff.—Carver v. Chapell, 70 Mich. 49.

¶ 347. At the hearing of a motion to dissolve a writ of attachment against [illegible] is competent for [illegible] to show what interest the [illegible] had in the stock of goods.—Feldman v. [illegible], 194 Mich. 352.

¶ 345. An attachment having been issued on an affidavit that defendant was about to remove his property from the state with intent to defraud his creditors, defendant took proceedings before a circuit court commissioner for its dissolution. On the hearing defendant testified that when the writ was served he did not know that he was owing any one. This evidence was given with a disclaimer of any intent to raise the question of an indebtedness to the plaintiff in this proceeding. It was held that the evidence was proper as bearing on the question of fraudulent intent.—Hyde v. Nelson, 11 Mich. 353.

¶ 346. On motion for the dissolution of an attachment, evidence that the defendant a short time previous made an arrangement with a person to take his property under a pretended sale, in order to cover the same from the defendant's creditors, and that the person took possession of it under this arrangement, is material and should be admitted.—Parker v. Luce, 14 Mich. 9.

¶ 347. Although, to justify the issue of a writ of attachment on the ground of a fraudulent disposition of property, the intent to defraud must have existed at the time the writ issued, the subsequent conduct of the parties may properly be considered, upon an application to dissolve the writ, for the purpose of throwing light upon such intent; e. g., the execution of a subsequent chattel mortgage and what was done under it.—McMorran v. Moore, 113 Mich. 101.

¶ 348. On motion to dissolve attachment evidence of the amount of money paid by defendant to plaintiff during their business dealings is inadmissible on the question of fraudulent concealment, though it might be relevant to the ground of fraud.—Finlay Brewing Co. v. Prost, 111 Mich. 635.

¶ 349. The giving of a chattel mortgage by an insolvent debtor to a trustee to secure bona fide debts is no evidence of an intent to defraud anybody, but is evidence of an attempt to secure the mortgagor's creditors. —Rickel v. Strelinger, 102 Mich. 41.

¶ 350. Upon the hearing on a petition to dissolve an attachment, evidence by defendant to show that he did not owe plaintiff anything, or did not believe that he owed him anything is admissible for the purpose of showing want of bad faith in dealing with the property.—Dimmock v. Cole, 130 Mich. 601.

¶ 351. In proceedings to dissolve an attachment evidence is insufficient to support an allegation in the affidavit, that plaintiff had good reason to believe defendant was about to dispose of his property to defraud his creditors, if it relates only to a mortgage by the debtor to his wife, to secure a past bona fide indebtedness and future advances and a mortgage to creditors in good faith made for the extension of credit to him and the furnishing him with more goods so as to enable him to go on with his business.—Armstrong v. Cook, 95 Mich. 257.

¶ 352. Evidence that a debtor is temporarily absent from the county for health's sake does not show that he has absconded, so as to justify attachment. "Absconding" involves the design to withdraw clandestinely, to hide or conceal oneself, for the purpose of avoiding legal proceedings.— McMorran v. Moore, 113 Mich. 101.

¶ 354. Evidence tending to show that a debtor, shortly prior to executing a chattel mortgage to a trustee to secure his creditors, stated to a member of a firm to which he was indebted that he had no debts aside from that of said firm and one other creditor, who was also secured by the mortgage, will not establish the fact that other claims secured by the mortgage, and which purport to have been incurred several months prior to the making of said statements, are not bona fide.—Rickel v. Strelinger, 102 Mich. 41.

¶ 355. Where, in proceedings for the dissolution of attachments based upon the claim that the indebtedness sued for was fraudulently contracted, it appears that the reports of a commercial agency, upon the strength of which the credit was extended, were based upon the sworn reports of the defendant corporation to the Secretary of State, and that said reports were false, and could have been made for no other purpose than that of establishing a false credit, said claim is sufficiently established.—Emerson v. Detroit Steel & Spring Co., 100 Mich. 127.

¶ 356. The giving of a mortgage for $100,000 and receiving thereon only $50,000, is not evidence of fraud or concealment where all the money received but $6,000 was paid out to creditors and the reason for the discrepancy in amount is explained—the mortgage itself having been given to raise money for the adjustment of debts for which the mortgagor was liable as indorser or otherwise; nor is the refusal to disclose to one creditor the place where the $6,000 is kept, evidence of fraud, when it is kept for the purpose of carrying out such adjustment, and to pay interest on the amount necessary to do so.—Iosco County Sav. Bank v. Barnes, 140 Mich. 1.

§ 357. On a motion to dissolve the writ defendant in an attachment suit based upon the alleged concealment of property with intent to defraud creditors cannot overcome proof of judgments against him and a false denial to the officer that he had property subject to levy by showing that the judgments were rendered against him as accommodation indorser; since the obligation to pay such debts is the same as to pay debts otherwise contracted.—Finley Brewing Co. v. Prost, 111 Mich. 635.

§ 358. Findings of fact in a proceeding to dissolve an attachment that the defendant had sold two carloads of wheat to the plaintiff, that one car was shipped and paid for, that the other car was not up to the grade agreed upon and was returned, the plaintiff being repaid for it, and that the defendant refused to send another car when demanded, the price of wheat having advanced, justifies a conclusion that the defendant denied liability and refused to pay any sum due upon the claim of the plaintiff in view of a refusal to dissolve the attachment which otherwise would have been dissolved.—Stuck v. Bayliss, 121 Mich. 356.

§ 359. An order dissolving an attachment will not be disturbed where there is evidence tending to show that defendant did not know that he was indebted to plaintiff, though plaintiff's claims were established, the evidence sufficiently showed an intent to defraud creditors.—Tannock v. Cole, 13 Mich. 481.

§ 360. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 7304, providing that the requirements of an affidavit in attachment, a levy under attachment for personal property, consisting of property which can be set off in value to the amount of the debt, that the defendant cannot be found in the county, and that the garnishee has no property in his hands, or not enough to satisfy the debt, after paying prior claims, are jurisdictional, and must appear in the record to support the judgment, if the garnishee has property in his hands worth $1,000, which after paying prior claims of $1,000 of unsecured debts—Ed. Note.—Dissolution, see 111 Mich. 635.

See post § 126.

Dissolution of garnishment, see post § 127.

Effect of judgment on the [illegible] proceedings, see post § 145.

Effect on liability on bond where plaintiff recovers on the debt, see post § 145.

Dismissal as consequence, see Discontinuance, Dismissal and Nonsuit.

Discharge of real estate attachment on the record, see Jud. Act. Chap. XXVI, § 47; Comp. L. 1915, § 13074.

§ 361. Dissolution of attachment does not oust jurisdiction if personal service has been had.—Hills v. Moore, 40 Mich. 210; overruled by Borland v. Kingsbury, 65 Mich. 39; Burnside v. Davis, 65 Mich. 74.

§ 362. Dissolution of an unjust attachment does not affect third party's execution lien.—Drs. K. & K. U. S. Medical & Surgical Ass'n. v. Post & Tribune Job Printing Co., 58 Mich. 487.

§ 126. Review of dissolution.

Nature, office and scope of certiorari in general, see Certiorari.

Reviewability on error of dissolution proceedings, see Appeal and Error, § 16.

Final orders reviewable by writ of error, see Appeal and Error, § 32.

Appeal or error as affecting rights under attachment, see Appeal and Error, IX.

§ 363. No appeal lies from a circuit judge to the circuit court in dissolution proceedings on attachment.—Harvey v. Pealer, 53 Mich. 572.

§ 364. Dissolution proceedings are collateral to the main suit and a commissioner's order of dissolution is interlocutory only releasing the property from the lien of the writ; it is not a judgment, nor is an order of the court affirming it on certiorari.—Gray v. York, 44 Mich. 415.

Appeal, error or certiorari from decision of circuit court, see Appeal and Error; Certiorari.

Provisions as to appeals from decision of circuit commissioner, see Jud. Act. Chap. XXVI, § 32; Comp. L. 1915, § 13059.

§ 366. On appeal from the dissolution of an attachment the circuit court, instead of proceeding with the trial, ordered an issue to be tried in which plaintiff had waived and abandoned his appeal, and without allowing any testimony to be given the jury affirmed the dissolution and ordered the property to be restored to defendant, held error.—Detroit Iron Works Co. v. Drs. K. & K. U. S. Medical & Surgical Ass'n, 54 Mich. 605.

¶ 367. Where an attachment has been dissolved by a commissioner and the goods taken off by other parties, a resort by plaintiff, pending appeal from such dissolution, to other means of collection, which proved ineffectual, cannot be treated as an abandonment or waiver of the appeal.—Detroit Free Press Co. v. Drs. K. & K. U. S. Medical § Surgical Ass'n, 64 Mich. 605.

§ 128. Bill to quash or vacate.

Right of assignee for creditors to move for dissolution, see also ante § 106.
Bill by subsequent attaching creditors, see post § 132.
Power of chancery in supervision of assigned estate to set aside attachments, see Assignments for Creditors, § 38.
Power of equity to dissolve void attachment in aid of assignment at suit of assignee, see Assignments for Creditors, § 40.

¶ 368. A bill in equity lies to set aside an attachment lien on the ground of fraud where the affidavit was made without any honest belief in the facts sworn to, and where plaintiff has not lost his equity.—Byles v. Rowe, 64 Mich. 522, affirming lower court by equal division.

¶ 369. An insolvent's assignee may file a bill in equity for the purpose of dissolving attachments improperly levied on such insolvent's lands.—Gott v. Hoschna, 57 Mich. 413.

¶ 370. As an assignee for the benefit of creditors cannot intervene in an attachment suit and move for a dissolution of the writ as affecting the assigned property, his remedy to have the attachment set aside is in chancery.—Turner v. Hatch, 100 Mich. 65; Emerson v. Detroit Steel & Spring Co., 100 Mich. 127.

¶ 371. Where, in proceedings in equity by the assignee of an insolvent debtor to dissolve attachments of the assigned property, it appears that only part of the indebtedness was due when the attachment suits were commenced, and there is nothing to indicate any fraudulent intent on plaintiffs' part in averring the amount of their claims, or any collusion between them and the debtor, their liens will be sustained for the amount so due, it appearing that there was sufficient cause for the issue of the writs.—Emerson v. Detroit Steel & Spring Co., 100 Mich. 127.

§ 129. Discharge by act of parties or operation of law.

Revival on death of party, see ante § 90.
Discharge of release bond by act of discontinuance, see post § 148.
Effect of delay in taking and entering default, see post ¶ 387.
Dissolution or annulment of attachment by bankrutpcy, see Bankruptcy, § 9.

¶ 372. Whether tender of an amount in litigation can discharge an attachment, quere. And, if it could, it would not make valid a transfer of the property attached, if void as against the creditor, or prevent assailing it on execution, except as to intervening bona fide purchasers or encumbrancers.—Chase v. Welsh, 45 Mich. 345.

¶ 373. An attachment levy is not released by a delay of a little more than two months in levying execution thereunder.—Geiges v. Greiner, 68 Mich. 153.

X. PROCEEDINGS IN AID OF WRIT OR LEVY.

[Note. Actions for tortious interference with goods or property under levy, involving the rights or interests of the sheriff or of the parties, will ordinarily depend on the sufficiency of the plaintiff's rights in the property or on the fact of the interference. See generally ante VI, C, post XI; and see topics Conversion; Trespass; Sheriffs, IV. In aid of executions there may be a bill in aid of the writ. As to such bills, see Creditors' Suits; Executions, VII, F; and also Fraudulent Conveyances.]
Revival of proceedings after death of defendant, see ante § 90.

¶ 374. Whether a bill in equity lies to protect and enforce the lien of attachment, quære.—Van Norman v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 45 Mich. 204.

¶ 375. Where execution in an attachment suit brought to enforce a lien for labor on logs has been returned unsatisfied because the defendant owners, who were duly served in the suit, have removed the logs attached beyond the officer's reach, plaintiff may recover the amount of his lien in trover or case against such owners.—Goodrow v. Buckley, 70 Mich. 513.

XI. TITLE AND CONFLICTING CLAIMS TO PROPERTY.

§ 131. Title and transfers of interest.

See also post ¶ 379.
Rights of other creditors, see also ante ¶ 234.
Inchoate nature of right until judgment and sale, see ante § 95.

Application of transferee to set aside default, see post § 137.
Outstanding title as defense to action on release bond, see post § 147.
Rights of carrier surrendering chattels on attachment, see Carriers, II, C.

¶ 376. In an attachment proceeding, where defendant had parted with the title to the realty in question before leaving the jurisdiction, the right to the title was between his grantee and the plaintiff in attachment; and the attachment defendant has no interest in the question of title.—Peterson v. Swenningston, 178 Mich. 294.

§ 132. Conflicting claims and suits thereon.

Who may give bond for release, see ante § 65.
Right to move for dissolution, see ante §§ 105-108.
Bill to quash or have relief, see ante § 128.
Right of attachment defendant to litigate title after transfer, see ante ¶ 376.

Interventions in log lien suits, see Forestry, III.
Who may question fraudulent conveyance, see Fraudulent Conveyances, II, III.
Impropriety of replevin generally to retake attached goods, see Replevin, I.

¶ 377. Subsequent attaching creditors cannot contest the attachment proceedings in the name of the debtor; but they may by bill in chancery contest the lien on the ground of fraud.—Hale v. Chandler, 3 Mich 531.

¶ 378. An attaching officer can seize goods that are subject to a chattel mortgage, and can hold them for the purposes of inventory and appraisal until he ascertains that there is nothing above the mortgage debt; but, if he attaches in defiance of the mortgage, claiming it to be void as against the attachment creditor, the mortgagee may bring replevin against him at once without demand.—Merrill v. Denton, 73 Mich. 628.

¶ 379. In trover by the vendee of goods against a sheriff, who attached them at the suit of the vendor's creditors, plaintiff, as between the vendor and himself, is the owner, and the only defence available to defendant is that the sale was made with intent to defraud creditors.—Bendetson v. Moody, 100 Mich. 553.

¶ 380. Where the defendant in a criminal prosecution forfeited his bail, and his bondsman to reimburse himself levied an attachment upon defendant's property, a third party could not intervene and claim the property levied on.—Peterson v. Swenningston, 178 Mich. 294.

See also post ¶ 402.
Presumptions and evidence as to fraudulency against creditors, see Fraudulent Conveyances, V.
The title or right will generally depend on a sale or other transfer of title or on some other issue of fact which is elsewhere specifically treated. See for example, Chattel Mortgages; Sales; Mortgages; Fraudulent Conveyances; Fraud; Notice and Record of Title.
For the general law of evidence on questions of competency, see Evidence.

¶ 381. In an action of assumpsit on a bond given by a claimant of attached property where there was a sale of the stock and fixtures of a saloon, including the tax certificate, the mere fact that the attempted sale of the tax certificate was illegal, and that the conduct of the business was unlawful, would not warrant a jury, where undisputed evidence showed the transaction to be bona fide, in disregarding the undisputed testimony, and finding that the buyer was in fact carrying on the business for the seller.—Rogan v. Gustafson, 151 Mich. 508.

XII. JUDGMENT, SALE, AND DISPOSAL OF PROCEEDS.

§ 134. Judgment in general.

Provisions as to judgment and execution, whether on personal service or appearance or on published service, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, §§ 25-27; Comp. L. 1915 §§ 13052-13054.

¶ 382. The plaintiff is not limited in his recovery by the amount sworn to be due in the affidavit on which the attachment was issued, if, by the proof, a greater amount is shown to be due.—Pew v. Yoare, 12 Mich. 16.

¶ 383. Judgment rendered in an attachment suit for want of appearance and plea cannot exceed the sum sworn as due in the affidavit, with interest.—Rose v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 74 Mich. 332.

Priorities between judgments, see ante § 98.
Effect on pending dissolution proceedings, see ante ¶ 325.
Effect where service as to one joint defendant is lacking because of premature return, see also ante ¶ 252.
Effect of judgment for plaintiff to discharge bond, see post § 145.
Dissolution of attachment after judgment, see ante § 110.

¶ 384. Where there is no personal service a judgment in attachment binds the property only, and falls if the lien is not perfected or if the attachment is dissolved.—Davis Sewing Machine Co. v. Whitney, 61 Mich. 518; Churchill v. Goldsmith, 64 Mich. 250.

¶ 385. Judgment for the debt does not oust dissolution proceedings.—Gore v. Ray, 73 Mich. 385.

Time for default and judgment, see also ante ¶ 190.
General law of defaults, see Defaults.

¶ 386. Judgment based on attachment and publication is void if based on default entered under declaration filed before filing of proof of publication.—Steere v. Vanderberg, 67 Mich. 530; Nugent v. Nugent, 70 Mich. 52.

¶ 387. In attachment proceedings an omission to enter a default at the earliest practical time does not render the court without jurisdiction or make void the proceedings.—Goodspeed v. Smith, 161 Mich. 688.

¶ 388. In an attachment suit in which notice has been given by publication, and in which defendant has not appeared, a default entered without the filing of the affidavit of publication required by Laws 1891, Act No. 8, is premature, and judgment thereupon is void.—Savidge v. Ottawa Circuit Judge, 105 Mich. 257.

(1 Mich. Dig. 85)

§ 137. ——Setting aside judgment or default.

In general, see Defaults, VI; Judgments, V, VI.

¶ 391. Where the defendant is a nonresident and had no notice of the proceedings in season to make his defence, and has been guilty of no laches, the circuit court may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, set aside the judgment and permit him to plead, even though a term has elapsed.—Loree v. Reeves, 2 Mich. 133; Hurlburt v. Reed, 5 Mich. 30.

¶ 392. A judgment in an attachment suit cannot be set aside for irregularity, on the motion of a person to whom the property attached had been conveyed by the defendant, after service of the attachment, but who is a stranger to the record.—People ex rel. Hyde v. Calhoun Circuit Judges, 1 D. 417.

§ 138. Execution and sale.

Provisions in order for sale as to payment of proceeds, see post ¶ 397.
Continuation of lien until time for execution, see ante § 94.
Sale of perishables pending the action, see post § 139.
Effect of delaying execution to discharge lien, see ante §§ 94, 129.
Priority of execution levy, relation back to attachment on land, see ante ¶ 248.
Nature of rights before execution and sale under the judgment, see ante § 95.
General law of executions and procedure on executions, see Executions.
Sale of encumbered property, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 34; Comp. L. 1915, § 13061.

¶ 393. The order for sale of the real property attached, under R. S. 1838, must have been directed to the sheriff in office, and not to his predecessor who served the writ.—Crane v. Hardy, 1 Mich. 56.

¶ 394. In order to make a levy upon and sale of an equitable interest available, proceedings must be taken within one year thereafter to determine the rights and equities of the judgment debtor in the premises.—Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 453.

¶ 396. Lumber and shingles are not perishable property, within the meaning of that term as used in How. St., § 8011, which authorizes the sale, on the order of the court or judge thereof, of "perishable property" seized under a writ of attachment.—Mosher v. Bay Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 579.

§ 140. Payment and disposal of proceeds.

¶ 397. Where one creditor only obtained judgment in a suit commenced by writ of attachment, it was not necessary that the order of sale of the property attached, authorized by R. S. 1838, p. 511, § 17, should require the money arising from the sale to be paid into court; but if it required the same to be paid to the plaintiff, this would not vitiate either the order or the proceedings under it.—People ex rel. Hyde v. Calhoun Circuit Judges, 1 D. 417.

§ 141. Return of sale, and further proceedings.

Return on executions in general, see Executions, IX.

¶ 398. Where the sheriff's return of sale does not show all the steps required by law to make the sale valid, the circuit court may, upon application founded upon affidavit, grant an amendment of the return.—People ex rel. Hyde v. Calhoun Circuit Judges, 1 D. 417.

XIII. LIABILITY FOR WRONGFUL OR ERRONEOUS ATTACHMENT.

§ 142. In general.

Curative amendments after action brought for wrongful attachment, see ante §§ 103, 104.

Replevin by chattel mortgagee superior to attachment, see ante ¶ 378.

Liability on the bond, see post XIV.

Liability to third persons claiming by superior right or title and not in privity to the attachment proceeding, see ante XI.

Wrongful attachment as Conversion, Trespass, Malicious Prosecution, see those topics.

Liability of sheriffs and other levying officers, and of the plaintiff to the writ for the acts of the sheriff, see Sheriffs, IV.

Question of fact on justification by plea of fraudulent conveyance, see Fraudulent Conveyances, V.

Time of action as limiting issues in action for tortious sale or levy, see Conversion. II.

Damage questions, see Damages.

¶ 399. In an action to recover the value of property wrongfully attached by defendants the question whether the property was exempt becomes immaterial where the attachment proceedings prove to be void.—Mears v. Cornwall, 73 Mich. 78.

¶ 400. Where an attachment has been dissolved before a hearing of the motion to dissolve it, and the right of defendant to make counterclaim for damages resulting from the levying of the writ has been agreed upon by the parties, the only question is as to the amount of defendant's damages, and it is wholly immaterial whether the attachment was properly sued out or whether the plaintiff had cause for suing out the writ.—Brown v. Speigel, 167 Mich. 645.

Conclusiveness of return, see ante § 75.

Presumptions and evidence as to existence of grounds on motion to dissolve, see ante §§ 122-124.

In action against sheriff, see also Sheriffs, VI.

Time when judgment becomes admissible as evidence of facts adjudged, see Evidence, VIII, C; Former Adjudication, II, A.

¶ 401. In an action for damages from a wrongful attachment, where malice is neither alleged nor shown, it is assumed that there was no wrong in issuing the writ. —Blanchard v. Brown, 42 Mich. 46.

¶ 402. A vendee suing as owner of goods attached by the vendor's creditors, who attack the sale as fraudulent, has the burden of showing that at the time of the attachment the sale or transfer of the goods had been completed and the title had passed.—Buckingham v. Tyler, 74 Mich. 101.

¶ 403. In a suit for damages from a wrongful attachment, the affidavit for attachment and the other proceedings are properly put in evidence by the defendant.—Blanchard v. Brown, 42 Mich. 46.

¶ 404. The fact that an attachment is issued before the debt on which it is founded is conclusively established is not a sufficient reason for holding that the attaching creditor cannot show that the attached property is in fact the debtor's, when sued for it by a third person, who claims it by a title which is fraudulent as against the attaching creditor.—Trowbridge v. Bullard, 81 Mich. 451.

¶ 405. In an action by a vendee against a sheriff for the value of goods attached at the suit of the vendor's creditors upon valid writs, proof of the tender of the goods to the plaintiff by the sheriff, and affidavits for continuance of the suit made by him and his attorneys, are inadmissible in support of the plaintiff's theory that the attaching creditors and the sheriff knew that the sale was an honest one, and that the attachments were levied for vexatious purposes, there being no evidence in the case tending to show that the sheriff was actuated by any malice in the transaction, but, on the contrary, it appearing that he was undertaking simply to perform his duty as he understood it.—Buckingham v. Tyler, 74 Mich. 101.

XIV. LIABILITY ON BOND OR SECURITY.

§ 145. On attachment bond.

On release bond, see post §§ 146-148.
Common law liability not on bond, see ante XIII.
General law of bonds, see Bonds.

¶ 406. If the plaintiff recovers judgment, even though the attachment is dissolved, the bond is satisfied.—Hahn v. Seifert, 64 Mich. 647.

¶ 407. The bond covers a reasonable counsel fee for defendant on obtaining a dissolution of the attachment; and in a suit on the bond it is proper to leave the jury, in view of all the evidence, to estimate the injury and loss to the attachment defendant during the time that plaintiff was in possession of his place of business.—Swift v. Plessner, 39 Mich. 178.

¶ 408. The express obligation of sureties on an attachment bond is not enlarged by showing that the defendant in the attachment suit was an individual doing business in a firm name, and that he suffered the damages caused by the attachment.—Ermeling v. Bargh, 121 Mich. 167.

§ 146. On release bond.

On attachment bond, see ante § 145.
On release bond, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 18; Comp. L. 1915, § 13045.

¶ 409. Where the bond, for release of attachment, is conditioned to pay the judgment, or where it is to produce the property, or in default thereof to pay the judgment, plaintiff, upon its breach, may recover the full amount of the judgment irrespective of the value of the property attached.—Phansteihl v. Vanderhoof, 22 Mich. 296; Dorr v. Clark, 7 Mich. 310; Goebel v. Stevenson, 35 Mich. 172.

§ 147. ——Defenses.

¶ 410. It is no defence to a suit on a release bond in attachment on which property has been delivered by the sheriff to the obligors that the property did not belong to the defendant in the attachment, or that it was encumbered. Parties bonding property under the statute must take it on the statutory conditions.—Dorr v. Clark, 7 Mich. 310.

¶ 411. Sureties on the defendant's bond in attachment cannot, when sued on it, object to the sufficiency of the affidavit for the writ, when they have already expressly stipulated that the attachment suit was begun in due form of law, and where the defendant in attachment himself, though personally served, did not question its sufficiency and let judgment go against him.—Goebel v. Stevenson, 35 Mich. 172.

¶ 412. Whether the sureties, having recognized the sheriff's levy and possession by a recital of such in the forthcoming bond, can dispute such recitals, quære.—Patch v. Wessels, 46 Mich. 249.

¶ 414. The bond given by the sureties must be considered as referring to the suit as then constituted. A subsequent discontinuance by the plaintiff as to a part of the defendants may so vary or affect the sureties' obligation as to release them.—Andre v. Fitzhugh, 18 Mich. 93.

¶ 415. Attachment suit against three. The usual bond was given under the statute to procure the release of the property attached. Afterwards the plaintiff discontinued as against two defendants. Held, that the sureties in the bond were thereby released.—Andre v. Fitzhugh, 18 Mich. 93.

¶ 416. The requirement of two freeholders as sureties on a bond for release is for the sheriff's protection only, and does not affect the liability of either surety or of the principal.—Gibbs v. Johnson, 63 Mich. 671.

When execution is prerequisite to suit on bond, see Jud. Act, Chap. XXVI, § 28; Comp. L. 1915, § 13055.

¶ 417. Comp. L. 1857, § 4159, as amended by L. 1863, p. 102 (How. St., § 7344), permitting the assignee of a bond, note or other chose in action to sue in his own name, was not meant to affect the special provisions on bonds for the release of property under attachment.—Forrest v. O'Donnell, 42 Mich. 556.

¶ 418. A plaintiff in an action on an attachment bond is not estopped from showing that he was doing business under a certain name to which the bond ran, that he was the party named in the attachment suit, and that he was damaged individually by such suit, by the fact that the plaintiff in the attachment suit styled the attachment defendant as a foreign corporation in the affidavit and other proceedings in that suit.—Ermeling v. Bargh, 121 Mich. 167.

¶ 419. In assumpsit on a bond given by the claimant of attached property and his surety, where the evidence was clear and undisputed that the transaction by which claimant got possession of the debtor's property was bona fide, and that there was no scheme to defraud creditors of the debtor, the court erred in submitting the question of fraud to the jury.—Rogan v. Gustafson, 151 Mich. 508.

¶ 3. A party cannot appear in a court of record by an agent who is not an attorney duly licensed to practice.—Cobb v. Grand Rapids Superior Court Judge, 43 Mich. 289.

¶ 4. Section 1122, 1 Comp. L. 1897, authorizes the State Board of Law Examiners to "make such rules and regulations relative to such examination as to them may seem proper." This law has necessarily left a large discretion in the board as to the rules and regulations it would make to govern it in these examinations and the details pertaining thereto, and the exercise of this discretion will in no case be reviewed by this court unless it should clearly appear that an abuse has occurred.—Mitchell v. State Board Law Examiners, 155 Mich. 452.

¶ 5. Under Comp. L. 1807, §§ 1119-1125, giving the board of examiners the power to prescribe the general educational qualifications necessary for admission to the bar, rules prescribing that graduates from colleges or universities, normal or high schools, or other reputable institutions, or those holding teachers' certificates recently issued by school examiners, shall be deemed qualified, and providing in the absence of such evidence of fitness for an examination on the subjects usually covered in said institutions, are reasonable and valid.—In re Alexander, 167 Mich. 495.

¶ 7. Upon an application to strike respondent's name from the roll of attorneys, it appeared that respondent did not furnish the required evidence of educational qualifications; that he was permitted to take the bar examination upon his assurance that such proof would be later furnished to the board of examiners; that he successfully passed said examination and was permitted by the Supreme Court to take the oath and sign the roll of attorneys; that his certificate of admission was withheld until he should comply with said educational requirements; and that respondent failed thereafter to furnish the certificate of said requirements required by the rules of the board of examiners. Held, he was never legally admitted to practice and his name should be stricken from the roll.—In re Alexander, 167 Mich. 495.

Striking name from roll when improperly admitted, see ante § 3.
Evidence of grounds, see also post § 6.
General provisions as to suspension or disbarment, see Jud. Act, Chap. I, §§ 58-62; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12063-12067.

¶ 8. The court may remove or suspend an attorney for other causes than those mentioned in the statute, which is not to be construed as restrictive of the general powers of the court over its officers.—In re Mills, 1 Mich. 392.

¶ 9. Conviction of such crimes as the law regards as infamous is sufficient ground for disbarring an attorney.—In re McCarthy, 42 Mich. 71.

¶ 10. An attorney may be disbarred for fraud and dishonesty in acting as executor of an estate, and it is not essential that he be convicted of some criminal conduct or of some professional misconduct.—In re Radford, 168 Mich. 474.

¶ 11. A brief and affidavit, filed by an attorney in support of a motion that another judge try a perjury case against him, which charges unjust prejudice, unfair rulings, that one of the witnesses was bribed, and that the judge was corrupt and a party to a conspiracy against the attorney, which charges are entirely unsupported by evidence, justifies disbarment of the attorney. While an attorney ought not to be disbarred unless the duty of the court is clear, the privilege of attorneys does not authorize such charges without adequate basis, and the conduct of the attorney if overlooked would tend to destroy confidence in the impartial administration of justice. In addition the charges show the guilty attorney to be without the moral sense to appreciate his duties to the court and the public.—In re Mains, 121 Mich. 603.

¶ 12. Disbarment because of improper and inexcusable conduct of an attorney in charging a judge with corruption and conspiracy, cannot be avoided by a plea for mercy because of the plight of the wife and children of the attorney, as such wife and children should be an incentive to an honorable career, and not a shield to protect the attorney from the natural consequences of his own acts.—In re Mains, 121 Mich. 603.

Nunc pro tunc entry of judgment of disbarment, see Judgments, III.
Right or propriety of jury trial, see Jury, I.

¶ 13. A disbarment proceeding is not simply for the purpose of punishing the offending attorney, but to aid in securing a proper administration of the law.—In re Mains, 121 Mich. 608.

¶ 14. Like contempt proceedings, proceedings for disbarment are the exercise on the part of a court of its inherent right and power to preserve the orderly administration of justice.—In re Radford, 159 Mich. 91.

¶ 15. Proceedings to disbar an attorney, though not strictly a criminal prosecution, have that nature, and the charges preferred should be clearly supported by the evidence to warrant a conviction.—In re Baluss, 28 Mich. 507.

¶ 16. In disbarment proceedings the Supreme Court will not assume original jurisdiction or under its general supervisory power over the lower courts exercise exclusive jurisdiction of a proceeding begun below, but will only review the case after its final disposition in the lower court.—In re Radford, 159 Mich. 91.

Degree of proof, see also ante ¶ 15.

¶ 17. When an attorney is tried for any other misconduct than contempt there must be specific charges and an opportunity for full defence, so that, if necessary, a resort to an appellate court may be had to determine the legal sufficiency of the accusation. —Dickinson v. Dustin, 21 Mich. 561.

¶ 18. A charge made against an attorney for the purpose of removing him, that he is of notoriously bad character, not to be believed under oath, and unworthy to practice as an attorney, is too general. Specific acts should be charged, so as to give to the respondent an opportunity of answering them. —In re Mills, 1 Mich. 392.

¶ 19. The charge that the reputation of an attorney for truth and veracity is so notoriously bad that he is not to be believed under oath contains good cause for removal, and is not too general.—In re Mills, 1 Mich. 392.

¶ 20. Charges that an attorney at law, under circumstances showing that he was acting as attorney for one who was suspected of being instrumental in causing an abortion, was present during the last hours of the girl suffering from the effects thereof, for the purpose of preventing her from making an ante mortem statement concerning the affair, that he directed who should care for her, and forbade that any person should be with her alone, and directed her attendant not to permit her to make any statement concerning herself, her condition, or the cause thereof, and which state, as a conclusion from the facts alleged that respondent "was guilty of unlawful and unprofessional conduct in that he attempted to stifle evidence of the commission of a crime, by preventing an ante mortem statement of said girl," are sufficiently specific, and, if sustained, constitute a legal ground for disbarment.—In re Shepard, 109 Mich. 631.

¶ 21. A petition for disbarment alleged that respondent attorney in his capacity as executor wilfully and knowingly failed to file his inventory for accounts though ordered to do so by the court; failed to render accounts although receiving large amounts of real and personal property, and continued in this neglect for eight years; violated and disobeyed the specific order of the court requiring him to file an inventory for accounts of his receipts and disbursements, after failing to do so for a period of eight years; failed to pay over money admitted to be due to the devisees and legatees when specifically ordered so to do; sought to deceive and mislead the court and cheat the persons interested in the estate by crediting himself as executor with worthless investments which he falsely claimed to be made out of the funds of the estate; misappropriated and converted to his own use large sums of money belonging to the estate; received large sums of money belonging to the estate, which he wilfully refused to account for; charged the estate with large sums of money as disbursements which he knew he did not lawfully disburse; and continued to appropriate to himself the assets of the estate and wilfully continued to disobey an order to turn over same. Held, said petition was sufficiently definite and sufficiently alleged a cause for disbarment to require the overruling of a demurrer thereto. under sections 1128 to 1130 of the disbarment statute.—In re Radford, 168 Mich. 474.

¶ 22. The court may, in its discretion, entertain proceedings to disbar an attorney upon charges verified on information and belief only.—In re Shepard, 109 Mich. 631.

¶ 23. To sustain disbarment, the charges must be proved clearly.—In re Clink, 117 Mich. 619.

¶ 24. Where a lawyer who was a defendant in an equity suit was found to have committed a fraud and a gross abuse of confidence in the premises, and was cited to show cause why he should not be disbarred therefor, a showing of the bad character of the complainant in equity was not very material; nor was proof of the good character of a witness who, in testifying for the defence had contradicted complainant as to the manner of the fraud, but whose testimony was not conclusive as to the main fact. Complainant's character could only affect the strength of his proof.—In re Wool, 36 Mich. 299.

¶ 25. Where disbarment proceedings are heard by a certain judge, who invites two other circuit judges to sit with him and hear and decide the case, it is not necessary that testimony taken in open court before one of said judges should be examined and signed by the witness giving same.—In re Radford, 168 Mich. 474.

¶ 26. In a disbarment proceeding the evidence indicated that defendant lawyer acting as executor received some $30,000 from the estate in 1900 and made payments to the widow and daughter from 1900 to 1908; that during this time no inventory or account was filed in probate court; that respondent failed to file said inventory or account, though being expressly ordered to do so by the court and though an order for his arrest was issued on such ground; that in 1908 when his accounts were under investigation he failed to comply with the order of the court requiring him to give bond; that he admitted an indebtedness of $5,000 to the estate; that he made investments in his own name in personal and real estate with nothing to indicate the trust; that he kept money of the estate in his own bank account and drew therefrom for his own personal uses; and that he kept no accounts showing his investments. Held, the decree disbarring respondent was sustained by the evidence.—In re Radford, 168 Mich. 474.

Review by certiorari, see Certiorari.

¶ 27. A bar association is not a recognized body, as such, in proceedings to disbar an attorney, and cannot control the prosecution; the proceeding is in the interest of public justice, and the Supreme Court will examine into and act on it as in other cases involving the position of its attorneys.—In re McCarthy, 42 Mich. 71.

¶ 28. In disbarment proceedings the Supreme Court will examine the testimony taken, even though counsel for petitioners gives his opinion that the charges have not been sustained, respondent being entitled to an authoritative determination of the question.—In re Chandler, 105 Mich. 235.

¶ 29. A finding that "respondent has been, and is, guilty of the several acts of misconduct in stifling evidence, with which he is charged," is sufficiently conformable to charges that he "attempted" to stifle evidence by preventing the making of an ante mortem statement.—In re Shepard, 109 Mich. 631.

¶ 30. Where a suit in equity against an attorney and solicitor, charging him with fraud under circumstances implicating him in a gross abuse of confidence, has been before the court on the facts, and the court has decreed against him, an order to show cause why he should not be struck from the rolls may properly be based on the decree, or be incorporated in the decree itself. And while respondent has been allowed to make a showing by affidavit, there is no occasion for a reference to take further evidence, unless on such a showing as would justify a rehearing.—In re Wool, 36 Mich. 299.

¶ 31. Disbarred attorneys cannot appear as attorneys in any court of record nor represent any person in court as attorney, agent or otherwise.—Cobb v. Grand Rapids Superior Court Judge, 43 Mich. 289.

¶ 38. Any conduct on the part of a client during the progress of litigation which tends to degrade or humiliate the attorney, furnishes sufficient cause to him for abandoning the case.—Genrow v. Flynn, 166 Mich. 564.

¶ 39. An attorney can be disconnected from a case only by consent of the parties or the court, or by regular proceedings for substituting another.—People ex rel. Coon v. Plymouth Plank Road Co., 32 Mich. 248.

¶ 40. Notice of the substitution of an attorney must be duly served upon the opposite attorney before any other proceedings can be taken by the attorney who has been substituted.—Comfort v. Stockbridge, 38 Mich. 342.

¶ 41. Attorneys cannot interfere in the conduct of a cause upon a claim of substitution before notice thereof has been properly served upon the attorneys for the opposite party.—Kelley v. Alcona Circuit Judge, 79 Mich. 392.

¶ 42. An attorney of record cannot complain of an order of substitution that expressly reserves to him any lien he may have for services rendered.—Jones v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 95 Mich. 289.

¶ 43. A solicitor may not complain of a substitution of solicitors if the order of substitution preserves his lien.—Wipfler v. Warren, 163 Mich. 189.

¶ 44. Comp. L. 1871, § 5630, How. St., § 7181, which provides that, when an attorney shall cease to act as such, his client shall be notified to appoint another at least thirty days before any farther proceedings against him, does not apply where a lawyer continuing in practice refuses to go on with the particular case. It is meant to meet the emergency of the lawyer's ceasing wholly to practice in the court.—People ex rel. Coon v. Plymouth Plank Road Co., 32 Mich. 248.

¶ 49. The court in which a suit is begun is the proper tribunal to pass upon the question of the authority of the counsel to represent an alleged client.—Dehn v. Dehn, 170 Mich. 407.

¶ 50. A notice may be disregarded in chancery when it is not signed by the solicitor for the opposite party and does not come from his office and by virtue thereof. —McClintock v. Laing, 22 Mich. 212.

§ 18. ——Associate counsel or joint attorneys.

Assistants and associates on prosecution of crime, see post §§ 64-66.

¶ 51. Where there are two or more attorneys in a cause the agreement of one binds both.—Pantlind v. Osceola Circuit Judge, not reported; cited in People v. Bussey, 80 Mich. 504.

¶ 52. A client is entitled to the personal services of his attorney upon the argument. But the retainer of one member of a firm is a retainer of all, and unless otherwise stipulated the cause may be argued and conducted by any one of them. And if a client knowingly permits his case to be argued by a person in the service of his attorneys, and under their direction, he is presumed to have consented thereto.—Eggleston v. Boardman, 37 Mich. 14.

§ 19. ——Presumption and proof.

See also ante ¶ 52.

Of assistant to prosecutor, see post § 65, ¶ 285.

Evidence of ratification, see post § 27.

Presumptions that appearance was authorized, see Appeal and Error, XII, C, § 363; Appearance, § 4; Judgments, VII (on collateral attack).

Proof of authority before justice of the peace, see Justices of the Peace IV, B.

¶ 53. The court will not require attorneys to produce their authority to prosecute a writ of error on behalf of one of the plaintiffs, where there is no showing that they are not duly authorized and on the contrary it appears that the attorneys were employed by the other plaintiff to take charge of the case generally, and that the one so employing them was, in fact, the party responsible in the case and bound to protect the other from liability.—O'Flynn v. Eagle, 7 Mich. 306.

¶ 54. The practice of giving or filing warrants of attorney, authorizing the prosecution of a suit, has never prevailed in this state, and a judgment will not be reversed for the want of one, even where the plaintiff below was a corporation.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan v. Troy City Bank, 1 D. 457.

¶ 57. Where the testimony of complainant's solicitor in a suit to settle property rights indicates that he was consulted by complainant and the latter wished a suit commenced to preserve his rights, the discretion of the trial court is not abused in ruling that the solicitor was authorized to prosecute in behalf of complainant a bill in equity to quiet title.—Dehn v. Dehn, 170 Mich. 407.

¶¶ 58, 59. A circuit judge is not justified in refusing to sign a finding of facts and to settle and sign a case at the instance of a garnishee bank, by the fact that the attorney who appeared and objected to the rendition of any judgment against the garnishee and who requested the findings of facts and the settling and signing of a case, was the attorney who had appeared for the defendant in the primary case, and was not the regular attorney of the garnishee bank.—Cadillac State Bank v. Wexford Circuit Judge, 139 Mich. 126.

In conduct of litigation, see post §§ 22, 23.

In making collections and settlements, see post § 24.

Making indorsement on check received in payment to order of client, see post ¶ 73.

Notice outside of employment and scope, see post § 25.

¶ 60. An attorney under mere general retainer cannot bind his client to any particular action by giving an unauthorized consent thereto; and a layman, acting as attorney, cannot give consent at all to any action binding his principal unless he is specifically and formally empowered for the very purpose, and his authority is produced and proved in court.—Durfee v. Abbott, 50 Mich. 278.

¶ 61. Retainer of a solicitor is not presumed to cover proceedings taken subsequent to the decree and for its enforcement.—Ransom v. Sutherland, 46 Mich. 489.

¶ 62. A general authority to commence suits will warrant an attorney in attaching property, and will render the client responsible for damages.—Brown v. Spiegel, 156 Mich. 138.

¶ 63. The service of notice containing names of laborers and sub-contractors, required by Comp. L. 1897, § 10713, made by an agent who received his authority, not from the contractor but from his attorney, who drafted the notice, was sufficient as the action of the attorney in directing the service was within the scope of his authority. —Cady v. Fair Plain Literary Ass'n, 135 Mich. 295.

§ 21. ——Effect of personal interest.

¶ 63a. A general retainer does not cover matters in which the attorney has a personal interest opposed to his client's.—Gott v. Brigham, 41 Mich. 227.

General function to conduct client's affairs, see ante § 13.
Scope and extent of authority before justice of the peace, see Justices of the Peace, IV, B.

Signature of appeal bond by attorney, see Appeal and Error, § 82, ¶ 372.
Neglect of attorney as excuse for delay in filing return to error, see Appeal and Error, § 129, ¶ 576.

¶ 64. An attorney for a mortgage in foreclosure proceedings who bids in the land involved at a tax sale, is presumed to act in the interest of his client.—Boardman v. Boozewinkel, 121 Mich. 320.

§ 23. ——Matters subsequent to judgment.

See also ante ¶ 61.

¶ 65. An attorney's authority does not for all purposes, cease with judgment.—Foster v. Wiley, 27 Mich. 244.

¶ 66. The acts which are within the authority of an attorney after the recovery of judgment are enumerated and authorities are cited in Foster v. Wiley, 27 Mich. 244.

¶ 67. A client is responsible for his attorney's conduct in procuring the issue of an execution unauthorized by law.—Foster v. Wiley, 27 Mich. 244.

Ratification of settlements, see post § 27.
Collections by attorneys acting as agents, see also Agency, § 36.
Authority of adjusters in general, see Agency, § 37.

¶ 68. An attorney's possession of a note and mortgage is presumptive evidence of his authority to receive payment thereon.—Donaldson v. Wilson, 79 Mich. 181.

¶ 69. An attorney has no implied authority to receive wood as pay for a promissory note.—Pitkin v. Harris, 69 Mich. 133.

¶ 70. Authority in a general attorney to settle an action for damages brought by an employee against a railroad company does not imply authority to make a contract for the railroad company to employ the injured employee for life.—Nephew v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 128 Mich. 599.

¶ 71. An acceptance by the attorney of record of an amount smaller than a judgment in satisfaction thereof, is not a discharge, if the attorney had no authority to settle for such sum.—Fetz v. Leyendecker, 157 Mich. 355.

¶ 72. In an action for the amount of two judgments, defendant pleaded that plaintiff's attorney of record in both cases had compromised the claims. Held, that whether the attorney had authority to effect a compromise and whether there was sufficient consideration for his agreement to accept a smaller sum in settlement of the judgments, were questions of fact.—Fetz v. Leyendecker, 157 Mich. 355.

¶ 73. The power to indorse checks or bills must be expressly conferred; and the employment of an attorney to collect a claim against an estate confers no authority upon him to indorse a check or draft received in payment of the claim and made out to the client as payee—Brown v. People's Nat. Bank, 170 Mich. 416.

§ 25. Notice through attorney.

General doctrine of notice to agent as notice to principal, see Agency, II, E.
Notice to attorney acting as agent as binding client, see also Agency, § 433.
Notice to attorney by reason of knowledge of client, see also Notice and Record of Title, I, A.
Efficacy of notice by clerk or other attorney to take proofs in chancery, see Depositions, II.

¶ 74. A notice to an attorney is binding upon his client.—Dickinson v. Dustin, 21 Mich. 561.

¶ 75. An attorney's unprivileged knowledge of a chattel mortgage is notice to his client.—Littauer v. Houck, 92 Mich. 162.

¶ 76. An attorney's knowledge is not that of his principal in matters in which he is not acting as his attorney.—Larzelere v. Starkweather, 38 Mich. 96.

¶ 77. A client is not chargeable with notice of facts known to his lawyer if the latter did not obtain this knowledge while doing business for him.—Warner v. Hall, 53 Mich. 371.

¶ 78. A mortgagee of land against which attachment proceedings have been started is not without notice where his counsel, before advancing the money secured by the mortgage, recognized the attachment as a lien to be got rid of in order to clear the title, and caused money to be tendered for that purpose.—Chase v. Welsh, 45 Mich. 345

¶ 79. The solicitor for defendants in partition is chargeable with notice of any lien for costs which had attached under the law, by reason of the institution of the partition proceedings, since he had personal knowledge of the nature of the proceedings.—Barbour v. Patterson, 145 Mich. 459.

§ 26. Stipulations and admissions.

Declarations or admissions as evidence against client, see Evidence, VII, C.
Making admissions in open court, see Equity, VIII; Trial, V.
Admission by attorney of coparties as effecting waiver of error for both, see Appeal and Error, § 229, ¶ 1020.
Form of stipulations, and their effect, see Stipulations.

¶ 80. A stipulation by plaintiff's attorney that a claim of defendant to damages suffered by the levy of an attachment may be prosecuted and defended against as a setoff in the case in which the attachment was issued, is within the implied authority of the attorney to bind his client by all acts necessary or incident to the prosecution or management of the suit, affecting the remedy only, and not the cause of action.—Brown v. Spiegel, 156 Mich. 138.

§ 27. Ratification by client.

Disaffirmance and repudiation, see post § 28.
Estoppel by ratification, see post § 29.
Of acts of agents in general, see Agency, II, C.

¶ 81. Filing the bond is an essential preliminary to an attachment in a justice's court, and if the plaintiff named has recognized the agency of the attorney who has started such a proceeding, and there is evidence to show that he ratified the same, the bond should be admitted in evidence for consideration by the jury in finding whether the relation of attorney and client existed.—Hutchinson v. Smith, 86 Mich. 145.

¶ 83. A solicitor's action in compromising or settling a mortgage which he had been employed to foreclose, held to have been ratified, even if not previously authorized, where a receipt for balance due was signed by the mortgagee, who testified that he supposed the mortgage papers were surrendered at the time, and where the attorney for the mortgagee testified that when he reported the settlement it was approved by the mortgagee.—Gemberling v. Spaulding, 104 Mich. 217.

Estoppel to question authority, see post § 29.

¶ 84. A defendant on trial for violation of a village ordinance has a right to disclaim the authority of an absent attorney assuming to act for him in the matter of an adjournment which such defendant opposes.—Village of Vicksburg v. Briggs, 85 Mich. 502.

¶ 85. A client is always entitled to be heard as to his representation before the court; and a change therein, made ex parte by one or all of the counsel, is a nullity if made without the client's concurrence or consent.—Hackley v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 58 Mich. 454.

§ 29. Estoppel to question authority.

¶ 86. The receipt by a plaintiff of the money due upon a judgment rendered in his favor, and its discharge by indorsing a satisfaction thereof upon an execution issued for its collection, estop him from denying the authority of the attorneys to act for him in its procurement, and, if their original employment is not shown, such acts are a full and complete ratification of their acts and services in obtaining the judgment.—Lindner v. Hine, 84 Mich. 511.

¶ 87. By receiving moneys due upon judgment in his favor, and by indorsing satisfaction upon execution issued thereunder, one estops himself from denying his attorneys' authority to act for him in procuring it.—Lindner v. Hine, 84 Mich. 511.

¶ 88. That an attorney has been employed by it cannot be questioned by an insurance company which forwarded from its home office a check payable to the attorney's order as a retainer, and which was kept advised of what he did in its behalf.—McCurdy v. New York Life Ins. Co., 115 Mich. 20.

§ 30. Objections for want of authority or disqualification.

Presumptions and proof of authority, see ante § 19.
Questioning authority at trial, see also ante ¶ 48.
Court in which question may be raised, see also ante ¶ 49.

¶ 89. An attorney employed by the plaintiff in an action of trespass had also been employed by the board of supervisors to assist the prosecuting attorney in a criminal proceeding against the defendants on the same state of facts. Held, that any objection based upon the statute—How. St., § 557, as amended in 1883—to the attorney's participating in the civil case was waived unless made seasonably; after pleading to the attorney's declaration, and permitting him to act in selecting the jury, it was too late to object to swearing the jury and to ask a discontinuance.—Webber v. Barry, 66 Mich. 127.

D. CONTRACTS AND DEALINGS WITH SUBJECT OF EMPLOYMENT.

§ 31. In general; good faith.

Personal interest as affecting authority to bind client to third person, see ante § 21.
Liability for fraud or bad faith, see post § 59.
Duty of attorney lending money for client to advise as to measures to be taken on maturity, see post ¶ 230.
Rights of attorney holding mortgage second to client's, see post ¶ 236.
General doctrine of implied fraud in dealing with person in confidential or fiduciary relation, see Fraud, II.
Rights of attorney as joint adventurer in enterprise with client, see Joint Adventures.
Right of attorney to urge against client that contract was illegal, see Contracts, IV.
Buying claims for litigation, see Champerty and Maintenance.
Availability of defense on motion to quash capias, see Civil Arrest and Bail.
Right to make defense that plaintiff assignee has taken as attorney to bring suit, see Assignments, ¶ 103; and see also Contracts, IV.
Defense that thing in action was bought by attorney to put in action, see Jud. Act, Chap. I, §§ 67-73; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12072-12078.

¶ 92. A contract between attorney and client made while the relation exists must be characterized by fairness and reasonableness if it is to be sustained.—Coveney v. Pattullo, 130 Mich. 275.

¶ 93. An attorney-at-law who assumes the double position of purchaser and confidential legal adviser is bound to observe the utmost good faith towards the party with whom he is dealing, and to draft all papers with sufficient care and professional skill, so as to make them express the real understanding and agreement of the parties.—Payne v. Avery, 21 Mich. 524.

¶ 94. An attorney employed for a particular service cannot acquire a personal interest in the subject-matter of the employment, opposed to that of his client, without the client's consent or ratification.—Gott v. Brigham, 41 Mich. 227.

¶ 95. Where an attorney obtains from the heir of a deceased client a release of property received by the attorney as such, the burden of proof is upon the attorney to show that the heir acted freely and understandingly.—Beedle v. Crane, 91 Mich. 429.

¶ 96. Where a client seeking to acquire title to land refused to take up a claim on it of which his attorney had notified him, and expressed the opinion that the claim referred to was of no consequence, the attorney violated no confidence in buying up the claim in the interest of another party.—Humphrey v. Hurd, 31 Mich. 436.

¶ 97. Where an attorney who had been employed to bring about a judicial sale of his client's property, the title to which was in dispute, with their knowledge and consent executed a contract with a prospective purchaser whereby he was to receive from the latter, in case he should be the successful bidder at a stated amount, a commission upon the purchase price, such commission being in lieu of direct compensation from the clients, the agreement was not invalid as violating the client's interests.—Culver v. Nester, 116 Mich. 191.

¶ 98. An attorney who advises the devise of property to himself on the pretence that he will only make use of it for another, but intending, nevertheless, to appropriate it to his own use, is guilty of a gross fraud and breach of confidence; and it would be equally a fraud if, having given the advice honestly, he should afterwards conclude dishonestly to keep the property.—Hooker v. Axford, 33 Mich. 453.

¶ 99. An attorney acts in fraud of his client's rights in selling an attorney's lien to one whose interests are adverse to those of the client, without giving the client an opportunity to get rid of it.—Taylor v. Young, 56 Mich. 285.

¶ 100. It is contrary to the spirit of the code of ethics for a lawyer to draft a will making dispositions of property in his favor, and such dispositions will be looked upon by this court with suspicion.—Abrey v. Duffield, 149 Mich. 248.

Trust in third person, see post ¶ 106.

¶ 101. Where the attorney of a judgment creditor bids off in his own name an undivided interest in lands upon which he has levied execution, and which the client desires to obtain, he holds such interest for his client's benefit and must release it on demands; and if he refuses, the client can hold him as a trustee and require him to account or compel him to convey.—Taylor v. Young, 56 Mich. 285.

¶ 103. Where an attorney-at-law proposed to one who was not his client to redeem for a reasonable compensation certain of the latter's property which had been sold on execution, and the latter refused, it was held that a subsequent purchase by the attorney of an outstanding judgment, and a redemption under it, gave the other no rights in the redeemed property.—Taylor v. Boardman, 24 Mich. 287.

General status towards third persons, and rights of client towards third persons, see ante § 15.

Authority of attorney and acts binding on client, see ante II, C.

Right to be reimbursed for attorney's fees paid for another, see Implied Contracts, II; and see also Estates of Decedents, VI, A.

Implied contract to repay money collected on judgment subsequently reversed, see Implied Contracts, II.

¶ 104. Where, by improper agencies, counsel obtained securities for $5,000 for injuries to his client which he is shown to have regarded as not likely to authorize a verdict for more than $2,000, the remainder being reckoned as the share of the negotiator for his services, the court, on a bill to foreclose the securities, directed the excess beyond $2,000 to be released.—Briggs v. Withey, 24 Mich. 136.

¶ 106. Where an attorney is employed to purchase tax titles and other outstanding claims against his client's lands to strengthen the title, which is defective of record, the client furnishing the means, and the purchases being made, at the attorney's suggestion, in his own name, a conveyance to a third person by the attorney in violation of the professional confidence reposed in him, will not be protected by Comp. L. 1857, § 2637, How. St., § 5569, relating to resulting trusts. The consent obtained by the attorney to taking the conveyances in his own name, having been procured for the fraudulent purpose of appropriation and on the strength of the confidence reposed in him as an attorney, is void, and comes within Comp. L. 1857, § 2639, How. St., § 5571.—Linsley v. Sinclair, 24 Mich. 380.

E. COMPENSATION, LIEN AND ACCOUNTING.

Right to costs and fees, and liability for same, see Costs, II.

§ 34. Construction, validity and effect of contracts.

Express agreement as excluding implied promise, see post § 39; and see also Implied Contracts.

Liability of attorney for breach of contract, see post § 60.

Lien for compensation, see post §§ 46-56.

Construction of agreement as affecting right to settle, see also post ¶ 201.

Actions and practice on the contract, see post §§ 41-45.

Champertous contracts and dealings, see Champerty and Maintenance.

Mutuality of agreement for indeterminate sum, see Contracts, I.

Consideration for contract, see Contracts, V.

Fee contracts void as against public policy, see Contracts, IV, B.

Agreement to be compensated by share in prospective alimony as offending public policy, see Contracts, IV, B.
Effect of invalidity of contract on rights, see Contracts, IV, D.

Contract with stockholder as affecting corporation, see Corporations, XXIV, D.
Statute regulating agreements for compensation, see Jud. Act, Chap. I, § 74; Comp. L. 1915, § 12079.

¶ 107. Before entering upon the business of a client, an attorney may stipulate the measure of his compensation, and, if the client assents, the contract is valid and free from objection.—Gates v. McLaulin, 199 Mich. 438.

¶ 108. Attorneys are now at liberty under How. St., § 9004, to make their own arrangements with their clients for compensation, and an assignment of liens to an attorney cannot be objected to as champertous.—Smedley v. Dregge, 101 Mich. 200.

¶ 109. An agreement that an attorney shall advance the necessary costs of an action for his client and shall receive one-half of the amount recovered, is not, since the enactment of Section 11254, Comp. Laws 1897, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 14432, champertous.—Lehman v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry Co., 180 Mich. 362.

¶ 110. An attorney employed to carry a suit through for an agreed sum has a vested right to the compensation when he accepts and begins the service, and his subsequent appointment to a position in which it would become his official duty to conduct the suit would not prevent him from recovering the sum agreed on under the private contract; if the original agreement was for such compensation as the services should be reasonably worth, he could recover under it only the value of services rendered before the appointment was made.—City of Detroit v. Whittemore, 27 Mich. 281.

¶ 112. A widow's agreement to pay her attorney for his services all he recovers, beyond $25,000, on her claims against her husband's estate does not include an allowance for her support pending the estate's settlement; the right to such allowance may be waived and is not assignable.—Hackley v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 58 Mich. 454.

¶ 113. A client's obligation to pay an attorney for services rendered in "securing" an estate for her, in accordance with an agreement, cannot be avoided by claiming that the estate vested in her claim by operation of law and accordingly was not "secured" by the attorney.—Morna v. L'Etourneau, 118 Mich. 159.

¶ 115. In a suit by a client to recover a fee advanced to an attorney under an agreement that the latter should prosecute to completion a certain suit, the evidence showed that the defendant attended faithfully to the suit and expended several weeks of labor thereon, and that thereafter plaintiff sent him a telegram accusing him of deceiving, neglecting and abusing plaintiff. Thereupon defendant informed plaintiff of his withdrawal from the case. There was no evidence offered by plaintiff as to the value of the services rendered by defendant. Held, defendant was entitled to retain the entire fee paid him.—Genrow v. Flynn, 166 Mich. 564.

§ 35. ——Assumption of costs and expenses.

See also ante ¶ 109.

¶ 117. Under an attorney's agreement to pay costs and prosecute the suit for half the recovery if, pending the litigation, the attorney denied to his client that he had agreed to pay the costs if the suit failed, and stated that he would not pay them, and if at that time plaintiff could have discontinued without costs, the attorney would not be liable for the costs incurred.—Wildey v. Crane, 69 Mich. 17.

Assumption of costs and advances of money, see ante § 35.

¶ 118. Contracts with attorneys for contingent fees with a lien on the amount recovered, either by settlement or judgment, are valid, and after proper notice thereof the opposing party is obligated to recognize the same at his peril.—Nichols v. Waters, 201 Mich. 27.

¶ 119. A contract between attorneys and clients for suing a death claim in the federal court on a contingent basis that in case the attorneys did not recover more than the client would have received under the Workmen's Compensation Act then the client should receive the amount which she should receive under such law must be construed as providing an allowance to the client of the full amount allowed by the act, and not merely a lesser sum which the employer had offered the client before the making of the contract, and which was not referred to in the contract.—Nichols v. Waters, 201 Mich. 27.

¶ 120. Evidence held insufficient to show failure of attorneys to comply with a contract for the prosecution of an action for the death of a son of the client on a contingent basis by not caring for funeral expenses of deceased.—Nichols v. Waters, 201 Mich. 27.

¶ 121. Under a contract on a twenty-five per cent contingent fee basis, which in fact though not in words contemplates only a nisi prius trial, the fact that the attorney appeals the case and obtains judgment, after his client has abandoned it on an adverse decision below, will not entitle the attorney to a larger per cent. of the amount recovered.—Cavanaugh v. Robinson, 138 Mich. 554.

¶ 122. A request to an attorney for terms on a contingent basis for getting the assets paid over to the heirs and an answer fixing the terms at twenty-five per cent. must be taken to include services made necessary in appealing an erroneous decision.—Cavanaugh v. Robinson, 138 Mich. 554.

§ 37. Compensation for reasonable value.

For services which did not prove to be of benefit, see post § 38.

Reasonable value where during litigation it became duty to continue without charge, see also ante ¶ 110.

Actions, evidence and instructions, see post §§ 41-45.

Evidence as to value, see post § 43.

Fees allowable in particular cases as attorney fees or by virtue of contract provisions, see specific topics, e. g., Foreclosure of Mortgages; Negotiable Instruments; Taxes; Estates of Decedents.

Reasonable counsel fee as part of proper recovery on attachment bond, see Attachment, § 145.

Fees under the Workmen's Compensation Law, and adjustment of them, see Workmen's Compensation Law, X.

¶ 123. The value of an attorney's services is their reasonable worth as determined from the prices usually charged for similar services; his professional skill, standing and experience, the questions involved and the result of the case, must all be considered. A retainer is recoverable without special contract.—Eggleston v. Boardman, 37 Mich. 14.

¶ 124. Where several suits were made to depend on the argument of one, the charges should not be multiplied at the full rate as if there had been separate hearings in each, but should be confined to the services actually rendered.—Brackett v. Sears, 15 Mich. 244.

¶ 125. An attorney who made no contract with a married woman in relation to divorce proceedings and to a case to be commenced by capias against her husband, as to how he should be paid other than one opposed to public policy, was entitled to recover what his services were reasonably worth.—McCurdy v. Dillon, 135 Mich. 678.

¶ 126. Claimant attended court as attorney for the deceased in a case in which the deceased was collaterally but greatly interested. He took no part in the hearing, and the deceased made no substantial defense. The probate commissioners allowed a claim of fifty dollars a day for this service. Held, the charges were not so excessive as to call for reversal on appeal.—Warren v. Sheehan, 156 Mich. 432.

¶ 127. $1,000 held to be a sufficient attorney's fee for the collection of a judgment amounting to nearly $15,000, where it appeared that the attorney relied almost exclusively upon the services of an attorney in another state for the investigation of the legal principles and for the real work of preparing and directing the litigation, both upon the law and facts.—Myers v. Radford, 167 Mich. 135; affirmed in 231 U. S. 725, 58 L. ed. 454, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249.

his arrest for robbery, the charge later being changed to obtaining money by menaces. He employed defendant as counsel, paying him $200, was committed to prison and when arraigned defendant failed to appear and another attorney was employed as associate counsel. Meanwhile plaintiff remained in prison and while there paid defendant an additional $500, and gave him a mortgage on Michigan land for $800. Upon advice of his counsel he pleaded guilty and after returning the $7,000 was permitted to leave the country. Action was brought to set aside the mortgage for fraud, conspiracy and duress. Held, that though no conspiracy was shown the mortgage should be canceled because unconscionable and because the $700 paid was reasonable compensation for the services rendered.—Coveney v. Pattullo, 130 Mich. 275.

¶ 129. An attorney who took to the Supreme Court on certiorari the files in a certain suit other than the one at bar, and made the former suit the basis of argument on the certiorari, will not be entitled to be compensated by the client as for services in the Supreme Court rendered in the suit so included; for it was never in that court as a suit but only as an incident in the certiorari and the fees for the certiorari case cover both in the Supreme Court.—Smedley v. City of Grand Haven, 125 Mich. 431.

¶ 130. Professional charges are not to be rejected merely for want of success in the litigation, where there is no clear proof of mismanagement.—Brackett v. Sears, 15 Mich. 244.

¶ 131. An attorney is entitled to compensation, for services faithfully and intelligently performed, whether such services are beneficial to the client or not.—In re Freshour's Estate, 174 Mich. 114; Lyon v. Minor, Id.

¶ 132. In an attorney's action for compensation for services in a certain suit it appeared that after the attorney had procured a settlement in that suit a second suit was brought against defendant through no fault of the attorney. Held, that it was proper to exclude defendant's answer to a question as to the damage sustained by reason of bringing the second suit, since the attorney is not an insurer of results.—Babbitt v. Bumpus, 73 Mich. 331.

As to implication of additional compensation for taking appeal or error, see ante § 36, ¶¶ 121, 122.

¶ 133. Where an attorney makes two trips to a distant town in connection with a case and where no price has been agreed upon therefor, he is entitled to recover what the trips were reasonably worth, even though he made no charges for such trips at the time.—Crowell v. Truax, 94 Mich. 585.

¶ 134. An attorney could not have an express contract with the promoters of a corporation that they, in consideration of his services in assisting to successfully accomplish the scheme in question, would make him the permanent attorney of the corporation to be formed, and at the same time have an implied contract with the company to pay him for the same services what they were reasonably worth.—Sullivan v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. R. Co., 135 Mich. 661, per Grant, J., others concurring on another point.

Lien for protection, see post §§ 46-56.
General law of indemnification between parties, see Indemnity and Contribution.
Consideration for contract indemnifying attorney, see Contracts, V.

¶ 135. Where the attorneys of complainants, assignees of a portion of a chattel mortgage on a stock of goods with priority of payment, took possession of the mortgaged property, and, without authority from complainants, sold more than was sufficient to satisfy their portion of the mortgage, and were sued by the owner of the balance and recovery had against them, held, that the attorneys had no equity against complainants to require to be indemnified for their act in selling the excess.—Gray v. Emmons, 7 Mich. 533.

¶ 136. An attorney held liable for an excessive sale under a chattel mortgage, made without authority from the client, who was an assignee of a part ownership in the mortgage, cannot claim indemnity from the client, though it was done under a supposed authority from the owner of the balance of the mortgage; since the failure of the latter authority was not attributable to his client.—Gray v. Emmons, 7 Mich. 53.

§ 41. Actions for compensation or reimbursement.

Sufficiency of allegations to admit proof, see also post ¶ 150.
Burden of proof and evidence, see post §§ 42, 43.
Questions of fact and instructions, see post §§ 44, 45.

Former judgment as bar or estoppel of claim of attorney for compensation, see Former Adjudication.
Liability of married woman for attorneys' services, see Divorce, X; Husband and Wife, IV, C.

¶ 137. Where, in a suit for an attorney's stipulated compensation, defendants plead his neglect or refusal to perform the services stipulated, and introduce evidence tending to support such defense, plaintiff has the burden of showing performance by the attorney or his continued readiness to perform. —Hitchcock v. Davis, 87 Mich. 629.

¶ 138. Evidence of an attempt by attorneys to settle with a client and adjust their differences without litigation is immaterial, in an action for compensation, as the sole question when the attempt to settle failed was the agreement and the value of the services.—Walbridge v. Barrett, 118 Mich. 433.

¶ 139. In an action for compensation for services rendered by an attorney, evidence of negotiations with another associated attorney, which fell through, and letters written at such time, were irrelevant.—Walbridge v. Barrett, 118 Mich. 433.

¶ 141. Evidence that plaintiff in action for agreed fees for services is a lawyer of limited practice and experience, is inadmissible on the question of probability that there was such a contract made as alleged, where defendant does not profess to have known anything about plaintiff's qualifications at the time the alleged contract was made.—Shakespeare v. Baughman, 113 Mich. 551.

¶ 142. In an action for the value of attorney's services, evidence of the outcome of another suit and of expenses therein incurred is inadmissible where offered on a claim of setoff, which pleaded that the other suit was begun on a guaranty of success but failed, and that there was an agreement that the respective attorneys should exchange services in the two suits, neither of which contracts had been proved as a basis for the offered testimony.—Lungerhausen v. Crittenden, 103 Mich. 173.

¶ 143. Where an attorney claiming setoff for services rendered shows that after a note had been placed in his hands by his client for collection, and after he had ascertained, through correspondence, the maker's residence, the client took back the note and accepted a new one from the maker, it was incompetent for the client to show in rebuttal that such new note had not been paid. —Wildey v. Crane, 69 Mich. 17.

¶ 144. That an attorney, pursuant to the request of his client, immediately instituted an action, in connection with the former's testimony that the client agreed that he should have fifty per cent. of the amount recovered, is sufficient to justify a finding that such proposal was accepted.—Lehman v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 180 Mich. 362.

§ 43. ——As to value of services.

Expert testimony as to value of services, including competency of attorney himself as expert, see Evidence, VI, B.
Evidence of values generally, including comparisons with other like objects of value or prices, see Values.

¶ 145. The amount charged by an attorney in a given case is not admissible in evidence to fix the value of the services rendered in the same case by the attorney for the other parties; nor does the amount paid in a particular case necessarily fix the amount in all like cases.—Eggleston v. Boardman, 37 Mich. 14.

¶ 146. It is competent to show the amount involved in suits for the management and trial of which an attorney brings suit, such fact having much to do with the value of the services so rendered.—Babbitt v. Bumpus, 73 Mich. 331.

¶ 147. Where an attorney sues for services rendered in a suit in which, after he had procured a settlement, a second suit was brought, through no fault of his, against his client (the present defendant), the damage sustained by the latter by reason of such second suit cannot be shown.—Babbitt v. Bumpus, 73 Mich. 331.

¶ 148. In an attorney's action for compensation for services in certain suits he may be asked the total amount charged for his services in either or all of the suits, the reasonableness of the amount being one of the questions before the jury.—Babbitt v. Bumpus, 73 Mich. 331.

¶ 149. In assumpsit by an attorney for services, testimony offered by defendant to show that the charges of the opposing attorneys in the case in which the plaintiff rendered the services sued for were less than plaintiff's, and that said services were as important as, and of as much or even greater value than, plaintiff's, is properly excluded.—Babbitt v. Bumpus, 73 Mich. 331.

¶ 150. In an attorney's action for compensation for services in prosecuting a suit, it is competent for him in describing the character of the services for which he charged to testify that he had consultations with a great many witnesses, although such service was not specifically stated in the declaration or bill of particulars, since such testimony is admissible under the pleadings.—Babbitt v. Bumpus, 73 Mich. 331.

¶ 151. In an action by an attorney for services rendered in the trial of a cause, evidence that two years before he was retained plaintiff had offered by letter to take $10 per day for work is immaterial.—Crowell v. Truax, 94 Mich. 585.

¶ 152. In an action by an attorney to recover his fees, the plaintiff is competent to testify in his own behalf as to the nature of the services rendered and their reasonable worth.—Chamberlain v. Rodgers, 79 Mich. 219.

¶ 153. A bill rendered for an attorney's services is not for his client proof of their value.—Gartner v. Beller, 54 Mich. 333.

¶ 154. Where a client denies the correctness of an account rendered by his counsel, and refuses to pay it, the counsel in a suit to recover the value of his services is not bound by the bill rendered, but may recover the full value.—Romeyn v. Campau, 17 Mich. 327.

¶ 155. In an action for compensation for services rendered by an attorney, evidence as to time spent by another attorney in assisting in a trial, and his opinion of the value of the plaintiff's services, was competent.—Walbridge v. Barrett, 118 Mich. 433.

See also ante ¶ 148.
In general, see Trial, VI.

¶ 158. In an action to recover for legal services, where the testimony of a certain witness that a certain sum was a reasonable amount as attorney's fee for the services performed was modified on cross-examination, held that the whole question became one for the jury.—McKnight v. Lowitz, 196 Mich. 368.

¶ 160. In an action by an attorney to recover for professional services rendered in giving advice to an alleged client with reference to cumulative voting at a stockholders' meeting of a corporation in which defendant was interested, and in which plaintiff testified that he talked the matter over with defendant three times, and that on one occasion they spent two hours discussing the matter and in figuring out various combinations that defendant could make under the cumulative voting law, and in which defendant denied that he received such advice, and stated that he was only in plaintiff's office for five minutes, an instruction that if defendant did consult plaintiff in relation to his interest in the corporation as stated and the jury found for the plaintiff the verdict should be for the amount claimed and interest, held sufficient in connection with the rest of the charge to present to the jury the question whether defendant consulted plaintiffs, and as a result of such consultation received the advice for which the bill was rendered.—Sloman v. Cady, 191 Mich. 471.

¶ 161. In an action by attorneys to recover compensation for services payable when a judgment was obtained or a settlement effected, where the evidence showed such settlement and the making of a check placed in the hands of the judgment defendant's attorneys to be paid over to the judgment plaintiff, present defendant, a request of the defendant for a directed verdict on the ground that the action was prematurely brought, was properly refused.—Walbridge v. Barrett, 118 Mich. 433.

¶ 162. It is error to direct a verdict for defendant in an action by an attorney for fees for services rendered to defendant railway company, because plaintiff refuses to produce papers in his possession and owned by the defendant, but not relevant to the case on trial, even though his refusal to turn them over to the owner was wholly without justification.—Randall v. Detroit & N. W. Ry., 139 Mich. 477.

General law of instructions, see Instructions.

¶ 164. In an action by an attorney for services rendered in the trial of a cause, it is not error to instruct the jury that plaintiff is entitled to recover for the time necessarily spent in attendance upon court, while awaiting trial, before the cause was reached, even though such time cannot be brought under the two dates mentioned in the bill of particulars; where it is clear from the bill that all the services then rendered are not mentioned, which however did not mislead defendant, and an amendment of the bill being allowable if necessary.—Crowell v. Truax, 94 Mich. 585.

¶ 166. In an action by an attorney to recover salary for a year, where he had been discharged after performing the services for two months, a charge that if he had been employed for annual periods at an annual salary and entered upon the performance of his duties at the beginning of an annual term and continued to act for two months and was then discharged, and defendant continued to use his name on its letterheads, he might recover, is not reversible error, the reference to the letterheads which were continued in use, no new ones being made, though error, being of no consequence.—Ostrander v. Capitol Investment. Building & Loan Ass'n, 130 Mich. 312.

¶ 167. Held, in an action for attorney's services that the charge was comprehensive, fair and not argumentative.—In re Freshour's Estate, 174 Mich. 114; Lyon v. Minor, Id.

¶ 168. Where the court in its charge describes plaintiff as a "reputable" attorney in an action by him for services the word means only that such attorney is a regular lawyer in good standing.—In re Freshour's Estate, 174 Mich. 114; Lyon v. Minor, Id.

¶ 169. In an action by an attorney for services it is not improper to charge the jury that plaintiff is a "reputable lawyer" where it seems that the jury were not, and could not be misled thereby.—In re Freshour's Estate, 174 Mich. 114; Lyon v. Minor, Id.

¶ 170. In an action by an attorney for services rendered in an endeavor to secure the release of an alleged incompetent person from an asylum, it is not error to submit the case to the jury on the theory that plaintiff should recover if he acted in good faith and gave his client the benefit of his best intelligence.—In re Freshour's Estate, 174 Mich. 114; Lyon v. Minor, Id.

§ 46. Lien of attorney or counsel.

Protection of lien and remedies of parties, see post §§ 49-56.

Notice and sufficiency thereof, see post § 53.

Liability for withholding money to coerce settlement, see post ¶ 233.

Selling lien to another as fraud on client, see ante § 31, ¶ 99.

Vendor's lien to work out right to compensation by share in land, see Vendors, IX.

¶ 171. The law creates the lien of a solicitor upon the judgment or fund resulting from his services.—Wipfler v. Warren, 163 Mich. 189.

¶ 172. The theory upon which a lien follows a lawful agreement entered into between attorney and client with respect to compensation is that the agreement amounts to an assignment of a portion of the judgment sought to be recovered or expected as the fruit of the litigation.—Dreiband v. Candler, 166 Mich. 49.

¶ 173. There is no lien before judgment for attorney's fees, except by special agreement.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Cheboygan Circuit Judge, 161 Mich. 181.

¶ 174. An attorney's retention in good faith of moneys held by him for his client, pending the settlement of an honest disagreement between them as to the amount justly due for the attorney's services, is not professional misconduct or a violation of professional duty, and does not make him liable in trover to his client.—Robinson v. Hawes, 56 Mich. 135.

¶ 175. An attorney's lien will not attach to land which the judgment creditor's attorney bids off at execution sale in his own name and against his client's interest and protest, and without making any payment in his own behalf.—Taylor v. Young, 56 Mich. 285.

¶ 176. It is immaterial that an attorney, who claims a lien upon a judgment for his services, was styled upon the record as "of counsel" merely, where it appears that he actively assisted in the preparation for and conduct of the trial.—People v. Pack, 115 Mich. 669.

¶ 177. It is immaterial that an attorney who claims a lien upon a judgment for his services was styled upon the record as "of counsel" merely, where it appears that he instituted the suits, had control of them at all times, and was recognized as attorney of record by counsel for the adverse parties.—Heavenrich v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 111 Mich. 163.

¶ 178. Where an attorney does not perform services in the creation of a fund arising from a partition sale of land, and his clients have no lien thereon under § 11080, Comp. Laws 1897, § 13277, How. St., 2nd Ed., he is not entitled to a lien for his services on the fund, or to an order determining the amount of his compensation, which was disputed by his clients.—Conlon v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 186 Mich. 354.

¶ 179. The court will not fix the amount of an attorney's fee in a partition proceeding and give him a lien on the proceeds of a sale of land, where the amount of his compensation is in dispute.—Conlon v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 186 Mich. 354.

¶ 180. One Cook employed petitioners as his attorneys to bring a bill to have lands conveyed to him, and agreed to pay them 20 per cent. of the proceeds recovered. Defendant Sheehan was acting with Cook, and the title to the land recovered was put in him as trustee for Cook. Held, the petitioners were entitled to enforce a lien for their fees against defendant upon the proceeds of the land in his hands.—Bigelow v. Sheehan, 161 Mich. 667.

¶ 181. A decree in an action for divorce permitted the wife to acquire land owned by her and her husband upon payment to him of $800, which included her interest therein and alimony. Held, that the husband's solicitor had no lien on the $800 for his services in the divorce action.—Canney v. Canney, 131 Mich. 363.

§ 47. ——On judgment or proceeds thereof.

Lien as creature of the law, see also ante ¶ 171.

On proceeds of judicial sale, see also ante ¶ 178.

On proceeds of trust lands adjudged to client, see ante ¶ 179.

¶ 182. An attorney has a lien for his compensation upon the judgment recovered for his client, and is to be regarded as equitable assignee of so much of the judgment as is necessary to pay him.—Wells v. Elsam, 40 Mich. 218; and see Kinney v. Tabor, 62 Mich. 517.

¶ 183. An attorney has a lien for his services upon money collected, and in settling and paying over the proceeds he can demand a final settlement and a receipt; and if there is no fraud, duress, undue advantage or mistake, the settlement binds.—Dowling v. Eggemann, 47 Mich. 171.

¶ 184. An agreement between attorneys and their clients that they are to be paid for their services rendered in the prosecution of a suit, and reimbursed for moneys advanced from the proceeds of the judgment which should be obtained, operates as an assignment of the judgment to the attorneys to the extent of such claims, and until the same are paid the plaintiff can give no valid discharge of the judgment.—Weeks v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 73 Mich. 256.

¶ 185. The lien of an attorney-at-law attaches to the money payable to his client upon a judgment if it is the proceeds of the attorney's labor and skill, and to moneys received by the client by way of a compromise of such judgment, who, if he settles the case after judgment, so as to deprive the attorney of his costs and fees, is liable to him in the proper action.—Lindner v. Hine, 84 Mich. 511.

§ 48. ——For services and expenses in other matters.

¶ 186. An attorney has a lien upon his client's money to secure payment for his professional services, not only in the suit to which it pertains, but in other suits.—Pierce v. Underwood, 103 Mich. 62.

¶ 187. An attorney has a lien upon his client's money and papers in his hands for his services, not only in the suit to which they pertain but in others; yet his lien is limited to the amount due for services, and he is liable in tort if he retains more than he in good faith believes to be due.—Robinson v. Hawes, 56 Mich. 135.

Objection to substitution of attorneys, see ante § 12.

Notice to prevent discontinuance, see post § 53.

¶ 188. The court should protect a solicitor before putting out of its control funds upon which he has a lien for services; and he is entitled to notice of an application to withdraw such funds.—Dennis v. Kent Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 249.

¶ 189. The court should protect an attorney before putting out of its control funds on which he has a lien for services.—Sheahan v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 69.

¶ 191. One Charles Wipfler brought suit against a defendant corporation and others to determine his rights as a stockholder in said corporation. During the pendency of the suit said Wipfler was appointed receiver of said corporation. The suit was determined in favor of the defendants. Said Wipfler was ordered to turn over the funds in his hands to the said corporation. Held, that upon a motion to substitute one Gottman as attorney for one Warren, who had acted in that capacity for defendants, the court had power to protect Warren's attorney's lien on said funds in the receiver's hands and to determine the amount of such lien.—Wipfler v. Warren, 163 Mich. 189.

¶ 192. While, ordinarily, every litigant has the right to change solicitors or attorneys as often as fancy dictates, the courts will require that the just claim of the discarded solicitor or attorney for services be satisfied.—Brown v. Brown, How. N. P. 94.

§ 50. ——Power of sheriff or levying officer.

¶ 193. A sheriff has no judicial power to fix the amount of an attorney's lien on a judgment.—Reed v. Coots, 43 Mich. 321.

§ 51. Waiver or loss of lien.

¶ 194. An attorney's lien for his service upon papers in his hands or upon a prospective judgment is lost when he recovers judgment for such services.—Jones v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 95 Mich. 289.

¶ 195. If an attorney's demand is reduced to a judgment against his client, his lien is lost.—Wipfler v. Warren, 163 Mich. 189.

¶ 196. An attorney's protest against the dismissal, on the application of the parties, of a certiorari, was overruled, where relator seeking to review refusal of a writ of restitution has filed affidavit recognizing the adverse party's right to exclusive possession.—Buchanan v. Moore, 113 Mich. 555.

§ 52. Discontinuance or settlement in violation of lien.

Public policy as to contract against settlement, see Contracts, IV, B.

¶ 197. The attorneys alone manage a case, but they cannot prevent their clients compromising or settling it.—Wright v. Hake, 38 Mich. 525.

¶ 198. An attorney has no lien such as invalidates a settlement of the suit made by his client.—Parker v. Blighton, 32 Mich. 266.

¶ 199. As an attorney's lien upon a suit does not attach until rendition of judgment, he cannot before that time prevent his client from settling and discontinuing the suit.—Voight Brewery Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 103 Mich. 190.

¶ 200. Third parties sued for tort and sought to be held liable for having settled contrary to an invalid agreement between attorney and client, prohibiting the latter from settling, pending litigation, without the attorney's consent, may avail themselves of such invalidity.—Nichols v. Waters, 201 Mich. 27.

¶ 201. A contract between attorneys and client in a personal injury suit provided that if the client failed to recover judgment or get a settlement, the attorneys should receive nothing. Held, the contract impliedly recognized the right of the client to settle the case so long as he did not prejudice the lien of the attorneys.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Cheboygan Circuit Judge, 161 Mich. 181.

¶ 202. Where, in a suit against a railroad, complainant by the terms of his contract with his attorneys has a right to make a settlement without their consent, and the contract provides that in the event of such settlement the attorneys shall have a lien on any money obtained from the railroad, the attorneys'

lien attaches at the percentage fixed by the agreement at the moment the amount of the settlement is agreed upon by plaintiff and the railroad.—Foley v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 168 Mich. 496.

¶ 203. Where in a suit against a railroad the contract with plaintiff's attorneys provides that he may make a settlement with the railroad and without their consent, and that said attorneys shall receive one-half of the money obtained, and where pursuant to such a settlement the railroad pays into court one-half the amount of the settlement agreed upon and costs, the court properly may direct a verdict in favor of defendant.—Foley v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 168 Mich. 496.

¶ 204. Where an attorney takes a case against a railroad company under a contract for a contingent fee, giving notice thereof to the attorneys for the defendant as well as to his client's employer, who was actively looking after the plaintiff's interests, and, without the knowledge of the latter's attorney, a settlement was made directly with the plaintiff, through his employer, by the attorneys for the railroad company, they are all liable to the plaintiff's attorney for his agreed compensation.—Lehman v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 180 Mich. 362.

¶ 205. A client, after making a contract with attorneys giving them a lien on money to be recovered in a personal injury suit, settles with the adverse party without their consent. The attorneys proceed in the cause, and prove the lien agreement with the client. The defendant in the personal injury suit proves the settlement agreement with the client. Held, the attorneys will be entitled to recover the amount of their fees as shown by their lien agreement with the client, upon the basis of the settlement made by him.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Cheboygan Circuit Judge, 161 Mich. 181.

¶ 206. A stipulation by the parties without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff's attorney, and in fraud of his rights, for the discontinuance of a case, will not be treated as valid by the court.—Jackson v. Cole, 81 Mich. 440; Carpenter v. Myers, 90 Mich. 209.

¶ 207. An action instituted by the attorney for a judgment creditor, in the name and with the approval of the latter, upon a bond conditioned for the payment of the judgment, cannot be discontinued by the agreement of the parties thereto, without the consent of the attorney, to the prejudice of his lien upon the judgment recovered in the former action.—Heavenrich v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 111 Mich. 163.

¶ 208. A stipulation signed by the parties without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff's attorney, for a discontinuance of a case after its submission in the Supreme Court, and for an affirmance of the judgment without costs, is not valid.—Jackson v. Cole, 81 Mich. 440.

¶ 210. Where with notice that plaintiff had assigned his interest in the suit to his attorney to secure the payment to him, for his services in the case, of an agreed percentage of the amount recovered, defendant settles with plaintiff and pays him the amount found to be due him, less the percentage due the attorney which defendant retains, and a stipulation is filed, signed by plaintiff and defendant, setting forth the settlement, and consenting to a discontinuance of the suit and directing the clerk to enter an order to that effect, which order is not entered, nor the sum so retained tendered to the attorney or paid into court, the suit is not discontinued, and the attorney may recover judgment therein for the sum so retained by defendant.—Carpenter v. Myers, 90 Mich. 209.

See also ante ¶ 118.

¶ 211. A notice claiming an attorney's lien is sufficient when made by letter and in general terms.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Cheboygan Circuit Judge, 161 Mich. 181.

¶ 212. Where an attorney serves a notice of a lien for fees against any moneys to be recovered by judgment or settlement, it is not necessary that he set forth in detail the terms of his lien agreement with his client.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Cheboygan Circuit Judge, 161 Mich. 181.

¶ 213. Attorneys made a contract with their client in a personal injury suit by which they were to have a lien on one-half of all money recovered by judgment or settlement. Defendant in the suit was notified of the contract and claim of lien. Held, the contract operated as an assignment to the attorneys and the client could not, without their assent, give a valid discharge of the cause of action.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Cheboygan Circuit Judge, 161 Mich. 181.

¶ 214. If a party obtained a discharge of an action under such circumstances as ought to have put him on inquiry as to the claim of an attorney of a lien for fees, the discharge will certainly be void as to the attorney as it would be after actual notice of his lien.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Cheboygan Circuit Judge, 161 Mich. 181.

¶ 215. Where an attorney testifies that he notified the attorneys for a defendant railway company, together with his client's employer, who was actively looking after the plaintiff's interests, that he had a contract with the latter for a contingent fee, and without the knowledge of the attorney a settlement was made with the plaintiff, through his employer, by the attorneys for the railway company, held, that the question of notice was one of fact for the jury in an action against the employer, the railroad company and its attorneys, by the plaintiff's attorney to recover his stipulated compensation.—Lehman v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 180 Mich. 362.

Remedy of client, see post § 56.

¶ 217. A client, after making a contract with attorneys giving them a lien on money to be recovered in a personal injury suit, settles with the adverse party without their consent. The attorneys proceed in the cause, and establish their agreement with the client as valid and binding. The defendant in the personal injury suit fails to show the making of a settlement agreement wth the client and a settlement thereunder. Held, the attorneys will be permitted to prosecute the original cause of action, prove their client's case as though there had been no attempted settlement, and recover their contract share of any damages awarded.—Grand Rapids & I R. Co. v. Cheboygan Circuit Judge, 161 Mich. 181.

¶ 218. A stipulation dismissing the suit pending appeal and without the consent of attorneys, holding a lien on the judgment for their services for which the client is indebted, will be set aside on their motion.—Kirby v. La Dow, 102 Mich. 345.

§ 55. ——Procedure and evidence to enforce rights.

Proper remedy, prosecution of original action, see ante § 54.
Notice as question of fact, see also ante ¶ 215.

¶ 219. Where a client, after making a contract with his attorneys giving them a lien, settles with the adverse party without their consent, in order for the attorneys to be able to proceed in the original suit for the purpose of recovering their fees under their agreement, it is necessary for them to have the stipulation of settlement and discontinuance set aside, or stricken from the files.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Cheboygan Circuit Judge, 161 Mich. 181.

¶ 221. Where a client, after making a contract with attorneys giving them a lien on money to be recovered in a personal injury suit, settles with the adverse party without their consent, and the attorneys proceed in the cause, it will devolve upon the defendant in the personal injury suit to prove the making of the alleged settlement agreement with the client, and that the settlement was made in accordance with its terms.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Cheboygan Circuit Judge, 161 Mich. 181.

¶ 222. Where a client, after making a contract with attorneys giving them a lien on money to be recovered in a personal injury suit, settles with the adverse party without their consent, and the attorneys proceed in the cause, it will devolve upon the attorneys to show that their agreement with the client was duly made in good faith.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Cheboygan Circuit Judge, 161 Mich. 181.

¶ 223. A client, after making a contract with attorneys giving them a lien on money to be recovered in a personal injury suit, settles with the adverse party without their consent. The attorneys proceed in the cause, but fail to prove and establish as bona fide their alleged agreement with the client Held they can recover nothing.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Cheboygan Circuit Judge, 161 Mich. 181.

¶ 225. Where action was brought for the conversion of the proceeds of a judgment which defendants as attorneys had obtained for plaintiff's assignor, the defense being that the money was held for both defendants, who had dissolved partnership, to satisfy their lien for services and expenses, the date of the dissolution of the partnership is immaterial.—Reynolds v. Cavanagh, 139 Mich. 387.

See also ante ¶ 187.

¶ 226. Satisfaction of judgment filed by non-appealing co-defendant collusively will be set aside and costs retaxed in favor of appellant defendant who, prior to such satisfaction, had assigned judgment to his attorneys in payment of their fees; since the appellant has a right to see that his attorney's lien is protected.—Potter v. Hunt, 68 Mich. 242.

§ 57. Accountability of attorney.

Of agents in general, see Agency, § 99.
Accountability to estate for proceeds of claim for death by wrongful act settled by attorney, see Estates of Decedents, V, A.

¶ 227. Where a member of a firm of attorneys which had been retained for an agreed share of the proceeds to contest a will, effected, in connection with one of his clients who was the attorney in fact of the rest, a settlement, and received his firm's share, after which, without his partner's knowledge, and in collusion with the attorney in fact, he obtained from some of the other clients releases of their claims, they not being informed of the settlement, it was held, upon a bill filed by the defrauded clients for a proper distribution of the settlement money, that as the attorney acted in his individual capacity, and not for the firm, in procuring the releases, and as his conduct until after the settlement was correct, the firm had a right to retain the compensation received, and that the innocent partner was not liable, and that the other member of the firm was, to those from whom releases had been obtained, for such part of the diverted fund as could not be traced and recovered.—Richardson v. Richardson, 100 Mich. 634.

F. NEGLIGENCE, MALPRACTICE AND BREACH OF CONTRACT.

General nature of duty to client, see ante §§ 13, 14.
Damages and the measure and proof thereof, see Damages.
Instruction as to want of skill trenching on jury province, see Instructions, V, A.

¶ 228. Attorneys and solicitors must exercise reasonable skill, care, discretion and judgment in the conduct and management of the cases in which they are retained.—Eggleston v. Boardman, 37 Mich. 14.

¶ 229. Independently of special contract an attorney is not an insurer of the result in a case in which he is employed, nor can more than ordinary skill, care and diligence be required of him; and if he acts in good faith and with a fair degree of diligence in the discharge of his duties under the usual implied contract, he cannot be held responsible except for errors so gross as to render wholly improbable a disagreement among good lawyers as to the manner of the performance of the services in the particular case.—Babbitt v. Bumpus, 73 Mich. 331.

¶ 230. An attorney, engaged to lend money for a client, lent it, and took a note for the amount made to himself, which he indorsed and delivered to her. Held, that she could not recover against him for failure to advise her as to all proper action necessary for her to take for her security, in that he did not in fact advise her that she must protest the note at maturity in order to charge himself as indorser.—Gott v. Brigham, 41 Mich. 227.

¶ 232. A verdict of not guilty in favor of two attorneys employed as counsel is justified by the evidence in an action for negligence in failing to perfect an appeal, where plaintiff in an affidavit signed by himself and in one signed by his solicitor upon a motion to extend the time for taking the appeal, stated that he relied upon the solicitor to perfect the appeal and not upon the two employed as counsel.—Cornelissen v. Ort, 132 Mich. 294.

Embezzlement by attorney, see Crimes, II.
Statutory penalties and liabilities, see Jud. Act, Chap. I, §§ 64-68; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12069-12073.

¶ 233. The relation of attorney and client is one of the confidence based upon the ability and integrity of the attorney; and the attorney cannot withhold money belonging to his client in order to make the latter agree to unreasonable terms for professional services rendered.—Robinson v. Hawes, 56 Mich. 135.

¶ 234. It is in fraud of a client's rights for the attorney, after bidding off an undivided interest in land at a sale on execution in the client's favor, to sell such interest before the equity of redemption has expired, to the execution debtor, and to bring about such sale on the ground that it would be to the buyer's interests as against his client.—Taylor v. Young, 56 Mich. 285.

¶ 235. Where a party is urged into a settlement by the agency of one whom he is known by all concerned to regard as his own counsel, but who, in fact, favors the other side, and an unconscionable advantage is taken of him, it amounts to fraud.—Briggs v. Withey, 24 Mich. 136.

¶ 236. An attorney who held a second mortgage on one of two pieces of property on which his client held a first mortgage, and who to enforce his legal right to redeem on both lands, took an agreement from the mortgagor recognizing such right, and then assisted in raising the money to pay the first mortgage, did nothing more than he had a right to do, when after ceasing to represent such mortgagee, he sought to compel a conveyance of the land is question which had been conveyed to the mortgagee's wife for a nominal sum.—Sheehan v. Farwell, 135 Mich. 196.

¶ 238. An attorney who neglects to comply within a reasonable time with his client's demand for money and papers belonging to such client held by the attorney, is guilty of professional misconduct, and is liable as for a misdemeanor, or in an action of tort, except so far as the papers and moneys are subject to the attorney's lien for his professional services. (How. St., § 9152.)—Robinson v. Hawes, 56 Mich. 135.

Liability of attorney to client for costs paid which attorney assumed, see also ante ¶¶ 116, 117.

¶ 239. In an action against an attorney upon his alleged agreement to prosecute plaintiff's suit and pay the costs, receiving half the recovery if successful, the attorney testified that after he had obtained judgment for plaintiff in the circuit court, and after the defendant in that case had announced its intention to remove the case to the Supreme Court, he and his client agreed that if he failed in the higher court he was to have no fees but was not to be liable for costs; also, that when the case was removed he declined to prosecute it if he was to be liable for costs in case of failure, and that he told his client he could then discontinue without paying costs. Held, that it was competent as bearing on his theory of the case for him to prove by the officers of the defendant in that case that defendant would have agreed to such discontinuance.—Wildey v. Crane, 69 Mich. 17.

III. ATTORNEY GENERAL AND OTHER PUBLIC ATTORNEYS.

Officer to sue for county moneys, see Counties, VIII.

General provisions relative to the attorney general, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 13, §§ 132-147.

¶ 240. The attorney general is the proper representative of the state in the Supreme Court in proceedings to which the state is a party; and no other attorney appearing without his consent or approval to represent the public interest will be recognized. He only can make the people plaintiffs in error.—People v. Navarre, 22 Mich. 1; Babcock v. Hanselman, 56 Mich. 27; Frey v. Michie, 68 Mich. 323; Vrooman v. Michie, 69 Mich. 42.

¶ 240a. Where a relator brings suit in mandamus to compel the state veterinary board to grant a registration certificate, the respondent can be represented only by the attorney general as counsel.—Jennings v. State Veterinary Board, 156 Mich. 417.

¶ 240b. The history and nature of the office of prosecuting attorney, and the legislation concerning it, considered, and the conclusion reached that no person who has not been admitted as an attorney at law is eligible to the office of prosecuting attorney.—People ex rel. Hughes v. May, 3 Mich. 598.

¶ 241. The prosecuting attorney is a sworn minister of justice, whose duty it is to see that the innocent are protected as well as that the guilty are brought to punishment, and he must act impartially.—Wellar v. People, 30 Mich. 16; People v. Gordon, 40 Mich. 716; People v. Davis, 52 Mich. 569; People v. Quick, 58 Mich. 321; People v. Cona, 180 Mich. 641.

¶ 242. The prosecuting attorney is a quasi judicial officer, and he and any one associated with him represent public justice exclusively, and stand indifferent as between the accused and any private interest.—Meister v. People, 31 Mich. 99; Sneed v. People, 38 Mich. 248; People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328; People v. Bemis, 51 Mich. 422.

¶ 243. A prosecuting attorney is vested with a personal discretion as a minister of justice and not as a mere legal attorney, and he must act impartially, as well in refraining from prosecuting as in prosecuting. He must guard the real interest of public justice in behalf of all concerned, and he must not become entangled with private interests or grievances in any way connected with charges of crime.—Engle v. Chipman, 51 Mich. 524.

¶ 245. It is the constitutional province of the prosecuting attorney in criminal cases to select the witnesses for the state, and an act depriving him of this function and conferring it upon the court is unconstitutional.—People v. Dikeron, 164 Mich. 148.

¶ 246. Const. art. 6, § 10, authorizing the circuit judge within his jurisdiction to fill a vacancy in the office of prosecuting attorney, and How. St., §§ 663, 664, conferring this power authorized by the Constitution, evidently refer to vacancies and not to appointment of a special prosecutor in case of disqualification.—Sayles v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 84.

§ 63. ——Disqualification in criminal cases.

Objections to disqualification, and proofs thereon, see Indictment and Prosecution, IV, IX, A.

¶ 247. A prosecuting attorney is disqualified from prosecuting for obtaining money by false pretences where the complaining witness is his brother, and a firm to which he himself belongs is affected by the transaction.—People v. Cline, 44 Mich. 290.

¶ 248. Under How. St., § 557, as amended by Laws 1883, Act No. 32, which forbids any attorney from prosecuting "any person for an alleged criminal offense where he is engaged or interested in any civil suit or proceeding depending upon the same state of facts" against such person, a prosecuting attorney thus disqualified cannot act in such a criminal case, even with the unqualified consent of the respondent.—People v. Bussey, 82 Mich. 49.

¶ 249. Under How. St., § 557, an attorney for the plaintiff in a pending replevin suit is disqualified from prosecuting the defendant in a prosecution for larceny alleged to have been committed in recapturing the property replevied; the title of plaintiff in replevin, and the statement of facts under which he claims to maintain his title, being the same as those upon which the charge of larceny is based.—People v. Hillhouse, 80 Mich. 580.

¶ 250. A prosecuting attorney is not disqualified from appearing in a criminal case by the fact that an unsuccessful effort had been made to employ him in a civil cause growing out of the same state of facts, and that thereupon his father was employed therein.—People v. Summers, 115 Mich. 537.

¶ 251. The prosecuting attorney of a county to which a criminal case has been transferred for trial is not disqualified from participating in the trial by his having been employed, prior to the transfer, by the board of supervisors of the county in which the prosecution was begun to assist in the trial of the case.—People v. Fuhrmann, 103 Mich 593.

¶ 251a. Section 2561, Comp. Laws 1897, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 1158, disqualifies a prosecuting attorney, who is a depositor in a bank, from conducting the trial of a person for embezzlement from it, where facts sufficient to support a conviction would also sustain a civil action by the bank against the respondent to recover the money misappropriated, since the prosecutor as a depositor, had a direct interest in the assets of the bank.—People v. Fitzsimmons, 183 Mich. 284.

§ 64. Assistant or substitute prosecuting attorney.

See also post §§ 65, 66.

¶ 252. The prosecuting attorney, by the court's leave, can have the aid of counsel in a criminal prosecution if the counsel is not disqualified by interest or otherwise.—Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245; Sneed v. People, 38 Mich. 248.

¶ 253. How. St., § 551, requiring the prosecuting attorney to conduct all criminal prosecutions in the circuit court, and section 560, authorizing the employment of additional counsel upon a prosecution for a felony, do not prohibit the employment of counsel to assist in the preparation and investigation of cases before the grand jury, although involving misdemeanors only, if, in the judgment of the board of supervisors, the prosecuting attorney, and the court, such action is necessary.—People v. O'Neill, 107 Mich. 556.

¶ 254. A prosecuting attorney may, perhaps, employ assistants in ways not involving his official discretion or responsibility, but this discretion can only be delegated on special grounds, where an assistant has been provided for by law.—Engle v. Chipman, 51 Mich. 524.

§ 65. ——Selection, qualifications and appointment.

See also ante ¶ 246.
Competency of disqualified attorney to be amicus curiæ, see Amicus Curiæ.
Presumptions on writ of error, see Indictment and Prosecution, XVI, D.

¶ 254a. It is not error for the court to appoint a special prosecutor in a case when the prosecuting attorney states that he does not propose to act but is going to allow a certain attorney to proceed who is not objected to as being disqualified, and the court appoints such attorney because he considers the prosecuting attorney disqualified.—People v. Auerbach, 176 Mich. 23.

¶ 256. Under How. St., § 560, authorizing the prosecuting attorney, under the direction of the court, to procure assistance in the trial of felonies, he may secure an assistant who is not a resident of his county.—People v. Thacker, 108 Mich. 652.

¶ 257. The fact that an attorney is strongly prejudiced against the liquor traffic does not disqualify him from assisting in the prosecution of one charged with a violation of the local option law.—People v. O'Neill, 107 Mich. 556.

¶ 258. C., an attorney for R., who had lent money to L. on L.'s depositing with R. his title deed to certain land, was asked by R. to investigate L.'s arrest upon a charge of perjury, and he told W., another attorney, that if he went into the county to force L. to give a deed of the land to him, he would follow him and prevent his doing it. In a prosecution against W. for maliciously threatening to accuse L. of perjury, in order to force L. to give the deed, it appeared that C. was not interested in L. at the time the prosecution was commenced, but that he had since been retained to defend L. in another criminal proceeding. Held, that C. could not be said to be employed as attorney in any civil proceeding involving the same state of facts, so as to be disqualified under How. St., § 557, from prosecuting the case under appointment by the court, the prosecuting attorney being disqualified from acting.—People v. Whittemore, 102 Mich. 519.

¶ 259. Counsel who represent private interests cannot be supposed to be impartial, and, therefore, cannot be retained to assist in criminal prosecutions growing out of such interests.—People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328.

¶ 260. Counsel to assist the prosecuting attorney in a particular prosecution may properly be employed by the board of supervisors, with the sanction of the circuit court and the approval of the prosecuting attorney.—People v. Bemis, 51 Mich. 422.

¶ 261. The court has discretion to permit the prosecution to be assisted by the prosecuting attorney's partner who is not employed for the purpose by any private person, and who is not interested in the matter.—People v. Foote, 93 Mich. 38.

¶ 262. It is within the court's discretion to permit to be associated as counsel with the prosecution an attorney who has been involved in political and legal controversies with respondent's brother, but who has never been employed against respondent and who testifies that he can act fairly in the prosecution.—People v. Montague, 71 Mich. 447.

¶ 263. How. St., § 559, providing that the Supreme Court and the circuit courts may in certain cases appoint an attorney to perform the duties of the prosecuting attorney refers to cases arising in or pending in those courts, and not to cases outside of such courts.—Sayles v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 84.

¶ 264. A circuit judge has no authority under How. St., §§ 559, 560, 663, 664, to appoint a special prosecuting attorney to investigate a charge of crime, or to conduct an examination before a justice of the peace. So held where, owing to the disqualification of the prosecuting attorney, and at his request, the circuit judge appointed a special prosecuting attorney to conduct a criminal examination, and after the discharge of the respondent upon such examination, and on the petition of the complaining witness, the judge appointed another attorney as special prosecutor to investigate the case, and prosecute the complaint if, in his judgment, it was well founded.—Sayles v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 84.

¶ 265. In the absence of a contrary showing by respondent, an attorney appointed by the court to assist the prosecuting attorney in the prosecution of a criminal case will be presumed to be qualified to perform such duty, and need not be sworn as to his qualifications.—People v. Wright, 89 Mich. 70.

¶ 266. An assistant prosecuting attorney has no power in the matter of retaining counsel to assist in criminal prosecutions.—People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328.

Private interest as affecting qualification for appointment by court, see ante §§ 64, 65.
Right to employ in bastardy proceedings, see Bastards, § 4.

¶ 267. A prosecuting attorney may be aided by counsel in the trial of criminal causes, but it is error to allow any counsel employed by private parties to act for or with him in that capacity. The policy of the law intrusting the management of criminal business to an official prosecuting officer was adopted to secure the administration of criminal justice from being abused or used for private purposes.—Meister v. People, 31 Mich. 99; People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328.

¶ 268. Respondents on trial for burning property with intent to defraud insurers have a right to object to the employment of counsel on the trial who were in the interest and employment of the insurers.—Meister v. People, 31 Mich. 99.

¶ 269. General counsel for a bank cannot take part in a criminal prosecution for obtaining money therefrom by false representations to its president, especially if such counsel is also acting for the bank in a civil suit involving the same subject matter. The fact that complaint was made by the president and that the counsel was not retained by him personally makes no difference. (Laws 1879, Act No. 195, p. 179.)—People v. Hendryx, 58 Mich. 319.

§ 1. Nature, functions and authority in general.

Licenses and regulating ordinances, see Licenses; Municipal Corporations, IX, C.
Ratification of acts by tendering conveyance of land sold, see Agency, ¶ 350.

¶ 1. Assignees in bankruptcy who have employed an auctioneer to make sale of the assets of the estate, and have put him in charge, must be understood as authorizing him to speak for them, and when he accepts a bid and knocks down the property a bargain is closed. Where the assignees were present, and through inattention misunderstood the bids, it was held no excuse for refusing to carry out the sale.—Ives v. Tregent, 29 Mich. 390.

¶ 2. Where an auctioneer discloses the fact of agency and his principal, the law presumes that he does not contract upon his own behalf but for the principal.—Mercer v. Leihy, 139 Mich. 447.

§ 2. Rights and liabilities.

¶ 3. An auctioneer who, though not knowing that the person from whom he receives property for sale has not title, sells such property in good faith and pays over the proceeds less his commission, is liable to the true owner as for conversion.—Kearney v. Clutton, 101 Mich. 106.

¶ 4. An auctioneer offered some horses for sale. He stated that they did not belong to a named party, and asked, "Where is the man who brought these horses," whereupon the man stepped out so as to be identified, though his name was not given. The horses were in fact stolen. Held, that the principal was sufficiently identified so as to relieve the auctioneer from personal liability to the purchaser.—Mercer v. Leihy, 139 Mich. 447.

Sale of estrays at public auction, see Animals, § 5.
Right of assignee to sell at auction, see Assignments for Creditors, § 22.
Requisites of contract under Statute of Frauds, see Frauds, Statute of.

¶ 5. Auction sale implies a sale to the highest bidder, and it is presumed that it was so made.—McCammon v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 103 Mich. 104.

¶ 6. A bidder at auction sale is presumed to have known what interest was being offered and sold, where it was publicly announced at the auction and in hand bills advertising the sale.—Stowell v. Ames, 148 Mich. 439.

¶ 7. Where an auctioneer makes a sale of land different from the terms authorized by the owner, and from those stated in the printed advertisement, the owner is not liable for the money paid thereon to the auctioneer, and which he himself has refused to receive.—Muffat v. Gott, 74 Mich. 672.

¶ 8. The law does not approve of one who is the auctioneer at a chattel mortgage foreclosure sale, occupying the dual position of such auctioneer and agent of the buyer, as well as that of attorney for the mortgagor and the mortgage trustees.—Smitton v. Selbert, 136 Mich. 410.

BAILMENTS.

TREATS of the transfer of possession of chattels without change of title, to be redelivered after the purpose of such transfer is accomplished, and of the rights and liabilities incident to such transfers; but excludes for specific treatment certain bailments, e. g., Carriers; Pledges; Auctions; Inns; Warehousing. The right of possession incident to contract or lien is treated in Chattel Mortgages; Contracts, VI; Liens.

Contract as one of agency or bailment, see Agency, § 1.

Brokers and factors as bailees of goods or securities in their charge, see Brokers; Agency, V.

¶ 1. A bailment implies a return of the original thing that is the subject of the bailment; a deposit of money that is not to be kept identically, but is to be used in a particular manner, is not a bailment.—Havens v. Church, 104 Mich. 135.

¶ 2. A bailment is created by a contract whereby sheep of another are received by a person to hold for a number of years, on rendering a portion of the increase and wool annually as rental.—In re Parsell's Estate, 184 Mich. 522.

¶ 3. A delivery of grain into custody and the issuance against it of a receipt or of an agreement to redeliver it out of a mass is a bailment and not a sale.—Erwin v. Clark, 13 Mich. 10; Ledyard v. Hibbard, 48 Mich. 421.

¶ 4. A consignee of part of grain in a mass cannot be regarded as a bailee of it, where neither he nor the consignor has possession of receipts necessary to establish and claim the right of possession of the grain.—Perkins v. Dacon, 13 Mich. 81.

¶ 5. In trover for the conversion by a lessee of property which he had held over his term, a charge that, if he had failed to keep and care for the goods as a prudent man would as to his own, the relation of bailor and bailee was ended, and so entitled plaintiff to bring trover without any demand, was held too broad where it had not appeared that the alleged want of care and diligence, if any, related to more than a part of the goods, or that this part was actually injured.—Thompson v. Moesta, 27 Mich. 182.

¶ 6. Where bailed chattels are not redelivered to the owner at the time stipulated in a contract of bailment, and the failure of the bailee, who does not deny the bailor's right to possession, is not excused, the bailment is not at an end, but the bailee continues to hold the goods in trust.—In re Parsell's Estate, 184 Mich. 522.

¶ 7. The fact that the possession of chattels is retained by a bailee without objection after the expiration of the time stipulated in a contract of bailment, may, in connection with other persuasive circumstances, raise a question for the jury whether the bailment was terminated or was continued and renewed.—In re Parsell's Estate, 184 Mich. 522.

Right of possession as requisite to bailment, see also ante ¶¶ 3, 4.

¶ 8. The mere retention of possession of property by a bailee, without assertion of an adverse claim, however long continued, will not of itself work a change of ownership.—In re Parsell's Estate, 184 Mich. 522.

¶ 9. The fact that one who had left money with defendant for keeping sent to his wife for part of it while away, and that she did not send it, but defendant sent a small sum, does not tend to show that it was the money of the wife to whom as bailor the defendant was responsible.—McGraw v. Lapham, 72 Mich. 191.

¶ 9a. A wife who had taken and deposited in a bank in her own name part of a sum of money which her husband had secreted in his house, afterwards returned to him part of the deposit, and, pending divorce proceedings, let her solicitor have $170 which she had drawn from the deposit, and for which she took a receipt stating it was "to be returned on demand." Subsequently she brought trover against the solicitor for the money, and testified that her husband assented to her retaining the rest of the deposit not repaid to him. The husband denied this. Held, that as the solicitor when he received the money knew the facts of her claim concerning it, he was estopped afterwards from saying the money was not the wife's, and claiming the right to show title in the husband.—Pierce v. Underwood, 103 Mich. 62.

¶ 10. Defendants in possession of certain patterns belonging to plaintiffs were not entitled to the payment of storage as a condition of turning over such property to plaintiffs, suing in trover, where it appeared that a certain agreement had been executed between the parties whereby all matters of difference between them were settled and providing that such patterns should be delivered to plaintiffs on demand, and where subsequently to the date of such agreement the acts of defendants indicated that a demand for such property would be useless.—Galvin v. Galvin Brass & Iron Works, 81 Mich. 16.

¶ 11. One who hires for the use of a third person a horse and carriage, and is charged for the horse, is not liable for injury to the horse by the negligence of the third person in driving, the horse having been entrusted by the bailor to the third person and not delivered to the person charged for the hire.—Wallace v. ¶ 12. Where the rights and duties of the parties are not defined by a contract of bailment, the bailee is required in conserving the thing bailed, to exercise such care and diligence as a person of average prudence and diligence would bestow under similar circumstances.—In re Parsell's Estate, 184 Mich. 522.

¶ 13. Where a contract of bailment is for the sole benefit of the bailor, bailee is only required to act in good faith, and he is consequently responsible for nothing less than gross neglect.—Cadwell v. Peninsular State Bank, 195 Mich. 407.

¶ 14. A gratuitous bailee of goods destroyed by fire is liable only for gross negligence.—Barrows v. Cushway, 37 Mich. 481.

¶ 15. A gratuitous bailee must not be reckless; so a railway company receiving property for gratuitous carriage must observe such care as the circumstances reasonably require.—Flint & P. M. Ry. Co. v. Weir, 37 Mich. 111.

¶ 16. One taking horse for pasturage under contract void because made on Sunday is liable if he turns it into a pasture knowing of disease among other horses there, which it contracts.—Costello v. Ten Eyck, 86 Mich. 348.

¶ 17. Where one has possession of another's cattle under a contract that he shall pay for any damages they may sustain, and they are injured by his servant's beating them cruelly, evidence that other cattle were not injured by similar treatment is inadmissible.—Smith v. McGill, 27 Mich. 142.

¶ 18. Where one has by contract leased sheep to another to be properly cared for, and to be returned unless the sheep died without his negligence, the fact that the lessor, on being shown sheds where the sheep were to be kept, said that they were good for the purpose, does not raise an estoppel against alleging their unfitness if keeping the sheep in them was negligence.—Wolscheid v. Thome, 76 Mich. 265.

¶ 19. In an action against the lessee of sheep for breach of contract to care properly for them, etc., a request by defendant for an instruction that, to find against him on account of the improper location of the sheds wherein the sheep were kept, the jury must be satisfied from the evidence that men of ordinary skill and prudence in keeping sheep would not have located the sheds as defendant did, should be granted.—Wolscheid v. Thome, 76 Mich. 265.

¶ 20. One who hires horses and entrusts them to the care and attention of a driver agreed on by the owner is liable for the negligence of such driver only, and not for that of an innkeeper or his hostler, to whom such driver without negligence has entrusted them.—Ruggles v. Fay, 31 Mich. 141.

¶ 21. A traveling salesman entrusted with samples to be taken care of on his personal responsibility, and without orders to send them by express, has no duty laid on him to entrust them to any one else, and is not bound in the absence of complaint by his employer to put the property out of his personal custody to save the expense of his journey.—Lamb v. Henderson, 63 Mich. 302.

¶ 23. In an action for damages for breach of contract to feed and properly care for plaintiff's horses, evidence tending to show that they were returned in bad condition by defendant, and that such condition was due to want of proper care and food, warrants a charge that this casts on defendant the burden of proving other cause, if there was any, for their condition.—Hynes v. Hickey, 109 Mich. 188.

¶ 25. In an action to recover the value of certain property lost, where the issue was whether the storing of the property was a part of the consideration for a lease of the premises where it was stored, and whether the defendant had thus assumed the obligation of a bailee for hire, or was a gratuitous bailee, the evidence examined was held to support the finding that the defendant as part of the agreement for renting the store had agreed to store the lost property.—Henry v. Salomon, 148 Mich. 467.

¶ 27. Whether it is prudent for the driver of a hired horse to entrust it to the care of an innkeeper with whom he puts up as a guest depends largely upon circumstances, and the customs of the place, and should be left to the jury as a question of fact.—Ruggles v. Fay, 31 Mich. 141.

¶ 28. One who hired a horse for a specified journey and drove it beyond what his contract contemplated, so that the horse died, was held in trover for its value.—Fisher v. Kyle, 27 Mich. 454.

¶ 29. The general rule is that if a bailee having authority to use a chattel in a particular way, uses it in a different way, or to a greater extent than authorized, such unauthorized use is a conversion of the chattel, and the bailor may maintain an action for its value.—Baxter v. Woodward, 191 Mich. 379.

¶ 30. An agent who has possession of an automobile for the purpose of sale and has no authority to drive the car, even for demonstration purposes, without the consent of the principal, is liable for a conversion thereof where he takes the automobile to another city without the consent of the principal and it is wrecked in a collison with another car.—Baxter v. Woodward, 191 Mich. 379.

¶ 31. Where one who has a lien on goods leaves them with his bailee, who ships them against his directions, this is a conversion; and the owner's orders to ship them would not justify the bailee though they might affect the question of damages.—Edwards v. Frank, 40 Mich. 616.

¶ 32. An action does not lie for the value of property gratuitously lent on a showing merely that the lender had sent for it and had not received it back; it is not presumable without proof that the borrower wrongfully withheld it.—Beller v. Schultz, 44 Mich. 529.

¶ 33. Where, without authority therefor, the bailee of a note delivers it to the maker for destruction, there is a conversion.—Hicks v. Lyle, 46 Mich. 488.

¶ 34. It is the duty of the proprietor of a skating rink to preserve skates delivered to him by his patrons, and for which he has given checks, and his failure to deliver them on demand, because he cannot find them, is a conversion.—Donlin v. McQuade, 61 Mich. 275.

¶ 34a. The mere failure of a bailee to account is not proof of a conversion.—Hutchins v. Vinkemulder, 187 Mich. 676.

¶ 35. One who hired a horse for a specified journey was not liable in trover if the horse died where the driving was within what the contract contemplated as to distance, time, etc.—Ruggles v. Fay, 31 Mich. 141.

¶ 36. If one hires a horse to go to a funeral on Sunday and goes elsewhere and, while on his return, the horse steps through a defective bridgeway and receives injuries resulting in its death, the one hiring the horse is guilty of conversion and is liable for the value of the horse.—Thompson v. Shaw, How. N. P. 262.

¶ 37. In an action by the bailor to recover the value of the goods from the bailee upon failure of the latter to redeliver, the bailee may show, under a plea of the general issue, that the goods were stolen from him; and no presumption of negligence arises from the mere fact of the loss by theft.—Knights v. Piella, 111 Mich. 9.

¶ 38. In assumpsit for value of the goods, the bailee having shown a fact which prima facie excuses loss and his failure to redeliver, the burden rests upon the bailor to prove want of due care.—Knights v. Piella, 111 Mich. 9.

¶ 39. A letter written by the bailee to the bailor immediately after their theft, apprising the bailor of the fact, and promising to pay for the goods, does not conclusively establish the liability of the bailee, independent of all the other circumstances surrounding the transaction.—Knights v. Piella, 111 Mich. 9.

¶ 40. One who hires a horse for a specified journey and drives it beyond what his contract contemplated takes upon himself all the consequences of such additional driving, and if the horse dies while being so driven he is liable in trover for its value.—Fisher v. Kyle, 27 Mich. 454.

¶ 41. A borrower of property is not an insurer of it even when it is gratuitously lent. —Beller v. Schultz, 44 Mich. 529.

¶ 42. A man lent a flag to his employer, helped him to hoist it, and left it flying when he went away. It was afterwards damaged by a hail storm. Held, that the employer was not liable for the damage done, without proof, at least, that he had failed to take due care of it.—Beller v. Schultz, 44 Mich. 529.

¶ 43. The failure of a bailee for hire, or his servants, to use and treat a horse with the degree of reasonable care ordinarily exercised by prudent men, renders the bailee liable to the bailor for all injuries traceable to improper treatments.—Pesola v. Forsten, 182 Mich. 94.

¶ 45. One who has hired a horse is bound to use such prudence and foresight in the care of the animal as is usual under the circumstances, and no more, and whether it would be prudent for the driver to entrust it without further attention to the care of an innkeeper with whom he put up as a guest depends much upon circumstances and the customs of the place, and should be left as a question of fact for the jury to determine upon the whole facts of the particular case.—Ruggles v. Fay, 31 Mich. 141.

¶ 47. In an action to recover for the death of hired horses, alleged to have been occasioned by improper driving, it is not error for the court to state to the jury a matter of common knowledge and experience as to a certain condition of horses, where he instructs that if such condition of the horses in question was such that a man of ordinary prudence would have known that it was unsafe to proceed, it was defendant's duty to have turned around and placed the horses somewhere.—Lewis v. Bell, 109 Mich. 189.

¶ 48. A naked bailee cannot be held answerable for delivering the goods held by him to the wrong person, if the agent of the person properly entitled thereto has given him to understand they were for the one to whom they were delivered.—Brant v. McMahon, 56 Mich. 498.

¶ 49. A gratuitous bailee with whom money is deposited for the purpose of paying for stock held by such bailee for another is not guilty of gross negligence in paying the money to the supposed owner of the stock where he has no knowledge that the stock belongs to another person, and the supposed owner, upon inquiry, informs him that the stock belongs to him.—Cadwell v. Peninsular State Bank, 195 Mich. 407.

¶ 50. An officer of a bank with whom is deposited preferred corporate stock under an arrangement with the corporation and purchaser under which the purchaser is to pay for same when sold and is to have as a bonus a certain number of shares of common stock likewise deposited and is to account to the corporation for the price of the preferred stock when sold and to such purchaser for the shares of common stock is merely a gratuitous bailee where he neither asks, nor is promised nor receives any compensation or payment of any kind for his acts in protecting the rights of the subsequent purchaser of such common stock from another person.—Cadwell v. Peninsular State Bank, 195 Mich. 407.

¶ 51. County officers deposited with A. a sum of money to be paid by him to persons who should cause certain stolen books of record to be returned. On receiving a paper signed by a county officer acknowledging the receipt of the books, A. paid over the money. Held, that A. being a simple bailee without compensation, and having acted in good faith, the county could not afterwards recover of him the money which he has so paid because a few leaves of the books were missing, and some pages rendered illegible.—Eldridge v. Hill, 97 U. S. 92, 24 L. ed. 970.

Conversion by unauthorized use of car, see ante ¶ 30.
Motor vehicle law in general, see Highways, XIV.
Liability of garage keeper for loss of or injury to car, see note, 10 N. C. C. A. 1007-1014, 15 N. C. C. A. 308-312.

¶ 52. Where a contract by an automobile owner with a garage proprietor contemplates storage and extras which are incidental to garage service, including conveyance to and from the garage, and the automobile is being taken to the garage from the owner's home by a garage employee at the time it is struck by a street car and the owner of the automobile has had no notice of a change of ownership of the garage, the contract is still in effect so as to render the former proprietor of the garage liable for the negligence of such employee.—Banks v. Strong, 197 Mich. 544.

¶ 53. In an action by the owner of an automobile against the former proprietor of a garage, with whom such owner had a contract for storage and conveyance to and from the garage, for damages for injury to the automobile while under the control of an employee of the garage taking it from plaintiff's home to the garage, an instruction that the transfer of the business was not involved because plaintiff had no notice thereof; that the contract of bailment continued after the transfer, and that defendant had no right to change the contract by transferring his liability to some one else, held to be correct.—Banks v. Strong, 197 Mich. 544.

¶ 54. In an action against a garage proprietor for damages for injury to a car left by the owner for repairs and which was taken out by an employee of defendant for his own personal pleasure and damaged, an instruction setting out the respective claims of the parties and stating that there could be no recovery unless plaintiff established by a fair preponderance of the evidence that there had been a neglect of duty that the defendant owed to him when the defendant became a bailee for hire, held proper.—Smith v. Bailey, 195 Mich. 105, 15 N. C. C. A. 308.

¶ 55. A prima facie case of negligence by a garage owner is made out by proof of delivery of an automobile to such owner for repairs in good condition and failure to produce it in a condition similar to that in which it was received.—Smith v. Bailey, 195 Mich. 105, 15 N. C. C. A. 308.

Waiver of conversion to sue in assumpsit, see Assumpsit, I.

¶ 56. A person who leaves property with a bailee may sue in trover for conversion, or, waiving the tort, may sue in assumpsit, and recover the value of the property, where the defendant converts such property to his own use.—Newman v. Olney, 118 Mich. 545.

¶ 57. Evidence that defendants have come lawfully into the possession of government bonds as gratuitous bailees for plaintiff's intestate, and have delivered them to a third person on an apparently well founded claim of ownership, will not support a count by the administratrix for money had and received to her use. The appropriate remedy is either trover, or a special action on the case for violation of duty as agents or bailees.—Barnum v. Stone, 27 Mich. 332.

¶ 58. A lumber dealer gave an order for a lot of shingles and a larger quantity was forwarded to him than the amount called for. He received and held the excess subject to the consignor's order, advanced the freight charges and notified the consignor, and immediately afterwards they were destroyed by fire without his fault. Held, that assumpsit would not lie for their value.—Larkin v. Mitchell & Rowland Lumber Co., 42 Mich. 296.

¶ 59. A debtor who has delivered lumber to his creditor to sell and out of the proceeds thereof to pay the debt cannot sue in assumpsit for money had and received, based on breach of the contract of bailment in selling the lumber at less than the agreed price.—Anderson v. Corcoran, 92 Mich. 628.

¶ 60. Where each of two persons has received for safe keeping a part of a sum of money, they cannot be held jointly liable in assumpsit.—O'Connor v. O'Connor, 86 Mich. 189.

¶ 61. Under the plea of the general issue in assumpsit for their value, a bailee who was held to the exercise of ordinary care only in his custody of the goods may show that the goods were stolen from him.—Knights v. Piella, 111 Mich. 9.

§ 2. Foreign banks and banking corporations.

General law of foreign corporations, see Foreign Corporations.

¶ 3. Act No. 205, Pub. Acts 1877, as amended by Act No. 34, Pub. Acts 1903, which prescribes the terms and conditions upon which foreign corporations may be admitted to transact business in Michigan, does not authorize foreign banking corporations, and foreign corporations within the contemplation of the banking laws of this state, to transact business in this state.—New York Mortg. Co. v. Secretary of State, 150 Mich. 197.

¶ 4. The secretary of state may, in determining whether he shall issue a certificate entitling a foreign mortgage company to do business within the state, consider the history of the company, the character of its business, and the principal upon which its bonds or mortgages are secured.—New York Mortg. Co. v. Secretary of State, 150 Mich. 197.

¶ 5. Mandamus will not issue to compel the secretary of state to issue a certificate authorizing a foreign mortgage company to transact business within this state, where the legitimate conclusion to be drawn from the facts before the court is that said company's purpose is to sell bonds and securities which are practically worthless.—New York Mortg. Co. v. Secretary of State, 150 Mich. 197.

¶ 7. Money deposited on general account and not left as a special deposit becomes the money of the bank, and the bank is then the depositor's debtor for the amount.—Perley v. Muskegon County, 32 Mich. 132; Neely v. Rood, 54 Mich. 134.

¶ 8. A depositor's contract with his banker is not materially different from any other contract by which one person becomes bound to take charge of and repay another's funds.—Davis v. Lenawee County Sav. Bank, 53 Mich. 163.

¶ 9. A bank as well as a private individual may become a depositor in another bank.—State Sav. Bank of Detroit v. Foster, 118 Mich. 268.

¶ 10. A bank deposit is prima facie the property of the person in whose name the deposit is made, although the word "agent" is affixed to his name.—Burch v. Barendsen, 192 Mich. 369.

¶ 11. A depositor contracting with a bank for the care of his money can control his funds until he has disposed of them, no matter in what name the account is kept, so long as it is understood to be his account, and has not been put beyond his control by some act that he cannot revoke. And if the contract is unwritten, its terms and character can be shown by testimony. It is not determined by the bank book, which only shows the state of the funds.—Davis v. Lenawee County Sav. Bank, 53 Mich. 163.

¶ 12. A bank was not required at its risk to assume that a deposit in the name of a depositor as trustee, belonged to the depositor, and therefore an indorser on a note held by the bank, was not discharged by the failure of the bank to appropriate enough of such fund to pay the note.—State Bank of St. Johns v. McCabe, 135 Mich. 479.

¶ 13. Where a husband changes his bank accounts, making the same payable to himself or wife, or either, and to the survivor he creates a title in the wife at the husband's death under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 248, How. 2nd Ed., § 6468 et seq.—Powell v. Pennock, 198 Mich. 573.

¶ 15. An order upon a bank by a depositor having an account therein to "make it a joint account payable to either or survivor," held to be sufficient to bring it within Pub. Acts 1909, No. 248, § 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 8040, How. 2nd Ed., § 6470, relating to the creation of a joint tenancy with rights of survivorship in a deposit made in the name of the depositor and another person, in form to be paid to either or the survivor of them.—People's State Bank of Holland v. Miller's Estate, 198 Mich. 783.

¶ 16. Where a decedent left at the plaintiff's bank an order that her account therein should be a joint account with another person payable to either or survivor, held that if decedent's intention was that such person should take by right of survivorship such intent would be given force and would not be defeated by the fact decedent did not intend to present gift inter vivos.—People's State Bank of Holland v. Miller's Estate, 198 Mich. 783.

¶ 17. Pub. Acts of 1909, No. 248, § 3, How. 2nd Ed., § 6470, relating to the protection of a bank paying an account to either of joint tenants during their lives or to the survivor, even though it would protect the bank in making payment out of a fund carried in the wife's name to the surviving husband, or to his representative, after the death of the husband, has no application where the bank has not paid the money and admits notice not to pay money to the surviving husband.—Wayne County & Home Sav. Bank v. Smith, 194 Mich. 151.

¶ 18. On a bill by a bank interpleading the executrix of the estate of a married woman, who had carried an account in the plaintiff's bank in her own name with a notation of the husband's name on the books, and the administrator of the estate of the husband to determine title to money on deposit in the bank which the husband in his lifetime had been informed had been transferred to his account but not to be drawn until the claim of the executrix of his wife's estate was determined, which had been brought to the attention of the bank, held that the rights of the parties must be determined on the facts as of the date of the death of the wife, and that nothing could be predicated by either party upon what was said or done with respect to the account after the death of the wife; as no new contract was made by the bank after the wife's death and no particular existing contract was recognized by merely making a conditional change in the account to the husband on the books of the bank.—Wayne County & Home Sav. Bank v. Smith, 194 Mich. 151.

¶ 19. Whether, where moneys are deposited on an understanding with the banker that all orders drawn against the deposit are to be to the order of another, the ordinary relation of debtor and creditor is established between the depositor and the banker, or whether such deposit does not leave it a question of fact whether the money was understood to be deposited to the use of the one or the other, or the joint use of the two who were to act in drawing it out, quære. —Detroit Sav. Bank v. Burrows, 34 Mich. 153.

Duty of bank in regard to adverse claimants, see post § 15.

Right of bank to interplead claimants, see Interpleader.

¶ 20. Where an agent or trustee has deposited money belonging to his principal or beneficiary in a bank to which he is himself indebted, and the bank, without his authority and in ignorance of the true ownership of the fund, has applied it on the debt, the owner is not debarred from recovering it from the bank if it can be identified.—Burtnett v. First Nat. Bank of Cosunna, 38 Mich. 630.

¶ 21. Where a wife was impleaded in garnishment proceedings as a claimant of a bank deposit sought to be reached by her husband's creditors, and it appeared that the account had stood for three years in the name of the husband, and that the income from the wife's investments was insufficient to account for all the deposits, and the husband refused to swear that all the deposits belonged to the wife, but stated merely that they were "principally hers," the court was not in error in submitting to the jury the question of the ownership of the fund.—McIntyre v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 115 Mich. 255.

§ 8. ——Presumptions and evidence of title.

Presumption as to ownership of deposit, see also ante ¶ 10.

Presumption and proof of gift of deposit, see Gifts, III.

¶ 22. The burden of proof rests upon a third party to a garnishment action claiming a bank deposit to show clear title to the fund.—Burch v. Barendsen, 192 Mich. 369.

¶ 23. Money deposited in a bank in the name of one defendant interpleaded is prima facie its property, and cannot be disturbed unless the other defendant interpleaded shows a perfect title to it.—Detroit Sav. Bank v. Haines, 128 Mich. 38.

¶ 24. In a garnishment action where the property garnished consisted of a bank deposit which was claimed by the wife of the defendant and was in the name of the husband with the word "agent" added, where the plaintiff's only evidence consisted of an inspection of the bank account itself coupled with the cross-examination of the two witnesses sworn in the defense, and defendant's evidence consisted of the testimony of the husband and wife that the bank account was that of the wife, that the actual business in connection with the account was transacted by the husband for the wife and that no money was deposited therein except such as was the property of the wife or such as was made by the husband in repayment of loans by the wife, and there was evidence that the wife owned certain properties, that the conveyances were of record and that there were deposited in the bank proceeds of the sales and rentals of her property largely in excess of the amount involved, held that the wife as claimant had sustained the burden of proof to show title to the fund so that a verdict in her favor was properly directed. —Burch v. Barendsen, 192 Mich. 369. (Bird, J., dissenting.)

¶ 26. On a bill of interpleader by a bank against the executrix of a married woman who had carried an account in the bank in her own name and the administrator of the estate of the husband to determine title to such account, evidence held insufficient to show that such fund was a joint fund or that it belonged to the husband.—Wayne County & Home Sav. Bank v. Smith, 194 Mich. 151.

¶ 27. Where, in a suit brought to recover money deposited with a banking firm, plaintiff claims that a certificate of deposit was issued to her, which she afterwards indorsed in blank and delivered to one of the defendants, to be placed to her credit and checked out for the use of a firm of which she was a member, and defendants claim that the certificate was indorsed so as to be payable to another firm, of which plaintiff's husband had been a member, and was placed to their credit, and the certificate, on being introduced in evidence by plaintiff, bears such latter indorsement, which plaintiff claims was made, except as to her name, after she had indorsed the certificate in blank, the burden is upon defendants to substantiate their claim as to said indorsement.—Ehrenkrook v. Webber, 100 Mich. 314.

§ 9. Termination or change of relation of depositor and bank.

Relation and contract formed by deposit, see also ante § 3.

General deposit changed to joint deposit with right of survivorship, see ante § 6.

¶ 28. Relation of debtor and creditor ceases to exist between bank and depositor when latter, with intent to defraud creditors, withdraws deposit and redeposits it in third person's name.—Connor v. Third Nat. Bank, 90 Mich. 328.

¶ 29. A contract between a city and an individual banker for the deposit of moneys with the latter upon the payment of certain interest, is a personal contract and not assignable and terminated upon the death of such individual.—City of Marquette v. Wilkinson, 119 Mich. 413.

¶ 30. Where the defendants conducting a private bank received a deposit from the plaintiff and subsequently sold their business to parties who assumed all the obligations, and where the plaintiff on receiving notice of the same, by his actions, consents to such substitution of debtors, he cannot after the new owners have failed and he has filed his claim and received his pro rata share of the assets, proceed against the defendants to recover the balance of his deposit.—Gillett v. Ivory, 173 Mich. 444.

¶ 31. A bank can at any time tender the full balance due to a general depositor, but cannot compel him to receive less.—Coots v McConnell, 39 Mich. 742.

¶ 32. Money on deposit in a bank subject to check becomes due without demand when the bank becomes insolvent.—Thompson v. Union Trust Co., 130 Mich. 508.

B. PAYMENT OF CHECKS, ETC., AND WITHDRAWALS AND CHARGES.

Certification as payment, see post II, D.

§ 11. In general; manner of checking.

Collections through bank and payment through banks, see post VI.

Care required of bank, see post § 13.

Overdrafts due to violation of depositor's instructions as to payment of checks, see post § 16.

Production of pass book on withdrawing savings deposit, see post § 29.

Payments affected by insolvency, see post § 80.

Medium and proof of payment, and rules for application of payments, see Payment.

¶ 33. A bank will be protected, as against the depositor, in paying out money on such terms as he has authorized.—Davis v. Lenawee County Sav. Bank, 53 Mich. 163.

§ 12. Necessity of acceptance or payment.

Contract rather than name of deposit as governing disposal of it, see ante § 5.

Liability for amount of certificate of deposit surrendered without paying over money, see also post ¶ 91.

General rule that check is not an assignment of fund, see Assignments, § 14.

¶ 34. Where one in extremis drew his check upon a bank, with directions to the payee to defray the funeral expenses of the drawer from the amount, and pay the balance to his heirs, and the check was not accepted by the bank at the death of the drawer, it was held that it did not operate as an assignment of the fund so as to make the bank liable to the payee.—Second Nat. Bank of Detroit v. Williams, 13 Mich. 282.

¶ 35. The giving of a check, drawn in the ordinary form, against funds on deposit in a bank, does not, before the acceptance of such check, amount to an equitable assignment of the amount of the check, so as to prevent its garnishment as money of the drawer.—McIntyre v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 115 Mich. 255.

Liability for paying forged paper, see post VII.

¶ 36. Banks have a right to expect their depositors to know and conform to the ordinary usages of business, and they may rely to a reasonable extent on the presumption that their customers deal with them accordingly.—American Nat. Bank v. Bushey, 45 Mich. 135.

¶ 37. By drawing an order upon which a depositor's money may be paid, and by paying money thereon, a bank is not estopped from denying the order's sufficiency as between interpleaded claimants; for it did not guarantee as a professional adviser such sufficiency as matter of law.—Wayne County Sav. Bank v. Airey, 95 Mich. 520.

¶ 38. A bank upon which a check is drawn is not liable to the payee for the amount of the check, either on the theory that it received the money from the drawer for payee's use, or that money was paid to the bank for payee's use where the check was given to payee's agent in payment of an account to payee, and without authority such agent indorsed the name of the payee upon the back of such check and took it to the bank upon which it was drawn and received the money therefor, and thereupon absconded without accounting to the payee, and the bank charged such check to the maker and returned it to him as paid.—Lonier v. State Sav. Bank, 149 Mich. 483.

See also post ¶ 52.

¶ 39. A bank paying a check owes a duty to the drawer to use due diligence in identifying the payee named with the presenter, even where the check comes to it through other banks, and if the paying bank chooses to rely upon the identification by the bank which cashed the check, it does so at its own risk.—Harmon v. Old Detroit Nat. Bank, 153 Mich. 73.

¶ 40. Where a bank upon which an order is drawn relies upon an identification accepted by the bank cashing the order, the negligence of such bank is imputable to the drawee bank.—Harmon v. Old Detroit Nat. Bank, 153 Mich. 73.

Title and rights of adverse claimants, see also ante § 7.

¶ 41. A bank sued by an adverse claimant for money deposited with it is under no obligation, after having given the depositor timely notice of the proceedings and of the facts on which they are based, to make a strenuous and persistent defense, or to resort to any measures to prevent the cause being brought to trial according to the regular course of the court; the implied obligation of a bank to its depositor to protect the interests of the latter do not go beyond the requirement of good faith in refusing to surrender the moneys confided to its custody, except upon a lawful demand lawfully established.—Detroit Sav. Bank v. Burrows, 34 Mich. 153.

¶ 42. Where a bank depositor and her attorney had ample notice of a suit brought by another to recover the deposit, and the depositor's agent was present at the trial, the bank's failure to notify the depositor's attorney of the time of the trial, such notice not having been requested, is no breach of duty or evidence of negligence on its part; nor is its omission to apply for a continuance until the depositor can be present and take part in the trial; nor its neglect to move for a new trial, that being the agent's duty.—Detroit Sav. Bank v. Burrows, 134 Mich. 153.

¶ 43. Where money deposited in a bank by one person was recovered by another in a suit against the bank, the omission to tax costs after judgment, and the statement of plaintiff's attorney in his precept for execution that "the defendant preferred to have an execution, and both parties want it done at once," and the prompt payment of the judgment by the bank, were held no evidence of collusion between the parties to the suit.—Detroit Sav. Bank v. Burrows, 34 Mich. 153.

Cashier or builder as liable for overdraft on building account, carried in builder's name but controlled by cashier, see also Payment, VI.

¶ 44. One partner drew his own check payable to the order of the firm's bookkeeper, who indorsed and deposited it to the firm's account, to which account it was charged back, not being paid. Held, that as the check was sent as a firm asset and was received and deposited as such to the drawer's knowledge, the bank could recover thereon in suit against the firm for overdrafts paid on the firm's checks.—Gladstone Exchange Bank v. Keating, 94 Mich. 429.

¶ 45. A firm sued by a bank for overdrafts on checks is not estopped because of an opportunity to examine the account and checks from relying on the defense that its instruction not to pay checks not countersigned by its bookkeeper was violated.—Gladstone Exchange Bank v. Keating, 94 Mich. 429.

¶ 46. A member of a firm for whose benefit the proceeds of a check cashed by a bank have with the firm's knowledge been used is estopped from denying liability for overdrafts embracing a charge for the amount of such check charged back as unpaid, even though they did not indorse it.—Gladstone Exchange Bank v. Keating, 94 Mich. 429.

¶ 47. Where a bank instructed not to pay checks not countersigned by defendant's bookkeeper sues for overdrafts on checks not so countersigned, it has the burden of showing that the moneys drawn went for defendant's benefit.—Gladstone Exchange Bank v. Keating, 94 Mich. 429.

¶ 48. Where, in a bank's action for overdrafts, it appears that one check deposited by defendants was not accompanied by a deposit check, the bank claiming it was cashed and not deposited, other deposit checks made by defendants were admissible to show the amount deposited.—Gladstone Exchange Bank v. Keating, 94 Mich. 429.

Title and rights in paper received for collection, see also post § 34.

Amount of deposit owing as affected by right to charge back dishonored paper, see also post § 69.

¶¶ 49, 50. The fact that one depositing commercial paper with a bank for collection is permitted to check against it does not change the import of the transaction so as to preclude the bank charging back the amount of such paper if dishonored.—People's State Bank v. Miller, 185 Mich. 565.

§ 18. Presumptions and evidence as to payment or charge.

Bill, check or note as payment of debt, see Payment, I, II.

¶ 51. As between the depositor and the bank, the burden of proving payment by valid check or other voucher is upon the bank.—Harmon v. Old Detroit Nat. Bank, 153 Mich. 73.

¶ 52. Where, in an action against a bank for wrongfully paying an order, a prima facie case of a fictitious payee is established, the burden is upon the bank to show the existence or nonexistence of such a payee, and that another bank whose identification was accepted by defendant, had taken the proper means to identify the payee.—Harmon v. Old Detroit Nat. Bank, 153 Mich. 73.

¶ 53. Where plaintiff drew on a sum deposited to his credit in defendant's bank, instructing the latter to forward the draft to him at a certain address, but the draft was, according to plaintiff's evidence, never received, though defendant's witnesses testified to its having been mailed, in an action for the money, and not on the lost instrument, defendant declined to pay unless indemnified, held that the issue as to whether the draft was in fact sent to plaintiff was for the jury, and a verdict for plaintiff would not be disturbed.—Smith v. City Nat. Bank of Lansing, 182 Mich. 76.

C. APPLICATION OF DEPOSITS, LIENS AND SETOFFS.

§ 19. In general; deposits affected with trust or agency.

Deposits of public moneys, see post §§ 24, 25.

Ownership of trust fund and application by bank on agent or trustee's debt, see also ante § 7.

Right to set off depositor's note against deposits as affected by intent to prefer creditors under Bankruptcy Act, see Bankruptcy, § 8, ¶ 40.

¶ 54. Funds held by a bank in the name of one as trustee, could not be appropriated to the payment of such trustee's individual note, so as to relieve an indorser.—State Bank of St. Johns v. McCabe, 135 Mich. 479.

¶ 58. In an action by a fraternal benefit society to recover the proceeds of a draft drawn by its finance keeper, who was also assistant cashier of defendant bank, where it appeared that defendant knew that the draft was procured with plaintiff's funds and that the finance keeper had no right to use such funds to pay his individual indebtedness, the question whether defendant was a bona fide holder is immaterial, it being a question for the jury whether the money was used to pay the officer's individual indebtedness as claimed by plaintiff, or to reimburse the bank for money used to pay warrants and other items properly chargeable to plaintiff.—Supreme Tent K. O. T M. v. Port Huron Sav. Bank, 137 Mich. 627.

§ 20. Lien of bank for debt.

Lien on collections realized, see also post § 35.

Lien of bank on stock for debt of holder, see post §§ 69-71.

¶ 59. The general rule is that a bank has a lien on all moneys, notes and funds of a customer in its possession, for any indebtedness of the customer to the bank which is due and unpaid.—Gibbons v. Hecox, 105 Mich. 509.

¶ 60. A demand note made to a bank by a depositor is due at once, within the rule that banks have a lien upon deposits for debts "due" from their depositors, and it may, therefore, without actual demand, be treated as a matured debt for the purpose of setoff in proceedings between the bank and the depositor.—Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Vaughan, 115 Mich. 156.

¶ 61. It cannot be said that it was the duty of a bank holding a matured note to apply thereon the amount of a deposit subsequently made, and that the failure to so apply it released the indorser; since the bank had no lien at the time.—State Bank of St. John's v. McCabe, 135 Mich. 479.

§ 21. ——To meet unmatured debts.

Deposit made after rights are fixed on note, see ante ¶ 61.

¶ 62. Bank deposits made prior to the maturity of a note cannot be held to meet such note when it matures.—State Bank of St. Johns v. McCabe, 135 Mich. 479.

¶ 63. A customer deposited a draft in the bank, the item being duly credited in his pass book which he left to be balanced. Upon the return of the pass book, after the bank had failed, it appeared that the cashier had canceled the credit and had transferred it to the credit of a lumber company to which the depositor owed some notes not yet due, pursuant to an understanding that the proceeds of the draft were to be used for such purpose. Held, that the cashier had no authority to make such transfer while the notes were in the hands of another bank, which prevented the credit from being indorsed on the notes so as to relieve the debtor of liability.—Kunze v. Tawas State Sav. Bank, 130 Mich. 688.

D. CERTIFICATIONS AND ACCEPTANCES BY BANK.

Acceptance of draft, forwarded for collection, as payment, see post ¶ 120.

Evidence to show that certifications in form were loans in fact, see post ¶ 134.

Effect of insolvency of certifying bank upon liability of indorser of check, see Negotiable Instruments, VII.

Rights of bona fide holders of certified checks, see Negotiable Instruments, XIII.

Evidence to impute notice of illegal certification, see Negotiable Instruments, XIII. A.

¶ 64. The certification of a check not drawn against funds when presented by the indorsee is equivalent to payment as to both the maker and indorser.—First Nat. Bank of Detroit v. Currie, 147 Mich. 72.

¶ 65. Where a check was certified by the drawee at the request of the indorsee who thereupon parts with value, a new contract is created which is enforceable by the indorsee against the drawee.—First Nat. Bank of Detroit v. Currie, 147 Mich. 72.

¶ 66. Where the certification of a check drawn against funds is procured by the payee or indorsee both the maker and indorsee are discharged, because certification is equivalent to payment.—First Nat. Bank of Detroit v. Currie, 147 Mich. 72.

¶ 67. The certifying bank is estopped to deny the certification of a check presented by an indorsee not drawn against funds when the indorsee has changed his position or parted with value on the strength of the certification.—First Nat. Bank of Detroit v. Currie, 147 Mich. 72.

¶ 68. The plaintiff was accustomed to take checks from one Andrews drawn on the defendant bank, and to get the checks certified by the defendant before releasing to Andrews the stocks and other securities for which the checks were given in payment. Held, that the fact of this custom being known to Andrews tended to show that he was an original party in securing the certification.—First Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 158 Mich. 94.

III. TIME AND OTHER SPECIAL DEPOSITS AND WITHDRAWALS.

§ 23. In general; conditional deposits and credits.

Rules regulating handling and deposit of moneys by executors, administrators and trustees, and their accountability for moneys, see Estates of Decedents; Trusts; Guardianship; etc.

Payment of trust and preferred claims in insolvency, see post §§ 83-87.

¶ 69. Where, when an account was opened between a bank and a depositor, it was agreed that he should be privileged to deposit drafts drawn by him on his customers, and should be credited for them, such as should not be accepted to be charged back, and that he should always keep on deposit a certain sum to cover liability on drafts returned, held, the bank having been garnished on his account, that such agreement was competent, and that the bank could not be charged as garnishee, if, at the time of garnishment, the depositor's nominal credit was more than offset by unaccepted drafts which before trial came back unpaid.—Rice v. Third Nat. Bank, 97 Mich. 414.

¶ 70. A bank book which only shows the state of the funds does not determine the terms of an unwritten contract between a bank and a depositor as to the care of the money deposited.—Davis v. Lenawee County Sav. Bank, 53 Mich. 163.

§ 24. Public funds and depositories.

Power of national banks to accept and to give security for the deposit of public funds, see post §§ 91, 92.
Public deposits as trust deposits, see post § 45.
Right of bank to apply trust funds, see ante § 19.
Deposit of public funds as preferred claim against insolvent bank, see post § 85.
Nontransferable nature of banker's contract for deposit, see ante ¶ 29.
Constitutionality of law for designation of depositary for county funds, see Constitutional Law II, V.
Criminal misuse of public funds, see Crimes, II.

¶ 71. Under the common law there seems to be nothing which distinguishes public moneys deposited in bank from the general rule that the deposit becomes the property of the banker and he the debtor of the depositor. —Perley v. Muskegon County, 32 Mich. 131.

¶ 72. How. St. §§ 424, 427, prohibiting public officials from commingling public moneys with their own or deriving a profit therefrom or receiving a consideration for the deposit of them in any bank, are violated by depositing money received for water rates as treasurer of a city water department in his own private bank commingled with the funds of the bank.—Boards of Fire & Water Com'rs of Marquette v. Wilkinson, 119 Mich. 665.

¶ 73. A county treasurer cannot refuse to deposit public funds in a depository designated by the supervisors on the ground of want of authority in the president and cashier of the bank designated as such depository to execute, on behalf of the bank as principal, the bond given to secure the deposits when such bond is signed by the proper officers and the sureties are bound to a distinct independent liability.—Board Sup'rs Gratiot Co. v. Munson, 157 Mich. 505.

¶ 74. Under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 1189, 1190, providing for selection of a state depository, and sections 1197-1204, providing for the safe keeping of public moneys, the state treasurer may select the depositories and any number of them, not being bound in selection by the acts of the auditor general and the secretary of state, or he may decline to select any and keep the money in the treasury, but he cannot deposit them in a bank wherefrom he will receive personal benefit, direct or indirect, through his interest in the bank.—People v. Glazier, 159 Mich. 528.

¶ 75. Under Laws 1879, Act No. 393, authorizing the county treasurer and board of auditors of Wayne county to designate some bank as depository for the county funds it is their duty to make such appointment as soon as convenient after the treasurer qualifies and enters upon his duties, and without unnecessary delay.—City Savings Bank v. Huebner, 84 Mich. 391.

¶ 76. Under Laws 1879, Act No. 393, authorizing the county treasurer of Wayne county and the board of auditors to designate some bank as a depository for the county funds the treasurer and the board have an equal voice.—City Savings Bank v. Huebner, 84 Mich. 391.

¶ 77. Under Laws 1879, Act No. 393, authorizing the county treasurer and the board of auditors of Wayne county to designate some bank as depository for the county funds, such designation is valid until the expiration of the term of office of the county treasurer, and until a new designation is made by his successor and the board of auditors.—City Savings Bank v. Huebner, 84 Mich. 391.

¶ 78. Under Laws 1879, Act No. 393, authorizing the county treasurer and board of auditors of Wayne county to designate some bank as depository for the county funds, until a new designation is made it is the duty of the treasurer to deposit the county funds in the existing depository.—City Savings Bank v. Huebner, 84 Mich. 391.

§ 25. ——Bonds or security for deposits.

See also ante ¶ 73.
Power of banking partnership to obtain public deposits and give bond or security, see post ¶ 151.

¶ 79. A bond given to a county treasurer for the repayment of money deposited in a private bank, may be supported as a common law obligation though it does not conform strictly to the statute governing such bonds. —Buhrer v. Baldwin, 137 Mich. 263.

¶ 80. The fact that a contract made by a state treasurer for the deposit of funds with a bank is illegal does not prevent the state from recovering on bonds given by defendants guarantying the repayment of the funds.—People v. Bankers' Surety Co., 158 Mich. 30; Same v. Federal Union Surety Co., Id.; Same v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., Id.

¶ 81. A bond given to secure the state for funds deposited by it in a bank, provided that the surety should be liable only for the proportion of the total loss suffered which the amount of the penalty on its bond bore to the amount of the penalties of all other surety bonds. Held, that where the state's declaration alleged as the total loss a sum larger than the total penalties of all the bonds, the declaration was sufficient on demurrer, in a suit to recover the full amount of the defendant's bond, without alleging the exact total loss sustained by the state.—People v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co., 158 Mich. 35.

¶ 82. A bank selected as a depository contracted with the state treasurer to return all moneys deposited by the latter. Held, a surety on a $50,000 bond of the bank was bound for the repayment by the bank of all moneys deposited, and its liability was not confined to any specific sum deposited.—Commissioners of Banking v. Chelsea Sav. Bank, 161 Mich. 691.

¶ 83. Where a statute requires the state treasurer to take ample security for money deposited with banks, an omission on his part to do so does not diminish the obligation of a surety of a bank below the sum specified in its bond.—Commissioner of Banking v. Chelsea Sav. Bank, 161 Mich. 691.

¶ 84. In a suit on a bond, plaintiff, the state of Michigan, alleged in its declaration that the state treasurer had contracted with a certain bank to receive deposits of funds of the state of Michigan; that defendants had given bond for the repayment of funds deposited during the first term of office of the state treasurer, that funds had been deposited pursuant to the agreement; that demand had been made of the bank for repayment; and that the bank had not paid. Held, on demurrer, that these allegations set forth a good cause of action without specifying that the funds not repaid were deposited during the first, and not during a subsequent, term of office of the treasurer.—People v. Bankers' Surety Co., 158 Mich. 30; Same v. Federal Union Surety Co., Id.; Same v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., Id.

IV. SAVINGS DEPOSITS AND WITHDRAWALS.

§ 26. In general; relation of depositor and bank.

Savings bank corporations, see post IX; and see also Corporations.

By-law as part of depositor's contract with bank, see post § 28.

Savings deposit as preferred claim in insolvency, see post § 86.

Effect of placing in savings account money deposited against letter of credit, see post § 83.

Payments and deposits in building and loan associations, see Building and Loan Associations.

General savings bank laws, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 152, § 7995 et seq.

¶ 84a. Savings banks organized under the General Banking Law and having stock and stockholders are unlike those organized under the mutual system, wherein the officers and agents of the bank are the trustees of the depositors; and the relation of the depositor and the bank is that of creditor and debtor.—Ackenhausen v. People's Savings Bank, 110 Mich. 175.

§ 27. Title to deposit; joint accounts.

¶ 85. A savings bank cannot refuse to return a depositor's money to him because he deposited it in the name of somebody else.—Davis v. Lenawee County Sav. Bank, 53 Mich. 163.

¶ 86. A savings account is not shown to have been a joint account by an entry in the wife's name on the signature book with a notation of the husband's name beneath and her name only on the ledger, where the evidence as to the sources of income whence the money might have been derived show that his earnings were meagre and that some of the money was derived from rent received from her property, some from sale of joint property, and that he wrote her name in the pass book, and where there were other accounts to which her estate made no claim against her husband's estate.—Wayne County Savings Bank v. Smith, 194 Mich. 151.

§ 28. Effect on depositor of by-laws.

¶ 87. The by-laws of a savings bank organized under the General Banking Law with stockholders and directors are by-laws of the bank and do not bind the depositor unless under conditions making them part of the depositor's contract.—Ackenhausen v. People's Savings Bank, 110 Mich. 175.

§ 29. Repayments and withdrawals.

See also ante ¶¶ 85, 86.

Application of assets of savings department of insolvent bank, see post ¶ 259.

¶ 88. A savings bank by-law printed in the pass book and providing, "this institution will not be responsible for loss sustained when a book has been mislaid, stolen or lost, if, before the cashier is notified thereof, such book be paid * * * on being presented," cannot relieve the bank from the liability imposed upon it by How. St., § 3208c5, to repay all deposits to "the depositor or his lawful representative," unless the attention of the depositor is called to such by-law, and he actually or impliedly assents thereto, although the book was stolen and the money was drawn by means of forging the depositor's signature.—Ackenhausen v. People's Sav. Bank, 110 Mich. 175.

¶ 89. Comp. L. 1897, § 6117, providing that no savings bank deposit shall be repaid unless the pass book is produced "except for good cause and on assurances satisfactory to the officers of the bank," when construed in light of the provision of section 6107, making all violations of the banking act a felony, does not by virtue of the further provision of section 6117, requiring rules to be printed in the pass book, authorize insistence on a rule making the production of the pass book indispensable under all circumstances; and, accordingly, where the depositor was dead and the demand for payment is made by a duly qualified administrator several months after death and without any other demand having been made there is "good cause" to pay it to him, and on refusal he may recover without an indemnity bond. Vincent v. Port Huron Savings Bank, 147 Mich. 437, affirming judgment of lower court by equal division, four judges contending that the bank rule made a contract requiring production of the pass book at all events.

V. CERTIFICATES OF DEPOSIT, CASHIER'S CHECKS, DRAFTS, LETTERS OF CREDIT AND CIRCULATING NOTES.

§ 30. Certificates of deposit, cashier's checks and drafts.

Certificates of deposit as negotiable instruments, and the rights of parties thereto depending on the law of negotiable instruments, as well as that of bona fide takers, are treated of in Negotiable Instruments. The same treatment is given to cashier's checks and bank drafts in so far as the law of negotiable instruments is decisive of the points involved.

Indorsement of certificates of deposit as evidence of ownership, see also ante § 8.

Buying exchange as discounting, see post § 43, ¶ 181.

Certificate of deposit to cover drawing account as a loan rather than a deposit, see also post ¶ 133.

President's trust in deposit as affecting issuing bank, see also post ¶ 184.

Effect of bills drawn by illegally incorporated bank, see also post ¶ 145.

Holder of certificate of deposit as a bona fide holder, see Negotiable Instruments, XIII, A.

Evidence as to certificate being taken as payment, see Payment, II.

Possession and acts of dominion over certificate of deposit as evidence of ownership, see also Payment, II.

¶ 90. A bank issuing its certificate of deposit to its president in his name is not a trustee of the moneys merely because the president holds them on a trust to pay certain debts.—Alpena Nat. Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1.

¶ 91. Where plaintiff deposited money in defendant bank, and received certain certificates of deposit therefor, and thereafter returned such certificates to the cashier of defendant bank, whereupon the cashier gave him a receipt, and agreed to pay upon demand, the bank is liable upon demand, for the amount so received, whether or not plaintiff indorsed the certificates at the time of their surrender; and the defense that the cashier had canceled the certificates, and absconded with the money, is of no avail.—Griffin v. Marlette State Bank, 150 Mich. 499.

§ 31. Letters of credit and traveler's checks.

Deposit against letter of credit as trust fund, see also post ¶ 266.

Defacement of countersignature of traveler's check, see Alteration of Instruments, ¶ 44.

¶ 92. A letter addressed to a bank suggesting advances and stating among other things that the writers guarantee the payment of drafts drawn on them by a produce dealer is not a general letter of credit for the benefit of any party paying out money on such drafts.—Lyon v. Van Raden, 126 Mich. 259.

¶ 93. An express company had the right to refuse to pay a traveler's check which did not bear the countersign agreed upon.—Samberg v. American Exp. Co., 136 Mich. 639.

§ 32. Circulating Notes.

¶ 94. Under the charter of the Government Stock Bank, after the stocks deposited with the state treasurer for securing its circulating notes had been sold for their redemption, it was his duty forthwith to apply the proceeds for that purpose.—People ex rel. Duffield v. Holmes, 3 Mich. 544.

¶ 95. The proceeds of stocks of the Government Stock Bank deposited with the state treasurer for securing its circulating notes and sold for their redemption must be applied to that purpose and it did not vary the case that the bank had been declared insolvent and a receiver appointed, and a notice published for creditors to present and prove their claims. Circulating notes were to be first paid and did not require proof. —People ex rel. Duffield v. Holmes, 3 Mich. 544.

¶ 96. Upon the presentation of the circulating notes of a bank for redemption, the mode adopted by the officers was to take up and separate from the rest one at a time, examine it, step back to the table, pick up the requisite amount of coin, and pay over to the bill holder; and so proceed, redeeming the notes one by one, until the close of banking hours, and then refuse to redeem further for the day. The officers also tendered to the bill holders bags of coin at the sums marked thereon, but on the condition that there should be no recourse to the bank for the correction of errors, if any, but only to those from whom the bank received the coin. The bank also refused to employ more than one person to redeem its notes; and large amounts presented failed of redemption, upon the claim that the bank was unable to make further redemption during banking hours. Held, that the course of the bank officers was evasive, and tantamount to a refusal to redeem.—People ex rel. Duffield v. Whittemore, 4 Mich. 27.

¶ 97. The provision in the charter of the Government Stock Bank, that upon filing affidavit of refusal to redeem, etc., with the state treasurer, he shall thereupon give notice that the notes of said bank will be redeemed at his office, made it the duty of the treasurer to act at once. He has no right to wait for counter-affidavits from the bank, and his doing so might be treated as a refusal on his part to act.—People ex rel. Duffield v. Whittemore, 4 Mich. 27.

VI. COLLECTION AND PAYMENT OF PAPER AND CLEARINGS.

What constitutes a collection, passing credit to debtor, see also post ¶ 271.
Authority of officers to undertake collections, see post § 54.
Choosing obligor bank as agent to collect, see post §§ 36, 38.
Proceeds of collection as trust fund in insolvent bank, see post § 84.
Liability for loss or negligence, and actions for same, see post §§ 36-39.
Rights of bank taking paper on conditional deposit subject to be charged back if dishonored, see also ante ¶ 69.
Liability of depositor on uncollected paper, see ante § 17.
Withdrawal from clearing house as evidence of insolvency, see post ¶ 229.
Judicial notice of functions of bank as collection agency, see Evidence, I.
Liability of drawer upon check forwarded to drawee bank for collection, see Negotiable Instruments, VIII.
Agency in making payments through banks, see also Agency, §§ 6, 36.
Implication of agency to collect where paper is payable at the bank, see Agency, ¶ 94.

¶ 98. A bank to which a note is sent for payment upon request of its president, the indorser of the note, and which pays the same in accordance with his instructions, is estopped from asserting, as against the holder of the note, that payment was in fact made from a trust fund created and placed in the hands of the president for the purpose of paying said note and certain other obligations held by the bank, which fund had proved inadequate to discharge the indebtedness in full.—Fifth Nat. Bank v. Dunham, 109 Mich. 23.

§ 34. Title and rights in paper received for collection.

Lien of collecting bank for balance owing by forwarding bank, see post ¶ 103.
Form of indorsement as fixing title to paper received for collection, see Negotiable Instruments, VII.

¶ 99. Where paper comes from one bank to another indorsed and with directions to collect it, and there is nothing to indicate that the paper does not belong to the bank sending it, it may be regarded as the property of the bank sending it, although it was in fact deposited by the indorser in the first bank for collection.—Cody v. City Nat. Bank of Grand Rapids, 55 Mich. 379.

¶ 100. The title to commercial paper remains in one depositing in bank either indorsed "for collection," or with a definite understanding that such is his purpose.—People's State Bank v. Miller, 185 Mich. 565.

¶ 101. A bank has no right to sell a note left with it for collection.—Fuller v. Bennett, 55 Mich. 357.

§ 35. Lien by bank on collections.

Rights under general indorsement, see Negotiable Instruments, VII.

a lien in the bank's favor upon the $1,000 note.—Gibbons v. Hecox, 105 Mich. 509.

¶ 103. Where a bank sending a draft to another for collection has a running account with the collecting bank, to which account the proceeds of the draft are credited, the collecting bank has a lien on the proceeds of the draft for any balance due it on its account with the forwarding bank, unless it has notice that the latter was merely an agent for collection, or has disobeyed instructions with reference thereto.—Garrison v. Union Trust Co., 139 Mich. 392.

§ 36. Liability of bank for negligence or loss.

Reliance of drawee bank upon identification of payee by corresponding bank, see ante § 14, ¶ 39.

Liability of bank for negligence in making collection, see note, 7 N. C. C. A. 388-407.

¶ 106. A bank to whom a certificate of deposit is sent by another bank for collection, is not liable for loss resulting from the sending of the certificate direct to the drawer, where the instructions to the collecting bank justified so sending the certificate, and the collecting bank acted in good faith.—First Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Citizens Sav. Bank of Detroit, 123 Mich. 336.

¶ 107. A bank sued for not turning over, as ordered, to attorneys, a draft in its hands for collection, which it held until it had secured its own debt, cannot defend on the ground that it received the order after banking hours on Saturday, while the security was taken early Monday morning.—Finch v. Korste, 97 Mich. 20.

¶¶ 108, 109. The delay of a defendant bank in turning over to attorneys as ordered, a draft put in its hands for collection and which it held until it secured its own debt from the drawee is not excused by the fact that the draft was improperly indorsed to the bank by a collection agency with which it had been placed to be turned over to the bank.—Finch v. Karste, 97 Mich. 20.

§ 37. ——Draft with bill of lading attached.

Waiting until shipment arrives, see also ante ¶ 105.

Bills of lading as incident to draft, see also Bills of Lading.

¶ 110. A bank to whom a sight draft was forwarded for collection by a consignor with an attached bill of lading indorsed in blank, but containing no instructions to hold the bill until the draft was paid, was negligent in making delivery to an insolvent consignee upon acceptance of the draft without the draft having first been paid, and was liable to such consignor for its amount.—W. & A. McArthur Co. v. Old Second Nat. Bank of Bay City, 122 Mich. 223.

¶ 112. A bank to which a draft was sent for collection with a bill of lading attached, and which delivered the bill of lading upon acceptance of the draft without having received payment, was liable to the sender upon the insolvency of the consignee before payment.—W. & A. McArthur Co. v. Old Second Nat. Bank of Bay City, 122 Mich. 223.

§ 38. ——For default of corresponding bank.

Forwarding to bank which is liable, see also ante ¶ 105.

Effect of instructions to send to drawer bank, see also post, ¶ 121.

¶ 113. Where a bank is employed to collect foreign drafts and is left to select its own agents, it is responsible for the failure or dishonesty of its correspondent, a bank selected by itself, to whom the draft had been paid by the drawee.—Simpson v. Waldby, 63 Mich. 439.

¶ 114. The bank upon which a check is drawn is not a suitable agent for its collection.—Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co. v. Fincher, 129 Mich. 687.

¶ 115. A bank holding collaterals under an agency to collect them and apply the proceeds to the payment of the principal obligation is liable for the act of its collecting agent in making a collection and misappropriation of the proceeds, substituting forged notes in exchange for those collected.—First National Bank v. Walker, 115 Mich. 434.

¶ 116. In an action against a bank for money received to plaintiff's credit, proof that the defendant bank was employed to collect certain drafts, that the money was paid to its correspondent, a bank in the town where the drawee lived, by a New York draft payable to the defendant, devolves upon the defendant a burden thereupon to show that, through no fault or want of diligence on its part, the draft was not paid.—Simpson v. Waldby, 63 Mich. 439.

Negligence of collecting bank in sending draft or check directly to drawee bank for payment, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 722-735.

Burden of proof of negligence, see also ante ¶ 116.

¶ 118. A declaration alleging that a bank received a draft for collection and was not diligent in collecting or in turning over the draft to a designated attorney, and that it retained possession of the draft until the debtor became insolvent, so that it "became and was" impossible to collect and "by reason of the carelessness, negligence," etc., of defendants plaintiffs "have lost all opportunity to collect," sufficiently shows loss resulting from the alleged negligence.—Finch v. Karste, 97 Mich. 20.

¶ 119. The jury may consider whether a drawee would have paid a draft if promptly presented where defendant bank with whom it had been placed for collection delays in turning it over to attorneys, according to instructions, until it has secured a debt of its own from the drawee and so made the collection of the draft impossible.—Finch v. Karste, 97 Mich. 20.

§ 40. Rights and liabilities between the banks.

Liability of forwarding bank for acts or neglect of correspondent bank, see ante § 38.

Lien of collecting bank upon collections, see ante § 35.

Proceeds or credit in hands of correspondent as trust for forwarding bank, see post § 84.

Remittance by draft, effect to create trust in account with drawer, see also post ¶ 273.

¶ 120. A bank that is another bank's agent for the collection of a draft against one of its own depositors cannot bind its principal by treating the draft, when accepted, as payment, the agency being to collect the money, not to make an arrangement whereby it should assume the debt.—Midland State Bank v. Byrne, 97 Mich. 178.

¶ 121. In an action by one bank against another for negligence resulting in loss of the amount of a certificate of deposit sent by plaintiff to defendant for collection, the rule that in the absence of instructions to do so, it is negligence to send the collection direct to the drawer and that such negligence makes the sender liable for resulting loss had no application, where under the instructions of plaintiff, the defendant was to send the certificate directly to the drawer, a third bank in another town, for collection.—First Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Citizens Sav. Bank of Detroit, 123 Mich. 336.

VII. FORGED AND ALTERED PAPER.

§ 41. In general; liability of bank for cashing or paying.

General duty in paying out deposits, see ante § 13.

Payment of savings deposit on presentment of stolen bank book with forged signature, see ante § 28, ¶ 88.

Liability of forwarding bank for substitution of forged paper for collections by corresponding bank, see ante ¶ 115.

Alteration of instruments and effect thereof in general, see Alteration of Instruments.

Defacement of countersignature of traveler's check, see Alteration of Instruments, ¶ 44.

Statute regulating liability on payment of forged paper, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8041.

¶ 122. Where a bank cashes a draft upon which the payee's name has been forged, prima facie the loss falls on the bank, the forgery being a nullity.—Brown v. People's Nat. Bank, 170 Mich. 416.

¶ 123. 2 Comp. L. 1897, section 4870, applies only to cases where the drawer knowingly draws a check to the order of a fictitious payee, and affords no protection to a bank paying the check, from which the name of the original payee had been erased, and the name of a fictitious payee or of a real payee not intended by the drawer, inserted.—Harrison v. [illegible] Nat. Bank, 153 Mich. 73.

¶ 124. Where a payee named in a warrant is a fictitious person, an indorsement in the name of such fictitious person is in effect a forgery.—Harmon v. Old Detroit Nat. Bank, 153 Mich. 73.

¶ 125. The time and place of a forgery, as fixing the liability of a bank making payment of the forged order, is immaterial, unless the forgery is committed under such circumstances as to show negligence on the part of the drawer.—Harmon v. Old Detroit Nat. Bank, 153 Mich. 73.

§ 42. Duty of depositor to inform bank; estoppel.

Negligence of depositor as affecting bank's liability to him for payment of check forged in signature or indorsement, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 812-831.

¶ 126. Plaintiff's attorney forged her indorsement to a draft in which plaintiff was payee, and cashed same June 4, 1907. Defendant bank had in its possession sufficient personal property belonging to the attorney up to June 27, 1908, to enable it to recover on the forged instrument. Demand was first made on the bank and notice of the forgery given August 4, 1909. In May, 1907, plaintiff receipted to the administrator for the money. June 1, 1908, she was advised by letter from her brother of the attorney's dishonesty and that he had drawn her money from a bank, but was not specifically advised as to the forgery. Following her brother's suggestion, she left the whole matter to him. The brother made no demand on the bank but started criminal proceedings against the forger. Held, plaintiff was estopped from recovery against the bank by her failure to give it seasonable notice of the forgery.—Brown v. People's Nat. Bank, 170 Mich. 416.

¶ 127. Estoppel arises against the payee of a draft which has been cashed by a bank upon a forged indorsement, where the payee, with knowledge of the forgery, fails to give notice until an opportunity of recovery on the forged instrument, which would have been available if prompt notification had been given, is lost to the bank.—Brown v. People's Nat. Bank, 170 Mich. 416.

¶ 128. Where a plaintiff is informed by her brother that her name as payee to a draft has been forged and the money paid to the forger by the bank, and leaves it to the brother to collect the money from the forger, the brother is such an agent as to estop plaintiff from recovering against the bank by his failure to give it seasonable notice of the forgery.—Brown v. People's Nat. Bank, 170 Mich. 416.

VIII. LOANS AND DISCOUNTS, TRUSTS AND FISCAL OPERATIONS.

§ 43. Loans and discounts in general.

Power of national bank to loan and discount money, see post § 93.

Authority of officers in discounting, see post §§ 54-56.

Liability to persons buying stock on strength of fraudulent report of loans and discounts, see post § 64.

Discounting bank as bona fide purchaser, see Negotiable Instruments, XIII, A.

Discount on recommendation of officer as notice of equities, see Negotiable Instruments, XIII, A.

¶ 129. A loan or discount is an advance of money to be repaid at a future day. When the interest is paid in advance it is a discount; but when it is to be paid at the expiration of the credit it is a loan. A mortgage for a pre-existing debt is neither a loan nor a discount.—Bailey v. Murphy, W. 424.

¶ 130. A bank may take a mortgage with seven per cent. interest for a debt due to it, notwithstanding it is prohibited by its charter from taking more than six per cent. in advance of its loans and discounts.—Bailey v. Murphy, W. 424.

¶ 131. The buying of exchange by a bank is, in effect, discounting paper.—People ex rel. Platt v. Oakland County Bank, 1 D. 282.

¶ 132. Where a banking institution had power to lend deposits on the public stock of the state or the United States on bond and mortgage or "upon any other securities which should be deemed by the board of directors ample," it was held that it was not limited to the first-mentioned securities, but could discount commercial paper.—Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 Mich. 430.

¶ 133. A transaction whereby a bank holds certificates of deposit issued to it by another bank, permitting it to draw its drafts upon it to the amount represented by the certificates without any deposit of money, is not a deposit, but a mere loan, within the meaning of How. St., § 3208e5, imposing liability upon stockholders of a bank for the benefit of depositors, as such statute not intended to compel the stockholders to meet the ordinary debts of the bank.—State Sav. Bank of Detroit, v. Foster, 118 Mich. 268.

or were in reality loans, though such testimony of itself did not invalidate plaintiff's claim.—Detroit Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 145 Mich. 656.

§ 44. Rediscounts.

Delegated power to make rediscounts, see post § 57.

Rediscount of renewed paper by bona fide holders, see Negotiable Instruments, XIII, A.

¶ 135. A bank has power to rediscount its paper.—Davenport v. Stone, 104 Mich. 521.

¶ 136. Where a bank accepts from a debtor a renewal note with the same indorser, and said note is rediscounted for the bank under an arrangement with third parties for the rediscounting of its paper, and the proceeds are received by the bank, the nonsurrender by the bank of the old note, and its failure to enter the new note on its books, will not prevent the new note from being regarded as rediscounted paper. —Davenport v. Stone, 104 Mich. 521.

¶ 137. In response to a letter from plaintiff bank for "some good paper with your bank indorsement" for investment of surplus funds, defendant bank sent to plaintiff, "for discount and returns," a note payable at defendant bank to the order of third parties, indorsed by them in blank, and bearing defendant's guaranty of payment. Held, that as the transaction was in accordance with defendant's usual method of rediscounting paper, the note would be treated as paper rediscounted by the bank, although no record was made upon the bank books, except to credit the maker of the note with the proceeds thereof, less a charge made by the bank.—First Nat. Bank v. Stone, 106 Mich. 367.

§ 45. Trusts and trust funds.

Effect of Federal Reserve Act empowering national banks to act as trustees, see post § 90, ¶ 284.

Application of trust deposit by bank, see ante § 19.

President's trust as affecting bank, see also post ¶ 184.

General statutes relating to Trust, Deposit and Security Companies, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 153.

¶ 138. Under Pub. Acts 1875, Act No. 131, providing for the safe keeping of public moneys, money deposited by the treasurer of a city board of fire and water commissioners in his own bank, constituted a trust fund, although the board seemed to have been content to treat the funds as a deposit in the bank.—Board of Fire & Water Com'rs of Marquette v. Wilkinson, 119 Mich. 655.

¶ 139. Moneys deposited by a City Board of Education and a Library Commission in a bank whose cashier was treasurer of the board and ex-officio treasurer of the commission, with the knowledge of the board and under an agreement for the payment of interest by the bank on daily balances, were not a trust fund in the first instance under Comp. L. 1897, § 1197 et seq., forbidding public officers from commingling public funds with their own, and from using such moneys other than as provided by law, or for their private use, or for loaning to any person, corporation or firm.—Board of Education of Detroit v. Union Trust Co., 136 Mich. 454.

¶ 140. Funds deposited in a bank by the clerk or register in chancery in compliance with Comp. L. 1897, § 420, cannot be regarded as a special deposit and trust fund as against the bank's general creditors.—Retan v. Union Trust Co., 134 Mich. 1.

§ 46. Investments and fiscal agencies.

Validity of Blue Sky Law as affecting interstate commerce, see Commerce.

Constitutionality of Blue Sky Law, see Constitutional Law; Commerce.

Regulation of corporations engaged in investing and selling investments, see also Corporations, XXV.

For regulation of the business of selling stocks, bonds and securities under the Blue Sky Law, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 230.

Statutes regulating tontine, bond, certificate, and investment companies, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 154.

IX. BANKS AND BANKING, TRUST OR MONEYED CORPORATIONS.

A. IN GENERAL; PRIVATE BANKS AND STATE BANKING CORPORATIONS.

[Note. In so far as it involves the general law of corporations applied to banking corporations, the matter is excluded from this topic and is treated in Corporations, which see. Only such matters as are peculiar to banking corporations and are not governed by general law are retained here.]

For the general law, excepting only matters peculiar to banking corporations, see generally Corporations.

General law of procedure and pleading in actions and suits by or against banking corporations, see Corporations, XIX; Equity; Pleading; Receivers; and other specific topics.

§ 47. Corporations; reorganization, consolidation and succession.

Many, or perhaps most, of the questions of corporation law involving banks contain nothing essentially distinctive from corporations in general. For that reason such matters are treated in Corporations, and should be there consulted.

Banking franchises and regulation in general, see ante I.
Organization and existence of national banks, see post § 90.
Nature of mutual savings banks, see also ante ¶ 84a.
Validity of by-laws, see also post ¶ 148.
Transfer of deposit to successor as discharging original bank, see also ante ¶ 30.
Generally as to succession of corporations, see Corporations, XXII.
Validity of incorporation acts passed by less than two-thirds vote of legislature, see Statutes, V.
Taxation of banks, bank corporations, and shares, see generally Taxes.
Injunction to protect bank name, see Injunctions, II, F.
See General Banking Laws, Comp. L. 1915, chap. 152.

¶ 141. Where a national bank holding defendant's written authorization to a former copartner of his to use the name of their dissolved firm in renewing indorsed paper, was reorganized under How. St., § 3208 b 6, as a state bank, such authority inured to the benefit of the latter, and authorized the indorsement of said firm name upon a renewal note taken by said state bank for the unpaid part of a note held by the national bank when the authority was given.—First Commercial Bank v. Talbert, 103 Mich. 625.

¶ 142. Where one banking institution is organized as successor of another whose securities are assigned to it in writing, it can enforce their payment as against parties liable thereon, even though the assignor might have rights which it did not consider of enough importance to ask the court to protect.—Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 Mich. 430.

§ 48. Invalid and irregular organizations.

Effect of invalid organization upon stockholders' and directors' liability to creditors, see post § 65.
De facto and imperfect corporations generally, see Corporations, V.
Liability of incorporators and stockholders, see generally Corporations, VI, XXIV, E.

¶ 143. The general banking law of 1837, being unconstitutional and invalid in so far as it attempts to confer corporate powers, no foreclosure can be maintained upon a mortgage executed to a bank organized under its provisions.—Hurlbut v. Britain, 2 D. 191.

¶ 144. A mortgage executed to a bank organized under the unconstitutional law of 1837 cannot be foreclosed.—Hurlbut v. Britain, 2 D. 191.

¶ 145. Quære, whether a bill of exchange, invalid if issued by an incorporated bank, drawn by an association organized under the general banking law, acting as a corporation but not one, could be treated as legal and valid, and an action maintained upon it against the acceptors.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan v. Troy City Bank, 1 D. 457.

For meetings and elections held by corporations generally, see also Corporations IX.

¶ 146. Comp. L. 1897, § 6101, providing that in elections for directors of banks, each share shall entitle its holder to one vote for each director, repeals if necessary the provision of the minority stockholder's cumulative voting act, Comp. L. 1897, § 8553, in so far as it ever applied to banks.—Attorney General ex rel. Hurley v Bridgman, 134 Mich. 379.

§ 50. ——Appointment and term of cashier and officers.

¶ 147. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 6093, How. 2nd Ed., § 6399, giving bank directors power to appoint a cashier and dismiss him at pleasure, the cashier serves at the pleasure of the board, and it is immaterial that the directors are chosen annually.—Webster v. Jossman, 199 Mich. 98.

¶ 148. A by-law of a saving bank fixing the term of the cashier different from the provision of Comp. Laws 1897, § 6093, How. 2nd Ed., § 6399, making his terms of service subject to the pleasure of the board of directors, is ultra vires and void.—Webster v. Jossman, 199 Mich. 98.

§ 51. Capital, shares and surplus.

Except as the statutes have enacted rules of specific application to banking corporations, the decisions on capital and shares, and subscriptions thereto and dividends, are treated in Corporations, which topic should be consulted.
Cross-bill to enforce lien on bill to compel transfer, see post § 71, ¶ 224.
Application of surplus in insolvency, right of stockholders and creditors, see post ¶ 209.
Stockholders as creditors for share of surplus, see Corporations, XXIV, C.
Rights of bona fide takers of stock in general, see Corporations, XXIV, B.
Estoppel to question transfer, see Corporations, XXIV, B.
Effect of insolvency upon validity of transfer of bank stock, see Corporations, XXIV, B.
Suits to rescind stock purchases and transfers, see generally Corporations, XXIV, B: Rescission and Cancellation.

Necessary parties to suit against insolvent bank for rescission of stock purchase, see Rescission and Cancellation, VI.
Duty and obligation of paying taxes upon shares of stock, see Taxes, IX.

¶ 149. Except as a surplus fund is required by the law, the surplus of a bank is a fund created and augmented for convenience and profit, and, like the capital, is payable out of the assets of the bank after the creditors have been paid in full.—Wedemeyer v. Hindelang, 161 Mich. 600.

§ 52. Powers and place of business.

Of savings banks, see post § 53.
Powers of national banks, see post §§ 91-93.
Discounting and rediscounting and rate of interest chargeable, see ante §§ 43, 44.
Bank as depositor in other banks, see ante § 8.
See generally, Corporations, III, XI-XIV.
Ultra vires and illegal contracts by corporations generally, see Corporations, XIV.

¶ 149a. The establishment by a bank of an agency for the transaction of banking business at another place than that specified in the charter is a violation of the charter. Attorney General v. Oakland County Bank, W. 90; People ex rel. Platt v. Oakland County Bank, 1 D. 282.

¶ 149b. Where a bank has power, under its charter, to take and hold lands for the convenient transaction of its business and to secure debts, but for no other purpose, it has no right to purchase lands for the purpose of selling them again; and the court of chancery will not assist it in enforcing a contract made with that intent.—Bank of Michigan v. Niles, W. 99; Bank of Michigan v. Niles, 1 D. 401.

¶ 150. Under How. St., § 3208b, providing that it shall be lawful for banks to purchase, hold, and convey real estate mortgaged to them in good faith, and such as they shall purchase at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgage foreclosures under securities held by them, a bank can foreclose a mortgage by advertisement.—Gage v. Sanborn, 106 Mich. 269.

¶ 151. The obtaining of deposits of public money deposited by a township treasurer and the signing of the official bond of such treasurer in consideration thereof is within the scope of the business of a banking partnership.—Township of Wexford v. Seeley, 196 Mich. 634.

¶ 152. Semble, that a bank may lawfully have an agency to redeem its bills at a place other than that in which it is located by the charter.—People ex rel. Platt v. Oakland County Bank, 1 D. 282.

Effect of by-laws upon depositor in savings bank, see ante § 28.
Validity of by-laws fixing term of cashier, see ante ¶ 148.

¶ 153. A savings bank is a creature of the statute, and has the powers expressly granted to it, and such as are fairly incidental thereto.—Webster v. Jossman, 199 Mich. 98.

§ 54. Directors, officers and agents; authority.

Of president or cashier as such, see post §§ 55, 56.
Appointment and term, see ante § 50.
Power of assignment for creditors, see post § 73.
Authority to execute bond to secure public deposits, see also ante ¶ 73.
Delegation to cashier, see post § 57.
Liability to bank for making bad loans, see post § 63.
Director's knowledge as notice to bank, see post § 59.
Of corporations generally, including banking corporations when not peculiarly involving banking law, see Corporations, XVII.
Compensation of directors and officers of corporation, see Corporations, XVII, F.
Authority of agents in general, see Agency.

¶ 154. The officers of a bank cannot consent to any arrangement by which the security of the bank on paper due to it will be impaired.—Gallery v. National Exch. Bank of Albion, 41 Mich. 169.

¶ 155. It is fairly within the scope of the powers of the officers of a bank to receive for collection, from an indorser of a note due to the bank, securities which the maker has turned out to him, and to agree to apply the moneys on the note when collected. And if they fail to make the application equity will compel it.—Wales v. Bank of Michigan, H. 308.

¶ 156. A transfer, by way of security, of a portion of the effects of a bank, for the purpose of enabling it to continue business, is within the powers of the directors.—Bank Com'rs v. Bank of Prest, H. 106.

Admissions by or notice to, see post §§ 58, 59.
Individual or official nature of act, see post § 60.

¶ 157. Whether a general authority in a bank president to make discounts could empower him to make an arrangement under which the bank would surrender securities on receiving others, which it was at the same time agreed should be mere nullities so far as the sureties were concerned, quære.—First Nat. Bank of Sturgis v. Bennett, 33 Mich. 520.

¶ 158. The directors of a bank, in the presence of one who had agreed to purchase property owned by the bank, authorized the president to execute to such purchaser a bond of indemnity against any legal claim or lien which a specified company might have upon the property. The bond given by the president with the purchaser's consent was conditioned upon the bank's obtaining from the company a good and sufficient written lease. The agreed bond was not given. The lease procured was not satisfactory to the purchaser, and he declined to accept it, and refused to pay the amount due on a purchase money mortgage until the condition of the bond should be satisfied. Held, on foreclosure of the mortgage, that the giving of the bond conditioned for the procuring of a lease was unauthorized, and did not bind the bank.—Sturgis Nat. Bank v. Levanseler, 115 Mich. 372.

¶ 159. A president and director of a bank who takes active part in the bank's affairs and in advising on discounts, and who is also a broker of commercial paper must not take undue advantage; and where the evidence shows that he sold the note of an insolvent party to the bank the sale may be rescinded by the bank.—Hicks v. Steel, 126 Mich. 408.

Term and election, see ante § 50.
Authority to make admissions or receive notice, see post §§ 58, 59.
Individual or official nature of act, see post § 60.
Ratification by bank, see post § 61.
Liability of bank for certificate of deposit or proceeds appropriated by cashier, see also ante ¶ 91.
General law of agency, see Agency.
Liability of cashier on ultra vires contract, see also Agency, ¶ 465.

¶ 160. Usually, the authority of the cashier of a bank is a limited authority, and a party seeking to show a release by the cashier from liability upon commercial paper held by the bank, except in the ordinary course, must show that the cashier had authority from the directorate, or that the act had been ratified or acquiesced in by the bank. Such authority, however, may be shown expressly or by necessary implication, or it may be established by the particular usage practice, or mode of doing business of the bank; as by allowing the cashier to exercise general authority for a considerable time.—Wing v. Commercial & Sav. Bank, 103 Mich. 565.

¶ 161. The general powers of the cashier of a bank being defined and limited by law, persons dealing with the bank are presumed to know their extent.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan v. Troy City Bank, 1 D. 457.

¶ 162. The rules of law governing national banks must be presumed to be known by the cashiers of such banks so that in giving an indemnity bond a cashier cannot be presumed to intend binding the bank.—Knickerbocker v. Wilcox, 83 Mich. 200.

¶ 163. The extent of the general powers of the cashier of a bank is a question of law and not of fact; and a charge is erroneous which refers it to the jury to determine whether a cashier, as such, had power to accept certain bills for the bank.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan v. Troy City Bank, 1 D. 457.

¶ 164. A cashier's authority to execute a contract in the bank's behalf is shown by evidence that the bank's attorney, one of the directors, having been consulted, approved the contract, and that the cashier's acts in similar transactions were acquiesced in, and by his own testimony that the act in question was approved by the directors.—Whitney v. Foster, 117 Mich. 643.

¶ 165. The cashier, in the absence of proof to the contrary, will be presumed to have authority to turn out the notes and assets of the bank in payment of its indebtedness. —Kimball v. Cleveland, 4 Mich. 606; Peninsular Bank v. Hanmer, 14 Mich. 208.

¶ 166. Whether the cashier's general power to apply the assets of the bank in payment of its indebtedness includes also a power to guaranty their collection or availability, quære.—Peninsular Bank v. Hanmer, 14 Mich. 208.

¶ 167. The cashier of a bank is presumptively authorized to represent the bank in an action on a promissory note indorsed in blank and alleged to be owned by the bank.—Battersbee v. Calkins, 128 Mich. 569.

¶ 168. The cashier of a bank has no power to accept bills of exchange on behalf of the bank for the accommodation, merely, of the drawers; and the holder, with notice of bills so accepted, cannot recover against the bank. —Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan v. Troy City Bank, 1 D. 457.

¶ 169. Plaintiff bank sued on defendant's note. Defendant set up that plaintiff's cashier had compromised the note with him by accepting certain bonds in payment of it. The evidence showed that plaintiff bank had a discount committee which regularly met to pass on loans. There was no evidence that the cashier was expressly given special powers or that the bank pursued any course of business which would warrant the belief that he had such powers. Held, in a suit on the note, that the alleged compromise made by the cashier was beyond his authority, and the court should have directed a verdict for plaintiff.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Clancy, 163 Mich. 586.

¶ 170. A contract was entered into by the cashier in behalf of a bank, by which security was given by a debtor, on long time, to a creditor, in the interest and on the motion and arrangement of the cashier, who, in order to procure the assent of the creditor, made and delivered a bond of indemnity against a prior mortgage on the property covered by the collateral security. The bank received the benefit of this transaction, and defended the creditor against a suit to foreclose this prior mortgage. Held, that the bank could not dispute the cashier's authority to execute the contract of indemnity.—Peninsular Bank v. Hanmer, 14 Mich. 208.

Delegation by directors of power to cashier to lease liability on commercial paper, see ante ¶ 160.

By agents in general, see Agency, § 29.

¶ 171. Plaintiffs, who had an oral arrangement with a bank to rediscount its paper, at the request of the cashier, to whom the directors had given the entire management of the bank, rediscounted a note in the due course of business, and without any notice or reason to believe that the cashier had not full authority. Held, that the directors had authority to rediscount the note, and that the exercise by the cashier of such authority is binding upon them, even though the occasion was not extraordinary or emergent.—Davenport v. Stone, 104 Mich. 521.

¶ 172. A bank the directors of which have for several years intrusted the entire management to the cashier is liable upon the latter's indorsement in its behalf of paper negotiated by him for rediscount as the property of the bank in the usual course of the business.—First Nat. Bank v. Stone, 106 Mich. 367.

¶ 173. A bank cashier, by his declarations that the bank has no lien upon the stock of a shareholder, estops the bank, as against one who relies thereon to his detriment, from asserting a lien on the stock for an indebtedness then due it, notwithstanding that, under How. St., § 3208a8, a transfer upon the books of the bank can be made only by the consent of the directors, when the holder is indebted to it on matured paper.—Oakland County Savings Bank v. State Bank, 113 Mich. 284.

¶ 174. A bank cashier's statement, in answer to inquiry, that his bank has no lien on a shareholder's stock, estops the bank from asserting, as against one who to his detriment relies upon such statement, a lien on the stock for an indebtedness then due.—Oakland County Sav. Bank v. State Bank, 113 Mich. 284.

§ 59. ——Notice to bank through officers.

General rule as to notice through agents, see Agency, II, E.

Notice of equities to bank through individual knowledge of officer, see also Negotiable Instruments, XIII, A.

¶ 174a. A bank is not charged with knowledge of the character of negotiable paper by the mere fact that it discounts it on the recommendation of a director, if the latter does not control its discretion or discount the paper himself as an officer or agent of the bank.—Shaw v. Clark, 49 Mich. 384.

¶ 175. Where a bank is a corporation consisting of a number of branches, and the resident manager of each branch, though keeping its business distinct, is treated as an agent of the entire corporation, and drafts on the bank are indorsed by one branch to another, so that the manager of the indorsee branch or his subordinates sees to their presentation, an acceptor dealing with a manager may fairly infer that he is the proper person to be notified of anything affecting the acceptor's responsibility, if he has no notice or knowledge to the contrary.—Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Coumbe, 47 Mich. 358.

¶ 176. A bank president who persuaded the cashier not to disclose some of his acts and directions to the directors can claim nothing because of the cashier's knowledge; that officer's silence might, under such circumstances, make him accessory to the fraud, but could not tend to excuse the principal.—First Nat. Bank of Sturgis v. Reed, 36 Mich. 263.

¶ 177. The knowledge of the cashier of a bank that certain notes discounted by it for a corporation of which the cashier was president were without consideration, is not chargeable to the bank, in an action to recover from the maker of the notes.—People's Sav. Bank of West Bay City v. Hine, 131 Mich. 181.

¶ 178. An action by a bank payee against an accommodation maker of one note and indorser of another cannot be defeated by showing misrepresentation and fraud on the part of the cashier who is known to the defendant to be the principal debtor; the knowledge of the cashier cannot be imputed to the bank where his interests are adverse.—State Sav. Bank of Ionia v. Montgomery, 126 Mich. 327.

§ 60. Individual or official nature of act.

Indemnity bond given by the cashier of a national bank, see also ante ¶ 162.

In so far as governed by general corporation law, see Corporations, XV.

Assignment and transfer or execution of instrument in officer's name, see Corporations, XV.

Effect of use of name of officer in signing, see Execution of Instruments, II; and see also Negotiable Instruments, II.

Bank or officer as proper plaintiff in action on paper running in officer's name, see Negotiable Instruments, XIV.

¶ 179. A guaranty against loss or liability for signing as sureties, given by a bank president in his own name and without authority from the directors, to those whom he had solicited so to sign a note given to the bank to retire a prior note held by it against their principal, is the president's individual contract and does not bind the bank.—First Nat. Bank of Sturgis v. Bennett, 33 Mich. 520.

¶ 180. A written undertaking by the cashier of a national bank to save harmless one who should sign a replevin bond for customers of the bank was held to render him individually liable, such an undertaking being ultra vires for the bank, and not clearly appearing on its face to have been intended as the bank's undertaking.—Knickerbocker v. Wilcox, 83 Mich. 200.

¶ 181. Under an agreement complainant corporation mortgaged its property to a trust company to secure an issue of bonds, which were left in the mortgagee's possession, to be delivered to the defendant bank's cashier, for sale, on his demand, the proceeds to be credited to complainant's account at the bank. Part of the bonds had been sold and credit given, when, in the cashier's absence, complainant was notified that certain of its paper was due. An agreement was thereupon made with the bank, through the assistant cashier that credit should be extended until the cashier's return, upon the condition that the remainder of the bonds should be held by the bank as collateral security, complainant thereupon giving a note reciting that it was secured by said bonds, and stating by indorsement that it was given for the notes then due. Upon the cashier's return a renewal of those notes and surrender of the other was provided for, complainant consenting that the bank should hold the bonds as collateral for all of its indebtedness. The cashier, after obtaining the bonds from the mortgagee, and depositing them in the vaults of the bank, sought to pledge them to the bank as security for his own debt. Held, that the bonds were received by the cashier in his official capacity, as collateral to complainant's indebtedness, and that they should so be treated by the bank.—Detroit Motor Co. v. Third Nat. Bank, 111 Mich. 407.

¶ 182. A bank being prohibited under Comp. L. 1897, § 6093, subd. 7, from selling stock as part of its legitimate business, it could not be held liable in trover for the conversion of shares of stock by its cashier; and where the testimony showed that the transaction in question was the individual transaction of such cashier it was proper to direct a verdict for the bank.—Preston v. Marquette County Sav. Bank, 122 Mich. 696.

¶ 183. A cashier's act in charging to an irresponsible borrower money lent to him by the bank president's order does not necessarily fix the transaction as a loan by the bank; for the bank, if it did not ratify or acquiesce in it, could repudiate it as a dealing with the nominal borrower and insist on repayment by the president.—First Nat. Bank of Sturgis v. Reed, 36 Mich. 263.

¶ 184. A bank not connected with the trust property cannot be held as trustee for money collected by its president and manager as trustee for the benefit of the creditors of a maker of notes, which money was paid into the bank on a certificate of deposit in the president's name and made applicable to payment of the notes.—Alpena Nat. Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1.

Customary ratifications of similar acts as evidence of cashier's authority, see ante ¶ 164.

Ratification of one officer's act by another officer, see also ante ¶ 183.

Ratification of bad loans made by bank officers, see also post § 63.

Of acts of agents in general, see Agency, II, C.

Ratification and estoppel to question unauthorized doings of corporation officials generally, see Corporations, XVII, D.

Estoppel to follow trust funds where bank officer acts as trustee, see Trusts, XIII.

¶ 185. Where the directors of a bank intrust its entire management to the cashier, neither the bank nor its receiver can be heard to deny the authority of the cashier to do any of those acts which the bank or its directors might lawfully authorize the cashier to perform.—Davenport v. Stone, 104 Mich. 521.

¶ 186. The effect to be given to the long silence of bank directors after a charge was entered upon the bank books, against a nominal borrower who was supposed to be irresponsible, is one of ratification, and should be submitted to a jury as such.—First Nat. Bank of Sturgis v. Reed, 36 Mich. 263.

¶ 187. Upon the facts of a particular case a bank was held to be estopped from repudiating its cashier's agreement to release complainant from liability on his note to the bank, and such note is held to have been paid.—Wing v. Commercial & Sav. Bank, 103 Mich. 565.

§ 62. Liability of officers to bank or shareholders.

Officers in mutual savings banks, distinguished, see also ante ¶ 84a.

Rights and liabilities of officers and agents generally to corporations, see Corporations, XVII, F.

Bill by stockholders on refusal of receiver to sue, see Corporations, XXIV, F.

¶ 188. A bank president is personally liable to the bank for moneys paid out by the cashier under his directions and without security to one who is supposed to be irresponsible, but with whom the president is interested in the business for which the money was obtained, such payments being kept from the knowledge of the directors.—First Nat. Bank of Sturgis v. Reed, 36 Mich. 263.

§ 63. ——For negligence in making loans.

Of national bank director for making excessive loan, see post § 93.

Officer's scope of authority in transferring property, making loans and giving and accepting security, see ante §§ 54-56.

¶ 189. In an action by a bank against its president for negligence in loaning the bank's funds, the burden of proof is on the bank to show that the loans were not approved or ratified by the board of directors.—Commercial Bank of Bay City v. Chatfield, 127 Mich. 407.

¶ 191. In an action by a bank against its president for negligence in loaning the bank's funds, it is not erroneous to admit testimony that the loans in question were not read off at the meetings of the directors and not reported to the board by the committee appointed to examine the paper of the bank; as this testimony bears on the question of approval or ratification by the directors.—Commercial Bank of Bay City v. Chatfield, 127 Mich. 407.

¶ 192. In an action by a bank against its president for negligence in loaning the bank's funds, the fact that the loans were read in the meeting of directors and approved in the usual way, will not prevent recovery where the directors relied upon a false statement that they were secured by sufficient collateral in the hands of the president and the president sat by without correcting the impression.—Commercial Bank of Bay City v. Chatfield, 127 Mich. 407.

¶ 194. An instruction, in an action by a bank against a director for negligence in permitting loans of money to a cashier on inadequate security, which states that the director is not liable if he acted in good faith, believing that the cashier would pay the note, and was fairly responsible for it, is erroneous, the director being liable for his negligence.—Commercial Bank of Bay City v. Chatfield, 121 Mich. 641.

¶ 196. Requested instructions charging a director of a bank with fidelity and prudence such as a careful man would exercise in his own affairs of like magnitude and importance, and also requiring him to exercise such degree of supervision and diligence as the situation and nature of the business of the bank required, and as a prudent and careful man ought to do for the protection of the interests of others intrusted to his charge, being liable for a failure to do so resulting in loss to the bank, is properly refused where a bank seeks to recover from the director for negligence in permitting loans to a cashier on inadequate security, as a claim of the director that the loans came to the knowledge of other directors and were ratified by them is ignored.—Commercial Bank of Bay City v. Chatfield, 121 Mich. 641.

§ 64. Liability for fraud on stockholders or buyers.

Pleading fraud to avoid liability as stockholder for debts, see post ¶¶ 216, 217.

Remedies of stockholders generally for fraud, see Corporations, XXIV.

Right of purchaser of national bank stock to rely upon truth of report to the Comptroller, see Fraud, II.

Remedy of purchaser of bank or bank stock for fraudulent representations, see Fraud III, A.

Diligence in rescinding fraudulent purchase from bank official, see Rescission and Cancellation, I.

¶ 197. Directors of a bank are bound to exercise that degree of care in the business affairs of the bank that ordinarily prudent and careful men would exercise in the affairs of like importance. The liability of the directors in a case against bank directors for damages sustained by the purchase of stock in their bank in reliance on official reports as to its financial condition is independent of the national banking act and is derived from the principles of common law.—Smalley v. McGraw, 148 Mich. 384.

¶ 198. Where the directors of a bank in signing a report as to the financial condition of the bank knew, or by the exercise of ordinary diligence in the discharge of their duties would have known prior to signing such report, that the item "Loans and Discounts" contained paper worth much less than its face value, which would materially affect the value of its stock, they are individually liable to the purchaser of the stock who relied in good faith upon the report as stating the true financial condition of the bank.—Smalley v. McGraw, 148 Mich. 384.

¶ 199a. Fraudulent representations by the directors of a bank inducing the purchase of stock is not proved, in an action against such bank for such fraud, where the evidence showed that the plaintiff was induced to purchase such stock by the commissioner's report of such bank, summarized from the statement of the bank's officers, and that in such report, through some unaccountable oversight, such commissioner had treated as real estate such items in the statement as, "Unadjusted errors in loans and discounts," "Unadjusted errors in stocks, bonds and mortgages," "Unadjusted errors in cash paid," "Unadjusted errors in real estate," etc.; since such statement of the directors rightly understood showed an impairment of the bank's capital, and such directors were not responsible for the error of the commissioner.—Penfold v. Charlevoix Sav. Bank, 140 Mich. 126.

The liabilities of officers and stockholders of banks may be either that of corporations generally, in which case it has been treated in Corporations, XVII, XXIV, or may be a liability peculiar to banking corporations. Their liabilities under the banking laws, including the "double" liability to depositors or others, is here treated.

Estoppel to deny liability, see post § 68.

Actions to enforce liability, see post §§ 78, 79.

In corporations generally, including banking corporations where general law applies, see Corporations, XXIV, E.

¶ 200. The stockholders of an insolvent bank at the time of its insolvency are liable under the statute (Pub Acts 1887, No. 205, § 46) to the depositors who are such at that time.—Foster v. Row, 120 Mich. 1.

¶ 201. How. St., § 3208e5, limiting the liability of stockholders in banks to depositors only, does not violate Const. Art. 15, § 3, which provides that stockholders shall be liable for all debts, the constitutional provision relating to banks of issue only.—Foster v. Row, 120 Mich. 1.

¶ 202. The directors and stockholders of a bank organized under the act of March 15, 1837, commonly called the general banking law, could neither be held liable for the bills and other indebtedness of the bank, as stockholders and directors of the association, nor as partners.—State of Michigan v. How, 1 Mich. 512.

¶ 203. By the general banking law of 1837 the directors of a bank were to be individually liable for the payment of the debts in case of its insolvency. By a prior act banking was made unlawful unless authorized by law, and penalties were imposed for engaging in it. In an action brought against the directors of an association formed under the general banking law, to charge them with the payment of one of its debts, it was held that the law against illegal banking was not repealed by the general banking law, except in favor of incorporated banks organized under it; and as by the Constitution corporations could not be created under this law, and the banks so organized were illegal, the action against the directors could not be sustained.—Brooks v. Hill, 1 Mich. 118.

¶ 204. Assumpsit was brought against certain persons jointly to recover back money which the plaintiff had deposited with one of them in reliance upon his false and fraudulent representations that he conducted a bank of which the others were directors. Held, that even though the others had allowed their names to be so used, the facts did not establish any joint liability against them and they were not estopped from denying it.—Bennett v. Dean, 41 Mich. 472.

What constitutes deposit for which stockholders are liable, see also ante ¶ 133.
Interest upon unpaid assessment, see Interest, II.

¶ 205. A shareholder in a bank is, as regards creditors, not only a surety for the bank, but, as one of the associates therein, he is held to have undertaken, by the terms of association, to be bound for the debts which it contracts, How. St., § 3174. And the liability of the shareholders is commen surate with that of the corporation and extends to costs and interest on judgments.—Grand Rapids Sav. Bank v. Warren, 52 Mich. 557.

¶ 206. The statute liability of a stockholder "for the benefit of the depositors in the bank" is not that of a surety.—Wedemeyer v. Hindelang, 161 Mich. 600.

¶ 207. Where a bank fails, the receiver is entitled to interest on the statutory liability of the stockholders only from the time when it was determined by the court that it was necessary to enforce such liability, not from the date of the bank's failure.—Wedemeyer v. Hindelang, 161 Mich. 600.

¶ 208. Where, by a general law for the incorporation of banks, the directors and stockholders are made individually liable for all debts, and an assignee of a demand is preparing to enforce it against them, it is immaterial whether he paid full value for it, as they are liable for the whole whether he did or not.—Cook v. Wheeler, H. 443.

¶ 209. Where a bank fails and a receiver, under 2 Comp. L. 1897, §§ 6102, 6135, proceeds to enforce against the stockholders their statutory liability, the stockholders are not entitled to be treated as creditors of the surplus fund so as to have their liability reduced thereby.—Wedemeyer v. Hindelang, 161 Mich. 600.

§ 67. Persons liable as stockholders.

Liability of trustee of stock as stockholder, see post ¶ 219.
In corporations generally, see Corporations, XXIV, B, E.
In illegal or irregular corporations generally, see Corporations, VI, XXIV, E.

¶ 210. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 6135, making stockholders individually liable for the benefit of depositors of a bank, the liability rests on the actual shareholders at the time of the suspension.—May v. McQuillan, 129 Mich. 392.

¶ 211. A stockholder in an insolvent bank is liable on shares of stock which he has purchased and paid for though the stock has not been transferred to his name on the books of the bank and is in its hands as collateral for a debt since paid.—Foster v. Row, 120 Mich. 1.

¶ 212. Under How. St., § 3208e5 (Pub. Acts 1887, No. 205, sec. 46), providing that one holding bank stock as collateral security shall not be liable thereon as a stockholder, a bank which holds stock in an insolvent bank as collateral security for a debt due it, is not liable thereon though the cashier of the insolvent bank upon request to transfer the stock made the transfer absolute in form instead of to the holder as pledgee.—May v. Genesee County Savings. Bank, 120 Mich. 330.

¶ 214. A stockholder in an insolvent bank is not liable on stock which he has in good faith sold and delivered to the cashier of the bank in his individual capacity, the amount paid for such stock having been credited to such stockholder in his passbook, though the cashier has failed to reimburse the bank and no entry of the transfer has been made on the books of the bank.—Foster v. Row, 120 Mich. 1.

§ 68. ——Estoppel of transferee to question liability.

¶ 215. A banking corporation can waive the formality of an assignment by a stockholder of his stock, and, having done so, the purchaser, to whom a certificate is issued cannot, after receiving dividends thereon for several years, escape his statutory liability to depositors on the ground that he never became a legal stockholder for want of such assignment.—Bissell v. Heath, 98 Mich. 472.

¶ 216. A registered stockholder in an insolvent bank who has received and retains dividends and who has permitted depositors to rely upon his ownership of the stock, cannot avoid his statutory liability thereon on the ground that he purchased the stock upon fraudulent representations as to its value by officers of the bank.—Foster v. Row, 120 Mich. 1.

¶ 217. A transferee of stock without formal assignment cannot after receiving and retaining dividends, and permitting depositors to rely upon his apparent ownership of the stock, repudiate his liability on the ground that he was induced to buy the stock by false representations as to the bank's financial conditions.—Bissell v. Heath, 98 Mich. 472.

§ 69. Lien on bank stock for debt of holder.

Estoppel of bank, by admission of officers, to assert lien on stock, see ante § 58.
Liability of stockholders in corporations generally, see Corporations, XXIV, E.
Effect of lien as against bona fide transferee, see also Corporations, XXIV, B.
Payment of tax on holder's stock by bank and lien on stock for reimbursement, see Taxes, IX.

¶ 218. Where defendant bank loans money to one of its stockholders and takes a demand note with certain stock in a mercantile company as collateral security and the stockholder later deposits his bank stock with another bank as security for a loan and in pursuance of the authority given under this loan, the stock is sold to plaintiff plaintiff takes the stock subject to the lien of defendant bank under Comp. L. 1897, § 6098, and is not required to issue a new stock certificate to plaintiff.—Brinen v. Muskegon Sav. Bank, 174 Mich. 414.

¶ 219. A bank has no lien under § 6098 Comp Laws 1897, § 6404, How. St., 2nd Ed., on shares of its stock for a debt due it from a trustee individually, in whose name the bank issued the stock with knowledge of the identity of the legal owner.—Porter v. Marine Sav. Bank, 186 Mich. 355.

¶ 220. A bank's statutory lien on its stock (How. St., § 3208a8) extends to the holder's liability of the bank on a debt of a copartnership of which he is or has been a member, since the statute expressly covers a liability as principal debtor, surety, "or otherwise."—Citizens' State Bank v. Kalamazoo County Bank, 111 Mich. 313.

¶ 221. A by-law providing that any stockholder desiring to sell his stock shall give the bank ten days to purchase or find a purchaser, and at the expiration of such time may "sell at pleasure," does not operate as a waiver of the right of the bank to claim a lien, under How. St., § 3208a8, as against a purchaser of the stock, for a debt of the registered holder.—Citizens' State Bank v. Kalamazoo County Bank, 111 Mich. 313.

¶ 222. A bank's lien under How. St., § 3208a8, Comp. L. 1897, § 6098, upon stock issued by it, for any liability of the registered holder, extends to a debt due at the time when a demand for the transfer of such stock is made, is superior to the right of a bona fide purchaser, and the latter cannot compel a transfer of the stock until such liability is discharged.—Michigan Trust Co. v. State Bank, 111 Mich. 306; Citizens' State Bank v. Kalamazoo County Bank, 111 Mich. 313; Oakland County Sav. Bank v. State Bank, 113 Mich. 284.

¶ 223. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 6098, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6404, providing that the shares of stock of a bank shall be deemed personal property and shall be transferred on the books of the bank in such manner as the by-laws thereof may direct, but no transfer shall be valid against a bank so long as the registered holder thereof shall be liable as principal debtor, surety or otherwise to the bank for any debt which shall be due and unpaid, and no stock shall be transferred on the books of any bank without the consent of the board of directors where the registered holder thereof is indebted to the bank for any matured and unpaid obligations, where the owner of stock in a bank pledges such stock as collateral security for his indebtedness, the bank is not required to transfer the stock on its books unless, before maturity of the bank debt, the pledgee has demanded a transfer or has given a notice, which means that he has elected to claim his full rights, or unless the facts make that election so certain that formal notice is unnecessary.—National City Bank of Chicago v. Kalamazoo City Sav. Bank, 232 Fed. 669.

Refusal to transfer as evidence of fraud, see Corporations, XXIV, D.

¶ 224. Upon a cross-bill filed to foreclose a lien upon stock by a bank which the purchaser of such stock has sued to compel a transfer thereof on the bank's books, the court has jurisdiction to award foreclosure, even though the registered holder, against whom no personal decree is sought, has not been made a party.—Citizens' State Bank v. Kalamazoo County Bank, 111 Mich. 313.

§ 72. Insolvency and winding up in general.

The general law regulating dissolution, winding up and insolvency of corporations is treated in Corporations, XXIII, and only the provisions that are peculiar to money and banking corporations are kept in this topic.

Injunction and receivership, see also post § 75.

Dissolution of bank or banking corporation, see also § 77.

State Banking Department and its functions in cases of insolvency and winding up, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 152, § 8005 et seq.

¶ 225. Insolvency of a bank is shown, prima facie, by its closing its doors and suspending its business, which is "an act of insolvency" (How. St., § 3208e6).—Stone v. Dodge, 96 Mich. 514.

¶ 226. Facts held to establish a case of insolvency within the meaning of the statute, and for the appointment of a receiver to wind up its affairs.—Bank Com'rs v. Bank of Brest, H. 106.

¶ 227. The fact that a bank has stopped payment is not of itself conclusive evidence of its inability to pay its debts, but it is prima facie evidence of inability or insolvency, except where the bank is authorized by statute to suspend.—Attorney-General v. Bank of Michigan, H. 315.

¶ 228. The fact that a member of a banking firm borrows money from another bank, and gives security therefor, is no evidence of the firm's insolvency or of bad faith.—Glines v. State Sav. Bank, 132 Mich. 638.

¶ 229. The fact that a banking firm withdraws from the clearing house is no evidence of fraud or of insolvency.—Glines v. State Sav. Bank, 132 Mich. 638.

¶ 230. The provisions of the act of June 21, 1837, and the act of April 12, 1841, in regard to banks and incorporations, commented upon and explained.—Attorney-General v. Bank of Mich., H. 315.

¶ 231. The true construction of the suspension act of April 12, 1841, is that the statements should be made out and transmitted to the secretary of state on the days specified, or as soon thereafter as the same can be made out and stated.—Attorney-General v. Bank of Michigan, H. 315.

¶ 232. The directors of a moneyed corporation like that of the bank of Brest have no power to make an assignment without being authorized to do so by the stockholders.—Bank Com'rs v. Bank of Brest, H. 106.

¶ 233. The general banking law of March 15, 1837, prescribed the mode in which the affairs of associations formed under it should be wound up in case of insolvency; and this being designed as a part of the security to the public was one of the conditions upon which they took their corporate powers.—Bank Com'rs v. Bank of Brest, H. 106.

¶ 234. Where the directors of a bank made an assignment of its assets for the benefit of creditors, with a view to evade the provisions of the statute providing how insolvent banks should be wound up, it was held that such assignment was against the policy of the law, and void; and the court of chancery appointed a receiver.—Bank Com'rs v. Bank of Brest, H. 106.

¶ 235. The commissioners appointed to settle with the Michigan State Bank, under the act of February 1, 1840, had no right to bind the state to pay any debt of the bank.—Hammond v. Michigan State Bank, W. 214.

had jurisdiction to compel the defendants to account as trustees of the bank, and pay any damages the bank had suffered by reason of the failure to indemnify.—Michigan State Bank v. Hammond, 1 D. 527.

¶ 237. It seems that as to any money actually received by the state treasurer as proceeds of property conveyed by the Michigan State Bank to the state on condition that the state should save harmless the bank against certain liabilities, he could not be compelled to account upon breach of the condition, since money paid into the state treasury must be regarded as in possession of the state.—Michigan State Bank v. Hammond, 1 D. 527.

¶ 238. Where the Michigan State Bank conveyed property to the state on condition that the state should save harmless the bank against certain liabilities, and the state sold the property and then refused to indemnify the bank, the bank would only be entitled to the relief prayed on waiving any forfeiture for breach of the condition, and on delivering over to the state a portion of the property which they had neglected and refused to deliver according to the original agreement.—Michigan State Bank v. Hammond, 1 D. 527.

¶ 240. The state never became responsible to make good the failure of the Government Stock Bank to pay its debts; the only responsibility it assumed was to receive and apply the bonds deposited to pay bills certified by the state treasurer, so far as they would go towards certifying them. Mandamus to compel the state treasurer to pay a balance claimed to be due on bills of the bank denied.—Bresler v. Butler, 60 Mich. 40.

Fraudulent assignment as ground, see ante ¶ 234.

Right of receiver to question authority of cashier ratified by bank, see ante ¶ 185

Right of receiver to sue on stockholders' liability, see post § 78.

Effect of receivership to dissolve bank, see post § 77.

Equities and liens of receivers as representatives of banking corporations, see also Corporations, XXIII; and see also specific topics treating of the right asserted or the subject matter involved, e. g., Chattel Mortgages; Mortgages; Foreclosure of Mortgages; Liens.

Title and equities of receiver in notes held by corporation, see generally Corporations, XXIII.

Grounds for supplemental bill by receiver to protect equities, see Equity, XI.

Receiver as necessary party to suit for rescission of stock purchase, see also Rescission and Cancellation, VI.

Leave to sue or intervene in receivership proceedings, see Receivers, IV, C.

¶ 241. Except in cases where the bill is filed by a bank commissioner, showing fraud, violation of the charter, or insolvency, notice should be given of an application for an injunction against a bank, and a case should be made out that would warrant the court in winding up the concerns of the bank.—Barnum v. Bank of Pontiac, H. 116.

¶ 242. Injunction will not be granted in the first instance on an allegation alone that the bank has stopped payment; but a rule to show cause will be granted, and notice required to be given to the defendants. If not explained or excused in cases where the banks are not protected from charter forfeiture by reason of failure, the court would be authorized to grant an injunction and appoint a receiver.—Attorney-General v. Bank of Michigan, H. 315.

¶ 243. For statement of the general principles governing the court in granting and refusing to dissolve injunctions against such corporations, on bill filed for their dissolution and for the forfeiture of charter, see Attorney-General v. Oakland County Bank, W. 90.

¶ 244. An injunction against a bank for insolvency goes to prevent all action whatever, and is rather in the nature of a final injunction which is granted at the termination of a cause, than the usual preliminary injunction to prevent some particular mischief, and therefore should be granted with great caution.—Barnum v. Bank of Pontiac, H. 116.

¶ 245. Where a bill alleged merely a demand and refusal by a bank to pay its notes, and contained no allegations of any impending mischief, danger or hazard of complainant's rights, an injunction was refused.—Barnum v. Bank of Pontiac, H. 116.

¶ 246. The provision in the act incorporating the bank of Pontiac, that an injunction might be issued on a failure to pay, was not imperative, but left it to the sound discretion of the court upon a proper case being made.—Barnum v. Bank of Pontiac, H. 116.

¶ 247. Where the proceeding is against the bank as a failing corporation, its primary object is not for the purpose of dissolving the corporation, but to protect the assets for the benefit of creditors. The dissolution of the corporation is merely incidental.—Fay v. Erie & K. Railroad Bank, H. 194.

¶ 248. By the act incorporating a bank a previous act was referred to, and in effect made a part thereof, which provided that, if any bank did not pay its notes on demand, the charter should not for that cause be dissolved, but it gave the bank sixty days within which to redeem its notes. It contained further provisions that the act should not prevent the issuing of an injunction, and that one might be issued when any bank should refuse to pay its debts. Held, that these provisions relative to injunctions did not change the previous law on the subject. —Barnum v. Bank of Pontiac, H. 116.

¶ 249. The court may dissolve the injunction, discharge the receiver and permit the party to dismiss his bill, when it is satisfied that the interest of all concerned will be best subserved by permitting the corporation to manage its own affairs.—Fay v. Erie & K. Railroad Bank, H. 194.

¶ 250. It is the duty of the court to look into the condition of the corporation before discharging the receiver, and to make such order, either absolute or conditional, as the case may require.—Fay v. Erie & K. Railroad Bank, H. 194.

§ 77. Dissolution of bank or corporation.

¶ 251. A bank could not be dissolved for forfeiture in an ex parte proceeding, and the appointment of a receiver on an ex parte application could not therefore have that effect.—Montgomery v. Merrill, 18 Mich. 338.

¶ 252. A receiver appointed on an ex parte application would become functus officio if no further proceedings were taken until the demands against the bank became barred by lapse of time, and his appointment could not be set up as a bar to the rights of one who had afterwards purchased property on an execution against the bank.—Montgomery v. Merrill, 18 Mich. 338.

Nature and extent of the liability, see ante §§ 65, 66.

¶ 253. The receiver of an insolvent bank may bring action to enforce the statutory liability of stockholders upon a showing that the assets are insufficient to pay the depositors without first exhausting the assets. —Foster v. Row, 120 Mich. 1.

¶ 254. Under How. St., § 3208e5, governing liability of stockholders in banks, and How. St., § 3208f4, providing for the appointment of receivers of insolvent banks, the circuit court has jurisdiction to direct the receiver to bring action to enforce the statutory liability of the stockholders upon an ex parte showing that the assets are insufficient to pay the depositors.—Foster v. Row, 120 Mich. 1.

¶ 255. It seems that the statutory liability of a stockholder to depositors in a bank being contractual, may be enforced against a nonresident stockholder.—Foster v. Row, 120 Mich. 1.

¶ 256. The estate of a nonresident stockholder in a bank may be held ratably liable for debts of the bank that matured before the passage of Pub. L. 1877; Act No. 141 (How. St., §§ 4886-4899), and to such debts the limitations imposed by that act as to service within the jurisdiction cannot apply. —Grand Rapids Sav. Bank v. Warren, 52 Mich. 557.

Sufficiency of delivery of money to take it out of bank's general assignment, see Assignments for Creditors, ¶ 141.

¶ 257. Payments to a depositor during a run on a bank, and after the cashier has persuaded some persons not to withdraw their deposits, but when the bank has assets sufficient so that its officers hope and expect to continue business and be able to pay all the debts of the bank, are not made with a view to prevent the application of the assets of the bank in the manner prescribed by statute, or with a view to the preference of that depositor over other creditors, within the meaning of How. St, § 3208e6.—Stone v. Jenison, 111 Mich. 592.

¶ 258. The statute How. St., § 3208e6, declaring void all payments of money made by a bank, either after the commission of an act of insolvency or in contemplation thereof, with a view to prevent the application of its assets in the manner prescribed by law, or with a view to the preference of one creditor over another, does not invalidate a payment to a depositor, although made after an act of insolvency, unless the unlawful view or intent was also present.—Stone v. Jenison, 111 Mich. 592.

Trust and preferred claims, see post §§ 83-87.

Acceptance of partial payment as waiver of preference, see post § 87.

Right of recourse by depositor on insolvent bank's predecessor, see ante ¶ 30.
Procedure to present and try claims in general, see Corporations, XXIII.
Application for leave to intervene before filing claim, see generally Corporations, XXIII.

¶ 259. A claim against an insolvent bank was payable proportionally out of the assets of the savings and commercial departments of the bank, where both were conducted by the bank.—McGraw v. Union Trust Co., 135 Mich. 609.

¶ 260. Laws 1887, Act No. 205, § 56, providing that upon the appointment of a receiver for an insolvent bank the commissioner of the banking department shall advertise once a week for twelve successive weeks notice calling on all persons who have claims against the bank to present them to the receiver and make proof, does not prevent the receiver from hearing and allowing claims before the expiration of the twelve weeks.—Bissell v. Heath, 98 Mich. 472.

¶ 261. Under the rule of State Saving Bank v. Foster, 118 Mich, 273, a bank which is not a depositor within the meaning of the bank law is not entitled to claim any part of a dividend arising from the fund recovered against stockholders.—American Trust & Sav. Bank of Chicago v. Foster, 118 Mich. 280.

Application of deposits by going banks, and rights of lien and setoff, see ante II, C
General rules of setoff, see Setoff.
Setoffs in insolvency generally and setoffs against trustees and the like, see also Bankruptcy. Assignments for Creditors: Corporations, XXIII; Receivers; Trusts.
Proper matters of setoff against insolvent corporation, see Corporations, XXIII.

¶ 262. A depositor may set off a deposit subject to check, standing to his credit at the time a bank becomes insolvent and closes its doors, against his notes to the bank though such notes are not yet due.—Thompson v. Union Trust Co., 130 Mich. 508.

¶ 263. The principle that a claim which is past due, cannot be set off against an assigned claim which was not due and payable at the time of the assignment, applies in the case of an assigned claim for rent against the receiver of a bank, where the latter sought to set off a claim of the bank which was just due at the time of making the assignment.—Henderson v. Michigan Trust Co., 123 Mich. 688.

¶ 264. The petition of a partnership against the receiver of an insolvent bank to have the amount of a note given by one of the partners as an individual, set off against and deducted from the partnership's balance on the ground that the money was borrowed on behalf of the partnership and that the cashier was so informed and that the amount would be paid from partnership deposit, was denied where it appeared that the money was borrowed by the individual as his contribution to the partnership in question which was then not in existence but only contemplated.—Kroll v. Union Trust Co., 133 Mich. 638.

§ 83. Trust and other preferred claims.

Appropriation of trust fund by bank as creditor, see ante § 19.

¶ 265. As the evidence shows that there was on hand an amount in excess of a trust fund each day from the receipt of the money until the bank's doors were closed, it is not presumable that at some time during those days the amount on hand was less, especially as the fact, if true, could be shown from the books.—Sherwood v. Central Michigan Sav. Bank, 103 Mich. 109.

¶ 266. Money paid to a bank for a letter of credit, and entered upon a savings pass book and put in the savings account kept by the bank, to the credit of the purchaser in such a manner that the amount could only be drawn as against the letter of credit, did not constitute a trust fund so as to give priority to bankers who had paid out drafts drawn on the letter of credit, as against other creditors of the insolvent bank in question.—Kuehne v. Union Trust Co., 133 Mich. 602.

¶ 267. Where a draft is deposited in a bank without direction that it shall be treated as a separate fund, and is forwarded for collection to another bank, which fails, and the drafts and deposits between the two banks have been constantly changing, the owner of the draft must share pro rata with other creditors.—Edson v. Angell, 58 Mich. 336.

¶ 268. Where a bank receives for collection a check drawn upon it by a depositor, and, after charging the same to his account, pending payment to the forwarding bank, passes into insolvency, the amount of the check does not constitute a trust fund in the hands of the receiver.—Sunderlin v. Mecosta County Sav. Bank, 116 Mich. 281.

¶ 269. Where money paid to a bank upon mortgages left with the bank by a depositor for collection is, contrary to instructions, passed to his credit after being credited for a time to a fictitious account, the bank acts as agent for the depositor; the relation of debtor and creditor does not exist as to the money so collected, but the bank holds such money in trust; and if the bank mingles the money with its own funds and becomes insolvent before paying it to the depositor, the latter is entitled to a lien upon the funds in the hands of the bank's receiver, which lien is superior to the claims of general creditors.—Sherwood v. Central Michigan Sav. Bank, 103 Mich. 100.

¶ 270. Where, on the same day that a bank closed its doors, and shortly before, the person entitled to money collected for him by a bank but credited to him contrary to instructions, called for such money, and was informed by the cashier that the bank could not pay it, but finally was paid part by the cashier, receiving a draft for the rest, which draft was never paid, held, that as the draft was received in reliance upon the false representation that the bank could not pay, the person's right to claim the fund was not waived.—Sherwood v. Central Michigan Sav. Bank, 103 Mich. 109.

¶ 271. A general depositor of a bank had a credit on its books for deposits equal to the amount of his note held by the bank for collection on the day he drew a check on the bank for such amount, which the cashier accepted, charging it up against his account, and delivering up the note as paid. The cashier did not forward the sum collected. The bank failed, most of its indebtedness being due to its depositors, while nearly all of it was owing at the time when the note was surrendered. It appeared that no money was realized from the check, and that it was not used to pay the debts or increase the assets of the bank or otherwise to benefit the general depositors. Held, that a trust for the amount in favor of the owners of the note was not created, and that the bank's receiver was not required to pay them in full without regard to the claims of other creditors.—Sherwood v. Milford State Bank, 94 Mich. 78.

¶ 273. The giving and receipt of a draft, drawn by a bank upon its New York correspondent, in the ordinary form, in favor of a bank from whom it has received certain paper for collection, does not constitute an equitable assignment pro tanto of an indebtedness owing by the New York correspondent, so as to entitle the payee, in the event of the drawer's becoming insolvent before presentation of the draft, to priority over general creditors.—Sunderlin v. Mecosta County Sav. Bank, 116 Mich. 281.

¶ 274. Public moneys deposited by an official in his private bank and commingled with its funds, contrary to How. St., §§ 424, 427, are a trust fund preferred in insolvency, if traceable and capable of identification, although the legal title was in the treasurer depositing them.—Board of Fire & Water Com'rs of Marquette v. Wilkinson, 119 Mich. 655.

¶ 275. Where a bank has received deposits under agreement to return all moneys deposited with it by the state treasurer, one of the several sureties on the bank's bond of $50,000, conditioned on the performance of such contract, is not entitled on payment of $50,000 to share in dividends paid by the bank upon its insolvency in reduction of its debt to the state, such debt not being fully secured by other sureties' bonds.—Commissioner of Banking v. Chelsea Sav. Bank, 161 Mich. 691.

¶ 276. Where under 2 Comp. L. 1897, § 6144 et seq., the banking commissioner has closed a bank, and thereby an assignment for the benefit of all creditors has in effect been made, the state has no preference over other creditors for funds deposited by the state treasurer with said bank.—Commissioner of Banking v. Chelsea Sav. Bank, 161 Mich. 691.

¶ 277. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 6118, which provides that a bank doing a savings and a commercial business, shall keep separate books for each kind of business and shall keep investments for the savings department separate and apart, and that investments made with funds from the savings department shall be held solely for the payment of savings deposits, where a bank has intermingled the funds, and has become insolvent, any investments which can be traced as having been made from savings deposits are impressed with a trust in favor of the savings depositors.—Peters v. Union Trust Co., 131 Mich. 322.

§ 87. ——Waiver and estoppel.

¶ 278. By accepting a dividend from the receiver of an insolvent bank one who would otherwise be entitled to have a trust imposed in his favor upon the bank's assets, is not estopped from demanding payment of his claim in full.—Wallace v. Stone, 107 Mich. 190.

B. NATIONAL BANKS.

National bank reorganized as state bank, see ante § 47, ¶ 141.

¶ 279. National banks are creatures of Congress, agencies of the federal government, domesticated in the state.—Attorney General ex rel. Union Trust Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Bay City, 192 Mich. 640, reversed in 244 U. S. 416, 61 L. ed. 1233, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 734.

¶ 280. An act of Congress of 1882, § 4 (3 Rev. Stat. 1901, pp. 3457-3460), relating to national banking associations which extend their period of succession and to jurisdiction of suits by or against national banking associations, was not repealed by the act of August 13, 1888, but is still in force.—Levitan v. Houghton Nat. Bank, 174 Mich. 566.

¶ 281. The object of United States Revised Statutes, § 5211, providing that "each such report shall exhibit in detail and under appropriate heads, the resources and liabilities of the association at the close of business on any past day by him specified," is to advise the comptroller of the currency and the public of the condition of each national bank at stated periods.—Smalley v. McGraw, 148 Mich. 384.

§ 89. State laws and jurisdiction of state courts.

Validity of Federal Reserve Act as invading matters of state sovereignty, see Constitutional Law, IV.

¶ 282. The state courts have, in a proper case, authority to compel a national bank to permit the inspection of its books and records by a stockholder.—Woodworth v. Old Second Nat. Bank, 154 Mich. 459; Same v. Maltby Cedar Co., Id.

¶ 283. The powers that shall be possessed by national banks, and matters relating to their control are beyond state authority, except that a national bank may not possess or exercise certain powers in contravention of state laws.—Attorney General ex rel. Union Trust Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Bay City, 192 Mich. 640, reversed in 244 U. S. 416, 61 L. ed. 1233, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 734.

¶ 284. No law of Michigan is "contravened," within the meaning of the Federal Reserve Act, § 11 (k), or opposed, or brought into conflict because a national banking corporation with the sanction of the board exercises the power of executing trusts, managing trust funds, and acting as executor and administrator of the estates of deceased persons.—Attorney General ex rel. Union Trust Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Bay City, 192 Mich. 640, reversed in 244 U. S. 416, 61 L. ed. 1233, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 734.

¶ 285. The Supreme Court of Michigan may temporarily enjoin a receiver of a national bank from transferring a trust fund beyond the jurisdiction of the court during the pendency of the appeal of a bill seeking to follow the fund into the deposits of said bank.—Patek v. Patek, 166 Mich. 443.

¶ 286. Under an act of Congress of 1882, § 4 (3 Rev. Stat., 1901, pp. 3457-3460), relating to jurisdiction of suits against national banking associations, a bill may be maintained by a complainant in the circuit court of the county in which he resides against a national bank organized under the laws of the United States and doing business in another county.—Levitan v. Houghton Nat. Bank, 174 Mich. 566.

¶ 287. The certificate of the comptroller to the organization of a national bank is evidence of its legal organization, which cannot be impeached by showing that the notary who took the acknowledgment of the shareholders to their certificate of organization was one of their number.—Thatcher v. West River Nat. Bank of Jamaica, Vermont, 19 Mich. 196.

¶ 288. The fact that a bank is found doing business before the date of its certificate of organization under the act of Congress does not prove that it is a different body from the one named in the certificate, the act of Congress allowing state banks to reorganize under it.—Thatcher v. West River Nat. Bank of Jamaica, Vermont, 19 Mich. 196.

Power of banking corporations in general, see ante § 52.

Authority of officers, see ante § 54 et seq.

Presumptions as to cashier's knowledge and intent, see also ante ¶ 102.

Indemnity bond as contract of cashier or national bank, see also ante ¶ 102.

¶ 289. National banks have no power to enter into contracts of suretyship in which they have no interest.—Knickerbocker v. Wilcox, 83 Mich. 200.

¶ 290. Under 13 U. S. St. at Large, 110, limiting the liability of national banks to the amount of their capital stock except in certain cases, one of which is for "moneys deposited with or collected by the association," a national bank may contract for the custody of county funds, and give a bond to secure the same, as liability on such contract and bond does not increase the liability of the bank beyond the amount of the deposits which they are given to secure.—Board Sup'rs Gratiot Co. v. Munson, 157 Mich. 505.

¶ 291. Whether a national bank can give a guaranty against liability or loss to sureties on paper discounted by the bank, when the effect of such guaranty would be to make such paper the paper of one party only, secured by mortgages on real estate, quære.—First Nat. Bank of Sturgis v. Bennett, 33 Mich. 520.

§ 92. Taking mortgages and securities.

¶ 292. An extension of credit by a national bank based upon a real estate mortgage does not invalidate the mortgage even if in taking the mortgage the bank violated the provisions of the National Banking Law.—Fifth Nat. Bank v. Pierce, 117 Mich. 376.

¶ 293. Where an original demand had been transferred to a national bank, it was held that the question whether the bank could lawfully take collateral security would not be determined in a case to which the bank was not made a party.—Briggs v. Hannowald, 35 Mich. 474.

§ 93. Loaning and discounting.

Power to take mortgage or other security, see ante § 92.

¶ 294. In an action by an assignor of a bank for fraud and deceit against a director in representing that certain notes presented for discount were good and collectible, whereas they were not, he is not liable for having induced or permitted the bank to extend credit to the maker of the note in excess of the legal limit fixed by U. S. Rev. Stat., § 5200 (National Banking Law), where the evidence shows that at the time of the representations he was not acting as director, but as the agent and representative of the maker of the note.—Hicks v. Steel, 142 Mich. 292.

X. SAFE DEPOSITARIES.

Bailments generally for keeping, see Bailments.

Storage of merchandise other than safe deposit of valuables, see Warehousing.

Bank officer as gratuitous bailee for stock deposited, see Bailments ¶ 50.

General law relating to safety and collateral deposit companies, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 153, § 8078 et seq.

§ 1. Bankruptcy Law and its effect.

Effect of the law per se on other titles and liens, see post § 38.

¶ 1. The existence of a national bankrupt law does not render a common-law assignment for the benefit of one's creditors ipso facto void.—Cook v. Rogers, 31 Mich. 391.

¶ 2. The Bankruptcy Act, since it is a plain derogation of common right, should be strictly construed, and in order to show that a debt admitted to exist is discharged, the facts should be found showing, at least, a substantial compliance with the law.—Shaw v. Vaughan, 52 Mich. 405.

§ 2. Adjudication and appointment of trustee.

Trustee as representative of all parties in actions, see post § 15.

Adjudication as conclusive of insolvency, see post ¶ 118.

¶ 3. An agreement to withdraw opposition to bankruptcy proceedings, and to consent and submit to an adjudication in bankruptcy, is not in fraud of the bankrupt act.—Sanford v. Huxford, 32 Mich. 313.

§ 3. Title to and right to possession of bankrupt estate.

What are assets and administration of same, see post §§ 4-8.

Title passed by trustee's sale of chattels, see post § 6.

Title and right conveyed by trustee's deed, see post § 7.

Pleading title, see post § 20.

Reversion to bankrupt after payment of debts, see post § 23.

Trustee as "grantee" of debtor and so entitled to administer estate of debtor's father, see Estates of Decedents, III, A.

Estoppel to question chattel mortgage foreclosure as binding on mortgagor's trustee, see also Chattel Mortgages, VII.

¶ 4. A trustee in bankruptcy has no greater rights under the bankrupt's contract than the bankrupt.—Wasey v. Whitcomb, 167 Mich. 58.

¶ 5. The trustee in bankruptcy, under the Bankruptcy Act, takes the property of the bankrupt at the date of adjudication, in cases unaffected by fraud, in the same plight and condition that the bankrupt himself held it, and subject to all the equities impressed upon it in the hands of the bankrupt.—Marine Sav. Bank v. Norton, 160 Mich. 614.

¶ 6. Under § 47 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, as amended in 1910, 36 U. S. Stat. L. 838, 840, providing that trustees, as to property coming into custody of the bankruptcy court "shall be deemed vested with all the rights, remedies and powers of a creditor holding a lien by legal or equitable proceedings thereon; and also, as to all property not in the custody of the bankruptcy court, shall be deemed vested with all the rights, remedies and powers of a judgment creditor holding an execution duly returned unsatisfied," and § 70, 30 U. S. Stat. L. 565, providing that the trustee shall be vested by operation of law with the title of the bankrupt to all property of the latter not exempt, as of the date of adjudication, including property transferred by him in fraud of creditors, a trustee has all the rights of the bankrupt in the bankrupt's property and also all the rights of a creditor who has taken all the steps preliminary to filing a creditor's bill.—Grand Rapids Trust Co. v. Nichols, 199 Mich. 126.

¶ 7. An amendment of a petition in bankruptcy related back to the date of the original petition, so as to vest the assignee with the title to land from the filing of the original petition, as against a grantee who obtained title in the interim.—Potter v. Martin, 122 Mich. 542.

¶ 8. The title to property mortgaged by a bankrupt remains in him and passes to his assignee, by whom it may be transferred subject to any valid outstanding incumbrance.—McMaster v. Campbell, 41 Mich. 513.

¶ 9. A party contemplating bankruptcy executed a mortgage to secure a bona fide debt and to release an attachment. It was in time to avoid defeat as a preference and he then went into bankruptcy, turned his property over to his assignee scheduled as subject to this mortgage, and afterwards bought it from the assignee. Held, that he took subject to the mortgage, and that equity would not permit him, in a suit to foreclose the mortgage, to set up as a defense that the mortgage was void as executed in fraud of the bankrupt act.—Welling v. Marsh, 66 Mich. 671.

¶ 10. A receiver in bankruptcy of the property of a foreign corporation which is engaged in business in the state without compliance with law is estopped to raise the question of the validity of mortgage of chattels of the corporation in an action of replevin to recover such chattels, since he has no greater rights than the corporation itself, and it, if suing, would be estopped to raise the question of the validity of the mortgage.—Goldberg v. Parker, 198 Mich. 396.

¶ 11. An assignee in bankruptcy is entitled to temporary control of exempted property, at least until it can be set apart from the rest.—Sheldon v. Rounds, 40 Mich. 425.

¶ 12. A sheriff has no special interest in attached property as against the debtor's assignee in bankruptcy appointed before execution issued in the attachment case, and as between him and the assignee he should surrender possession to the latter.—Lindner v. Brock, 40 Mich. 618.

¶ 13. Property held and claimed adversely by third parties is not the subject of summary appropriation by the federal court upon the filing of a petition in bankruptcy.—Morning Tel. Pub. Co. v. S. B. Hutchinson Co., 146 Mich. 38.

¶ 14. Where replevin proceedings had been brought against property in the hands of a trustee for the benefit of some of the creditors, and a bankruptcy petition is filed, the federal court does not obtain possession of the property thereby, and inasmuch as the state court was the first to acquire possession, it may retain jurisdiction of the replevin suit, there being no hardship as the trustee in bankruptcy would probably be allowed to intervene and defend the replevin suit.—Morning Tel. Pub. Co. v. S. B. Hutchinson Co., 146 Mich. 38.

§ 4. Bankrupt assets and estate, administration thereof.

Nature of title, equities of trustee, and right to possession, see ante § 3.
Meetings or creditors, sales and titles, see post §§ 5-8.
Transfers and payments impairing assets as preferences, see post §§ 8, 9.
Dissolution of attachments and levies made within statutory period before bankruptcy, see post § 9.
Schedules as a requisite for discharge, see post § 10.
Rights of action to recover assets or their value, see post § 18.
Effect of prior jurisdiction of state court on right to possession, see post ¶ 97.
Liability of trustee for wrong or neglect, see post § 14.
Trust estates and administration of them, see Trusts; and see also assignments for Creditors.

¶ 15. In a bankruptcy proceeding the alleged bankrupt filed an answer and set out to contest. The estate involved was large and complicated. The parties in order to expedite matters signed a stipulation exempting several pieces of property from claims of the trustee upon agreement by the alleged bankrupt to withdraw his answer and admit his bankruptcy. A clause of the stipulation provided that certain life insurance policies signed by the bankrupt should not be claimed by the trustee "unless any of said transactions are voidable under the bankruptcy act." The parties acted on the stipulation, and the trustee and the creditors received the benefit therefrom. Held, said clause with reference to life insurance policies made the same exempt from the claims of creditors, and the trustee was not entitled to reach the same merely upon a decision on his part that the assignments were voidable under the Bankruptcy Act.—Security Trust Co. v. Glazier, 170 Mich. 26.

Liability of trustee for failure to notify creditors, see post § 14.

¶ 17. Notice of meetings of a bankrupt's creditors must be given by the assignee to all known creditors, and he has no discretion to exercise except as to the mode of giving it.—Russell v. Phelps, 42 Mich. 377.

§ 6. ——Sales of property.

Liability for failure to deliver goods, see post § 14.
Estoppel of creditor to attack sale, see post ¶ 124.
Authority of auctioneer employed by assignee or trustee, see Auctions, ¶ 1.

¶ 18. The power of an assignee in bankruptcy to sell and convey the bankrupt's estate depends wholly upon statute, and a sale in any other manner than as therein prescribed would be a nullity.—Wisner v. Brown, 50 Mich. 553, affirmed 122 U. S. 214, 30 L. ed. 1205.

¶ 19. Notice must be given to adverse claimants before an assignee in bankruptcy can make a valid sale of real property as belonging to the bankrupt's estate.—Russell v. Phelps, 42 Mich. 377.

¶ 20. An assignee in bankruptcy who has sold goods supposed to belong to the bankrupt, and received the money therefor, is not damnified or delayed in the execution of his duty by a judgment in trover against the United States marshal for seizing them, and cannot resist such trover action by injunction.—Hudson v. Detroit Superior Court Judge, 42 Mich. 239.

¶ 21. A purchaser of a chattel at a bankrupt's sale who shows an unassailable title under the bankruptcy proceedings, and who further shows by a written agreement, not questioned, that the bankrupt held the property so purchased in recognition of his ownership, is entitled to the property in the absence of evidence that he parted with his title after he acquired it.—Preston v. Newcomb, 149 Mich. 512.

¶ 22. A sale in bankruptcy by order of the court is binding upon all persons, and in every court, and evidence that the purchaser at such a sale acted as trustee for the bankrupt, and not as a bona fide purchaser, will not be admitted.—Preston v. Newcomb, 149 Mich. 512.

¶ 23. A creditor whose claim accrues after bankruptcy proceedings, and who therefore has no pre-existing rights to be affected by them, cannot call in to question the validity of a sale in such proceedings.—Preston v. Newcomb, 149 Mich. 512.

§ 7. ——Deeds and title to realty.

Title to chattels, see ante § 6.
Title of bankrupt buying back under trustee, see also ante ¶ 9.

¶ 24. The deed of an assignee in bankruptcy containing a copy of the decree declaring the bankruptcy, which decree recites the appointment of the assignee, was sufficient under the act of Congress of 1841, which prescribed what the deed should contain.—Harrington v. Fish, 10 Mich. 415.

¶ 25. A deed from an assignee in bankruptcy, which on its face purports to convey only the "right, title, and interest" of the bankrupt, vests in the grantee the title to the land subject to all of the equities with which it was chargeable in the bankrupt's hands.—DeMey v. Defer, 103 Mich. 239; writ of error dismissed in 168 U. S. 703, 42 L. ed. 1211, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 941.

¶ 26. An assignee in bankruptcy can convey such title only as his assignor had at the time he was adjudged a bankrupt.—Lockwood v. Noble, 113 Mich. 418.

¶ 27. A grant by an assignee in bankruptcy of lands previously conveyed by the bankrupt in fraud of creditors conveys no right to the lands unless it has been judicially determined that the bankrupt's conveyance was fraudulent; without such a determination no title would have vested in the assignee himself, and if he could convey anything, which is doubtful, it would at most be the right to apply for such an adjudication, and to have the fraudulent conveyance set aside.—McMaster v. Campbell, 41 Mich. 513.

¶ 28. On the question as to whether or not a sale of land by an assignee in bankruptcy was rendered invalid by a delay of six years after the entry of the order of sale, the court was inclined to the negative view.—Potter v. Martin, 122 Mich. 542.

¶ 29. Confirmation of a sale of land by an assignee in bankruptcy, is not essential to the validity of the sale.—Potter v. Martin, 122 Mich. 542.

¶ 30. Where a deed by a nonresident insolvent recites that it is executed for the benefit of creditors in foreign insolvency proceedings, the Bankruptcy Act of the country where the proceedings were had may be looked to, to ascertain the extent of power granted by the deed to the trustee in bankruptcy.—Chicago Lumbering Co. v. Powell, 120 Mich. 51.

§ 8. Transfers and preferences affected by bankruptcy.

Effect of deed by trustee of lands previously conveyed in fraud by bankrupt, see ante § 7.
Evidence as to preference, see post § 21.
Objection to transfer after composition, see post § 123.
Effect of assignment for creditors on other rights, liens and levies, see Assignments for Creditors.
General law of fraudulent conveyances and transfers, see Fraudulent Conveyances.
Evidences and indicia of fraudulent conveyance, see Fraudulent Conveyances, I, V, B.

¶ 31. A valid lien is not divested by the mere fact that the holder of it subsequently takes a transfer of the equity of redemption made to him as a preference in violation of the Bankrupt Act, though such transfer is of course void.—Avery v. Hackley, 20 Wall. (87 U. S.) 407, 22 L. ed. 385.

¶ 32. Under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 (30 U. S. Stats. 544), insolvency exists only when there are insufficient assets, at a fair valuation, to meet the liabilities which then exist, and a payment can only be considered preferential when the person to whom it is made has reasonable cause to believe that insolvency exists at the time the payment is made, it not being sufficient that he has information as to facts which create a suspicion of insolvency.—Harmon v. Walker, 131 Mich. 540.

¶ 34. An assignment of commercial paper made by a bank to secure a depositor was sustained though the bank failed two weeks after it was made, where it appeared that the bank did not at the time of the assignment contemplate bankruptcy and the assignees had no information which led them to believe, or should have caused them to believe, that the bank was insolvent.—Harmon v. Feldheim, 131 Mich. 470.

¶ 36. A certain firm paid in full a debt due to defendants. The next day a petition in bankruptcy was filed against said firm. Plaintiff trustee in bankruptcy sued in assumpsit to recover the amount paid Held, that upon proof that the defendants had reasonable grounds to believe the firm was insolvent when it paid them, plaintiff should recover.—Matthews v. Joannes Bros. Co., 156 Mich. 663.

¶ 37. A certain firm owed defendants some $1,800. Defendants called on them and learned that their total assets, including goods, horses, wagons, etc., sold at a fair price, would barely cover their debts. Defendants pressed for payment until the firm mortgaged its aforesaid assets to pay the bill. The next day after payment to defendants a petition in bankruptcy was filed against the firm. Held, in a suit by the trustee to recover the payment to defendants, that there was sufficient evidence to show that defendants knew they were getting a preference from an insolvent.—Matthews v. Joannes Bros. Co., 156 Mich. 663.

¶ 37a. A bank, receiving deposits from another bank without being a party to a fraud by which the depositing bank was purchased from its former owner, and its assets consumed, is not affected by such fraud so as to be responsible for the deposit to the trustee in bankruptcy of the depositing bank.—Knisely v. People's Savings Bank of Saginaw, 199 Mich. 501.

¶ 38. The mere existence of a national bankrupt law does not ipso facto render void a general common-law assignment for the benefit of creditors, so as to authorize the creditors to garnish the assignee because of his possession of the property.—Cook v. Rogers, 31 Mich. 391.

¶ 39. A chattel mortgage was foreclosed on February 6th, and a sale ordered February 13th. On February 8th a petition in bankruptcy was filed against the mortgagor, and on February 19th an adjudication was entered. Held, the adjudication created no specific lien in favor of creditors on the property included in the mortgage, since it is not equivalent to a judgment attachment, or other specific lien upon the assets of the bankrupt.—Marine Sav. Bank v. Norton, 160 Mich. 614.

¶ 40. Under the Bankruptcy Act. § 68a, 30 Stat. L. 565, providing that in all cases of mutual debts or mutual credits between the estate of the bankrupt and a creditor the account shall be stated and one debt shall be set off against the other and the balance only allowed and paid, a bank which receives deposits from an insolvent company within four months of bankruptcy proceedings and receives payments by checks from such deposits on a note owed by the company to it during such four months' period, has no right to set off against such deposits such note where the bank had notice of the insolvency of the debtor and of the fraudulent intent to prefer creditors, as such payments constituted preferences in violation of the Bankruptcy Act, § 60b, 30 Stat. L. 562.—Johnson v. Gratiot County State Bank, 193 Mich. 452.

¶ 41. The payments made void by the Bankrupt Law of 1867, § 35, were such as reduced the means of the debtor to pay his debts ratably. A change in the form of his own obligation from an account to a note could not have that effect, nor could a mere accommodation indorsement; and the bankruptcy of the maker is no defense to an action thereon against the indorser, though all the parties knew that the note was made to give a preference in anticipation of the bankruptcy.—O'Connor v. Parker, 23 Mich. 22.

¶ 42. A common-law assignment preferring specific creditors is protected from the operation of the Bankrupt Law if made in good faith more than two months before bankruptcy proceedings.—Mathews v. Stewart, 44 Mich. 209.

§ 9. ——Dissolution of liens or levies; stay.

Taking invalid preference or transfer as affecting other valid lien, see ante ¶ 31.

¶ 43. An attachment is dissolved by an adjudication and assignment in bankruptcy within four months of its issue.—Lindner v. Brock, 40 Mich. 618; Chapman v. Brewer, 114 U. S. 158, 29 L. ed. 83, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 799.

¶ 44. After a garnishment lien has been perfected so that plaintiff is entitled to a judgment on appeal, such lien is not dissolved by subsequent proceedings in bankruptcy against the principal defendant, nor can the assignee in bankruptcy intervene in the appeal.—Krupp v. Tabor, 31 Mich. 174.

¶ 45. Where a justice has given judgment against a principal defendant without appeal, and has afterwards given judgment against the garnishee defendant, and the latter has appealed to the circuit court, giving the usual bond, and the appeal is referred to a referee, who files a report, to which no exception is taken, finding against the garnishee defendant, so that the plaintiff therein is entitled to a judgment, proceedings in bankruptcy instituted against such principal defendant after all these steps had been taken cannot dissolve the lien in garnishment; and the assignee in bankruptcy could assert no right in the suit in garnishment for or against either party.—Krupp v. Tabor, 31 Mich. 174.

¶ 46. Where, between the argument of a cause in error and the decision of the court affirming the judgment, the debtor has been discharged in baukruptcy, the court, on motion, will grant a perpetual stay of execution. —Parks v. Goodwin, 1 Mich. 35.

¶ 47. Where the defendant, pending a suit against him, applied for and obtained his discharge in bankruptcy, but neglected to avail himself of it in the suit, the court, the neglect being satisfactorily explained, granted a perpetual stay of execution on the judgment rendered in the suit against him.—Bostwick v. Dodge, 2 D. 331.

§ 10. Debts of bankrupt, and discharge or composition.

Strict construction of provisions as to discharge, see ante § 1.

Discharge as defense to subsequent action, see also post § 22.

Pleading discharge, see post § 20.

As to schedules, see also post ¶ 67.

Making and certifying the composition, see post § 12.

Necessity of recording composition, see post § 12.

Liability of trustee for wrong to creditors, see post § 14.

Effect as discharging liability of surety on appeal bond, see Appeal and Error, ¶ 2413.

¶ 48. A discharge in bankruptcy would be a defense to a personal decree for a deficiency in a foreclosure proceeding, although it would not be a defense to a proceeding to foreclose the mortgage.—Prentis v. Richardson's Estate, 118 Mich. 259.

¶ 49. A claim for conversion of wood sold to a bankrupt on a term of credit under condition of title remaining in the seller until paid for, is a provable claim in bankruptcy not excepted from a discharge as a debt "created by fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation or defalcation while acting as an officer or in any fiduciary capacity" within the meaning of section 17 of the Bankruptcy Act.—Bryant v. Kinyon, 127 Mich. 152.

¶ 50. A decree for alimony is not such a debt as will make an adjudication in bankruptcy a discharge.—Nixon v. Wright, 146 Mich. 231.

¶ 51. One who holds property under a conveyance in trust for creditors or as receiver under an assignment for the benefit of creditors, receives and holds the funds in a fiduciary capacity and hence his discharge in bankruptcy does not relieve him from liability for such funds, under the Bankruptcy Law of 1898, § 17 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3428), which provides that there shall be no discharge in such case.—Field v. Howry, 132 Mich. 687.

¶ 52. A discharge in bankruptcy does not discharge a receiver from liability for the misappropriation of a trust fund.—Field v. Howry, 132 Mich. 687.

¶ 53. A receiver under a trust for the benefit of creditors, who loans the trust funds to a firm of which he is a partner, is guilty of a "misappropriation" of the funds within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, § 17 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3428), though he takes a note for the amount which provides for interest thereon, but the firm is in fact bankrupt and repays neither interest nor principal.—Field v. Howry, 132 Mich. 687.

¶ 54. In a proceeding for a deficiency after a foreclosure sale, a receiver who has misappropriated trust funds, cannot set up his discharge in bankruptcy as a defense since such defense is specially excepted by the Bankruptcy Act, § 17.—Field v. Howry, 132 Mich. 687.

¶ 55. The fact that a debt resulting from the misappropriation of trust funds was presented as a claim in bankruptcy proceedings, does not bar proceedings to recover the debt after the discharge, since the act provides that the discharge shall not be effective in case of misappropriation of trust funds. —Field v. Howry, 132 Mich. 687.

¶ 56. The defendant gave a note to plaintiff for money loaned to defendant to complete his medical education. After defendant had been in practice for a time, plaintiff sued on the note. Defendant then represented to plaintiff that he was getting large sums from his practice, and if plaintiff would drop the suit and give him the note, he would soon pay him. Plaintiff did this and defendant then went into voluntary bankruptcy. Plaintiff sues in case for fraud and deceit. Held, that his claim was provable, and was discharged by the bankruptcy.—Jenkins v. Pilcher, 160 Mich. 349.

¶ 58. Under section 17 of the National Bankruptcy Law, providing that a discharge shall release a bankrupt from all his provable debts except such as were not duly scheduled, with the name of the creditor, if known to the bankrupt, unless such creditor had actual notice or knowledge of the proceedings; the burden of proving that plaintiff in an action in which the defendant pleaded a discharge in proceedings in which plaintiff's claim was not scheduled, had such notice or knowledge, was upon the defendant. —Wineman v. Fisher, 135 Mich. 604.

¶ 59. A discharge in bankruptcy of a land-contract vendee whose assignment did not mention the contract as assets or schedule the vendor as creditor does not release his liability to the vendor.—Peters v. Canfield, 74 Mich. 498.

¶ 60. A judgment against a principal defendant was rendered after his adjudication in bankruptcy, but before his discharge. The defendant executed a cognovit and took a stay of proceedings, knowing the judgment was to be used against a garnishee defendant. Held, the principal defendant thereby waived his personal defense of bankruptcy.—Taber v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 156 Mich. 652.

¶ 61. A judgment against a principal defendant was rendered and the clerk entered on his blotter or "short book" the following: "Judgment for plaintiff entered. Fee paid $2.00." The defendant executed a cognovit, and took a stay of proceedings, but by a mistake of the clerk the judgment was not entered on the docket. A suit was proceeding against a garnishee defendant when this mistake was discovered. The principal defendant then filed a petition to have the cognovit and judgment set aside and the proceedings perpetually stayed, and the lower court entered the order. Relator brings mandamus to vacate this order. It appeared that at the time of the judgment the principal defendant had been adjudicated a bankrupt, but had not been discharged. Plaintiff had filed a claim in bankruptcy, and agreed with the principal defendant not to object to a belated application for a discharge; and the latter knew when he executed the cognovit that the judgment was to be used against a garnishee. Held, that the order of the lower court was erroneously entered on the ground that the debt had been discharged in bankruptcy, and the writ of mandamus should issue.—Taber v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 156 Mich. 652.

¶ 62. The rights of an assignee of a mechanic's lien, who had done nothing to estop himself from asserting his rights under the assignment, were not affected by a settlement made in subsequent bankruptcy proceedings against the assignor, between the owner and the trustee in bankruptcy.—Kudner v. Bath, 135 Mich. 241.

§ 11. ——Claims allowable; proof of claims.

Necessity of scheduling claims in order to have discharge, see ante § 10.

Right to prove unpaid balance on secured claim after sale of security, see also post ¶ 65.

¶ 63. In an action between complainant, trustee in bankruptcy of a co-partnership, and defendant, the testimony of the defendant showed that prior to the failure of the co-partnership, defendant had paid to expert accountants $3,000 for auditing the co-partnership books, the sole object of which was to satisfy defendant of the correctness of its impression that the co-partnership was carrying too many low priced stocks. Held, that in the absence of an express agreement the estate of the co-partnership should not defray such expenses.—Austin v. Hayden, 171 Mich. 38.

¶ 64. A decree in a suit by a trustee in bankruptcy setting aside a sale of a bankrupt partnership's property as fraudulent against creditors need not provide for the payment of the debts due the purchaser, as, if he or any other person has a claim, they should go into the bankruptcy court for a determination of their rights.—Rennells v. Potter, 198 Mich. 49.

§ 12. ——Distribution and composition.

Alleging composition, see post § 20.

Composition as cutting off attack on transfers, see post ¶ 123.

New promise as fraud on composition, see post ¶ 131.

¶ 65. Trustees for bondholders who at an assignee's sale in bankruptcy of the obligor's property purchase property securing their bonds, and afterwards sell at an advance, are not bound to credit such profit upon the bonds, but the obligation of the bonds remains over and above the sum discharged by the proceeds of the assignee's sale.—Owen v. Potter, 115 Mich. 556.

¶ 66. The Bankrupt Law (Rev. Stat. U. S., § 5092) provides that at the second meeting of creditors it shall be determined what part of the net proceeds of the estate shall be divided after reserving a sum to provide for all known undetermined claims. Held, that the assignee cannot divide all the proceeds then in his hands, but only so much as remains after reserving the fund for undetermined claims.—Russell v. Phelps, 42 Mich. 377.

¶ 68. A judge in bankruptcy has no authority to give a debtor a certificate that he has been adjudged to have performed a composition with his creditors and that the proceedings taken entitle him to a discharge; and such a certificate, if given, could not properly be pleaded as an estoppel against the plaintiff in an action against the debtor for a debt. The debtor is not released from liability unless he actually performs the composition, and the question whether he has done so is open to trial, with or without a jury, in any court which the debt might be sued for.—Whittemore v. Stephens, 48 Mich. 573.

¶ 69. A promise by a bankrupt to a creditor before a composition is consummated to pay the creditor's claim in full provided he will advance the money necessary to effect the composition is fraudulent and void as to other creditors.—Lieblein v. George, 193 Mich. 462.

¶ 70. Comp. L. 1897, § 9675, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 14301, relating to the powers, duties and obligations of insolvent debtors, and providing that in making distribution the assignee shall first pay all debts that may be owing by the debtor as guardian, executor, administrator, or trustee, and if there be not sufficient to pay all debts of the character specified, then the distribution shall be made among them in proportion to their amounts respectively, is not a "law of the state" so as to give a debt owed by a guardian priority within section 64 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act as a debt "owing to any person who by the laws of the States or the United States is entitled to priority."—In re Jones, 151 F. 108.

Of findings of referee, see post § 19.

¶ 71. A discharge in bankruptcy is conclusive on a creditor who unsuccessfully opposed its being granted; and he cannot afterwards, in a suit brought to recover his debt, show that it was fraudulently obtained.—Wales v. Lyon, 2 Mich. 276.

¶ 72. A decree in bankruptcy, if rendered by a court which has jurisdiction over the estate, is conclusive upon claims; unless attacked in the bankrupt court for fraud, it cannot be collaterally attacked in other courts.—Benedict v. Smith, 48 Mich. 593.

¶ 73. A decree in bankruptcy is conclusive of nonliability unless something has been done to remove its effect.—Craig v. Seits, 63 Mich. 727.

¶ 74. A discharge in bankruptcy cannot be treated by another court as void as to any particular creditor of whose person the bankruptcy court did not obtain jurisdiction by service of notice; bankruptcy proceedings are not strictly in personam.—Benedict v. Smith, 48 Mich. 593.

§ 14. Liabilities of trustee for wrong or neglect.

Pleading, see post § 20.
Evidence in action for neglect or wrong, see post § 21.

¶ 75. In an action against an assignee in bankruptcy for wilful neglect to give notice by mail of creditor's meetings, it is for the jury to determine whether notice had been mailed; if so, it is unimportant whether it was received.—Russell v. Phelps, 42 Mich. 377.

¶ 76. In an action against a bankrupt's assignee for wilful neglect to notify creditors of meetings in bankruptcy, it was shown that the second meeting of creditors had been adjourned. Held, that although the Bankrupt Law does not provide for such adjournment it was not error to call the jury's attention to the want of any notice of the adjourned meeting in connection with the evidence as to whether notice was given of the regular meeting.—Russell v. Phelps, 42 Mich. 377.

¶ 77. When an assignee in bankruptcy has sold property his authority as assignee ceases, and his neglect to deliver it is a personal breach of duty, not official.—Sheldon v. Rounds, 40 Mich. 425.

¶ 77a. Where an assignee in bankruptcy as officer of court has authority to make a sale, he is liable in trover if he actually makes a sale and subsequently refuses to deliver the property sold.—Ives v. Tregent, 29 Mich. 390.

¶ 78. An assignee in bankruptcy is liable in damages to creditors of the bankrupt if he wilfully omits or improperly performs official duties that are clearly prescribed and do not involve the exercise of discretion or judicial powers, and does so with intent to injure such creditors.—Russell v. Phelps, 42 Mich. 377.

¶ 79. An assignee in bankruptcy, as representative of all the bankrupt's creditors, is the proper person to take proceedings in their behalf to set aside conveyances made by the bankrupt in fraud of their rights; if he refuses, their remedy is by application to the court which appointed the assignee.—McMaster v. Campbell, 41 Mich. 513.

¶ 80. An assignee appointed for a corporation under the Bankrupt Laws of the United States represents both the corporation and its creditors, and the defense of irregular organization cannot be urged against him.—Chubb v. Upton, 95 U. S. 665, 24 L. ed. 523.

¶ 80a. Whether an assignee in bankruptcy who has begun proceedings in the federal court to foreclose a mortgage held by the bankrupt can, without the consent of the federal court, be made defendant in proceedings taken in a state court so to foreclose a prior mortgage as to affect rights under the first mentioned mortgage, quære.—Avery v. Ryerson, 34 Mich. 362.

¶ 81. A trustee in bankruptcy, intervening in a suit involving the rights of the bankrupt, as allowed by the bankruptcy court, and by the trial court, becomes a party for all the purposes of the suit, and thus carries with him his character as trustee in bankruptcy.—Rennells v. Potter, 198 Mich. 49.

¶ 82. Whether, under the bankrupt law which requires suits between assignees and adverse claimants to be brought within two years from the time when the cause of action accrued, a person claiming as purchaser at an assignee's sale can bring such action where the assignee himself has allowed two years to pass without doing so after the adverse claimant's assertion of title, quære.—Wisner v. Brown, 50 Mich. 553, affirmed 122 U. S. 214, 30 L. ed. 1205, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1156.

¶ 83. A trustee in bankruptcy having elected to sue in a state court for recovery of money paid by the bankrupt as a preference, his suit is governed by the practice in that court.—Detroit Trust Co. v. Old Nat. Bank of Grand Rapids, 155 Mich. 61.

¶ 84. Goods sold and removed before bankruptcy cannot be seized by a United States marshal outside of his own district for the protection of the rights of the assignee.—Carr v. Phillips, 39 Mich. 319.

Necessity of leave to sue, see ante § 15, ¶ 80a.
Ouster of state suits or jurisdiction, see post § 17.
Right to sue in equity, see post § 18.

¶ 85. In suits that can only be maintained under the Bankrupt Act the United States courts have exclusive jurisdiction.—Voorhies v. Frisbie, 25 Mich. 476.

¶ 86. Whether an issue could be framed and trial had in the federal courts in an action for damages against a bankrupt's assignee for wilful neglect of duty to the injury of creditors, quære.—Russell v. Phelps, 42 Mich. 377.

¶ 87. The bankruptcy court has exclusive jurisdiction of suits to determine an assignee's right to property, where the right is disputed under the exemption clause of the Bankrupt Law. This is so, at least, where a selection or valuation is necessary for setting apart the exempted property.—Sheldon v. Rounds, 40 Mich. 425.

¶ 89. The holder of a title adverse to that of a purchaser at a sale made by an assignee in bankruptcy pursuant to order of court, has no right to assert title as against the assignee or his grantee, on the ground that failure to confirm the sale rendered the deed invalid; as in such case the property is still in the control of the federal court.—Potter v. Martin, 122 Mich. 542.

¶ 90. It seems that the state courts have jurisdiction of a creditor's action against an assignee for damages from wilful omission or improper performance of his official duties.—Russell v. Phelps, 42 Mich. 377.

¶ 91. State courts have jurisdiction of proceedings by a trustee in bankruptcy to set aside conveyances of property alleged to have been made in fraud of the Bankruptcy Law.—Lyon v. Clark, 124 Mich. 100.

¶ 92. A state court has no jurisdiction of a bill in equity, filed by an assignee in bankruptcy, to set aside a conveyance made by a bankruptcy in fraud of the Bankrupt Act.—Voorhies v. Frisbie, 25 Mich. 476.

¶ 93. A trustee in bankruptcy may sue for the recovery of money paid as a preference, either in the federal or state courts, but if he chooses the state courts, he must sue in that court which would have had jurisdiction if bankruptcy had not intervened.—Detroit Trust Co. v. Old Nat. Bank of Grand Rapids, 155 Mich. 61.

¶ 94. The United States circuit court has power to issue an injunction in a suit by an assignee in bankruptcy brought in such court to remove the cloud on his title caused by a levy under an attachment issued by a state court, antedating the bankruptcy proceedings less than four months.—Chapman v. Brewer, 114 U. S. 158, 29 L. ed. 83, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 799.

§ 17. ——Effect of bankruptcy on other proceedings.

See also ante ¶ 14.
Other prior action pending or brought as ground for abatement, see Abatement, §§ 10-14.

¶ 96. Where a state court has already acquired jurisdiction of litigation in regard to property in its custody, it is not necessarily divested of jurisdiction thereof by bankruptcy proceedings in the federal courts.—Austin v. Hayden, 171 Mich. 38.

¶ 97. Where pending foreclosure and before decree the mortgagor was declared a bankrupt, the bankruptcy court does not have absolute and exclusive jurisdiction, and is not entitled to the entire administration of the bankrupt's property.—Jerome v. McCarter, 94 U. S. 734, 24 L. ed. 136.

¶ 98. Proceedings in a state court to foreclose a mortgage upon property in the custody of the federal court in bankruptcy are not to be taken without leave of the latter court.—Owen v. Potter, 115 Mich. 556.

¶ 99. On an appeal from the justice's court the appearance of the defendant before the circuit court opposing the entry of judgment on the ground that the defendant had in the interim from the appeal been adjudged a bankrupt, and that such bankruptcy proceedings had the effect of staying the proceedings under act of July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Rev. Stat., chap. 541), cannot prevent the circuit court from entering judgment when no proof as to the truth of the assertions has been made, and it did not appear that plaintiff admitted it.—Charles Bakrow & Co. v. Totten, 146 Mich. 57.

§ 18. ——Rights of action by trustee.

What constitute assets, see ante § 4.

Right to enjoin interference after sale, see also ante ¶ 20.

Right to institute contempt proceedings, effect of bankruptcy and assignment of assets to reduce claim to debt enforceable by execution, see also Contempt, I.

¶ 100. Under the National Bankruptcy Act, § 67e, prohibiting preferences, and section 70, providing that the trustee shall have the title of the bankrupt, an action of trover will lie since the transfer is void, but assumpsit will not lie to recover the value of goods sold to a third person and still in the tort feasor's possession.—Lyon v. Clark, 129 Mich. 381.

¶¶ 101, 102. A trustee in bankruptcy of a husband who had been awarded in a divorce suit the proceeds of a trust fund held by the wife may join with the husband in an application to the court for a contempt proceeding to enforce the payment of the claim against the wife.—Carnahan v. Carnahan, 143 Mich. 390.

¶ 103. A bill filed by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover money paid by the bankrupt as a preference will not be sustained where it appears that the intervention of a court of equity is not necessary to do justice, there being no indication that a judgment against defendant will not be perfectly good.—Detroit Trust Co. v. Old Nat. Bank of Grand Rapids, 155 Mich. 61.

¶ 105. A trustee in bankruptcy, because of the absence of an adequate remedy at law, may maintain a bill in equity to reach property fraudulently conveyed and for an accounting where officers and directors of the bankrupt have fraudulently conspired with a bank to have notes due the bank of which they were accommodation makers, sureties or indorsers, canceled and paid in preference to the claims of other creditors, since complainant could only recover sufficient to satisfy the claim, and in equity alone such an amount can be reached and marshaled in liquidation of claims.—Johnson v. Harrison, 199 Mich. 221.

¶ 106. Under a contract for the sale of machinery to the bankrupt company of which complainant is trustee, the vendor reclaimed the property for failure to make certain payments. On complainant's bill for an accounting against the vendor, held, that whatever rights complainant might have as to the part of the purchase price paid by the bankrupt under the contract, they were enforceable in an action at law, equity being without jurisdiction.—Detroit Trust Co. v. Wormer Machinery Co., 177 Mich. 156.

¶ 108. The fact that a creditor's suit pending and undisposed of would be suspended by § 11a of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, 30 U. S. Stat. L. 549, and the discharge of the bankrupt would release him from the debt does not affect the right of a trustee to maintain a creditor's bill to reach property fraudulently conveyed, under § 70 of the act as amended in 1910, 36 U. S. Stat. L. 838, 840.—Grand Rapids Trust Co. v. Nichols, 199 Mich. 126.

¶ 109. The fact that all the creditors do not participate in a fund does not prevent a trustee in bankruptcy from reducing a fund to his possession in an equitable suit to reach assets of a corporation fraudulently conveyed, since the court can guard the rights of all parties.—Grand Rapids Trust Co. v. Nichols, 199 Mich. 126.

¶ 110. A trustee in bankruptcy is entitled to mandamus to compel the treasurer of the state board of education to pay over money due the bankrupt upon a contract, notwithstanding subcontractors and laborers have filed claims to the money so held, where such claimants have also filed claims in bankruptcy.—Ford v. State Board of Education, 166 Mich. 658.

¶ 111. A trustee in bankruptcy who, before the rendition of a judgment in favor of a creditor of the bankrupt in a garnishment suit brought within four months prior to the filing of an involuntary petition in bankruptcy, obtains an order from the federal court requiring the garnished fund to be paid to him, is not guilty of laches sufficient to defeat his right to such fund by reason of his failure to intervene in the garnishment proceeding.—Wilson v. Van Buren Co. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., 184 Mich. 530.

¶ 112. The finding of the referee in involuntary contested bankruptcy proceedings that the bankrupt company was insolvent and had been so for four months prior to the date of the filing of the petition and had created preferences in behalf of certain creditors is conclusive in any collateral inquiry, and is binding on the creditors, whether they appear or not, upon the ground that the proceedings are in a sense in rem, and the law makes all creditors parties to the proceedings.—Johnson v. Gratiot County State Bank, 193 Mich. 452.

§ 20. ——Pleading.

Pleading new promise, see post § 24.
General law of pleading, see Pleading; Equity, VII.
Effect of several plea of discharge as abandoning former joint plea by defendant bankrupt, see Pleading, VII, IX.

¶ 113. An allegation that W. was declared a bankrupt, and that "by virtue thereof all the property, effects and rights of property of W. became divested out of him and vested in H., the official or general assignee in bankruptcy, appointed and designated under the act of congress by the said district court," is a sufficient allegation that H. was the assignee in the bankruptcy of W.—Williams v. Hubbard, 1 Mich. 446.

¶ 114. Where a declaration against an assignee in bankruptcy set forth facts constituting a breach of duty, and alleged that plaintiffs as creditors of the bankrupt were thereby deprived of their claim against his estate, and that by means thereof the estate had been exhausted and the plaintiffs wholly deprived of their rights therein, the allegation of damage was held to be sufficiently specific to admit evidence showing whether the entire claim, and, if not, what part of it, was lost because of the facts of which complaint was made.—Russell v. Phelps, 42 Mich. 377.

¶ 115. In pleading a discharge in bankruptcy the notice need not set up facts necessary to show jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court including an allegation of residence in the district where said court is situate.—Bryant v. Kinyon, 127 Mich. 152.

¶ 116. Composition proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act are in the nature of accord and satisfaction. In an action after the time for performance has expired, if plaintiff can make out his case without relying upon or showing the composition, defendant must not only set up the composition proceedings in bar, but must aver performance on his part or sufficient excuse for nonpayment.—Harrison v. Gamble, 69 Mich. 96.

Burden of proof as to discharge, see also ante ¶ 58.
Preference as jury question, see also ante ¶ 33.
General law of evidence, see Evidence.

¶ 117. In an action by a trustee in bankruptcy against a preferred creditor to recover preferences, the bankruptcy proceedings are admissible for the purpose of showing that on the day of the filing of the petition the bankrupt company was insolvent and had been so for four months prior thereto, and that the directors had knowledge thereof.—Johnson v. Gratiot County State Bank, 193 Mich. 452.

¶ 118. In an action by a trustee in bankruptcy against a preferred creditor to recover a preference, where the schedules annexed to the petition of bankruptcy were received in evidence to show the assets of the company and not on the question of solvency, held that evidence tending to show that the assets were materially reduced as the result of a cyclone which passed over the bankrupt's plant a few months prior to the adjudication, was properly refused, as the question of insolvency of the bankrupt was foreclosed by the bankruptcy proceedings.—Johnson v. Gratiot County State Bank, 193 Mich. 452.

¶ 119. Unpleasant relations between a bankrupt's assignee and the attorney of a creditor may be shown in an action by the latter against the assignee for damages arising from his wilful omission to notify the creditor of meetings in bankruptcy or to secure his claim as required by the Bankrupt Act.—Russell v. Phelps, 42 Mich. 377.

¶ 120. In an action against an assignee in bankruptcy for wilful negligence, it is admissible to show the custom in respect to those proceedings wherein he was at fault, if it tends to show that a uniform practice existed in conformity with the legal construction of the Bankrupt Law.—Russell v. Phelps, 42 Mich. 377.

¶ 121. In an action against a bankrupt's assignee for wilful injury to creditors from his omission or improper performance of his duties as to notifying them of meetings, or retaining sufficient funds to provide for their known but undetermined claims, the plaintiffs must prove the bankruptcy proceeding and the appointment and qualification of the assignee and his entry on the discharge of his duties, and show that plaintiffs were creditors and that defendant knew it, and wilfully and with intent to injure them omitted or improperly performed the duties referred to as alleged.—Russell v. Phelps, 42 Mich. 377.

¶ 122. A discharge in bankruptcy is a complete defense in an action in some other court upon a claim which the bankrupt omitted by mistake from his schedule of debts.—Graves v. Wright, 53 Mich. 425.

¶ 123. After a composition with creditors and the bankrupt's discharge, it is too late for the creditors to claim that a conveyance made by the bankrupt before the bankruptcy was fraudulent as against them.—McMaster v. Campbell, 41 Mich. 513.

¶ 124. A creditor of a bankrupt who was a party to the bankruptcy proceedings and recognized their validity, and who took a note to revive his discharged claim after the sale in bankruptcy of the property claimed in satisfaction of his debt, cannot avoid the effect of the sale by showing that the purchaser's title was obtained by fraud.—Preston v. Newcomb, 149 Mich. 512.

¶ 125. Where no debts are proved against a bankrupt, and all possible claims have outlawed and all expenses are paid, the trust of the assignee is terminated, and all property undisposed of reverts to the bankrupt or to his estate.—Steevens v. Earles, 25 Mich. 40.

¶ 126. A discharge in bankruptcy does not reinvest the bankrupt with the property transferred to his assignee.—Oliver v. Sanborn, 60 Mich. 346.

§ 24. ——New promise avoiding discharge in bankruptcy.

New promise to pay barred debt, see Limitations of Actions, VI, A.

¶ 128. A new promise to avoid discharge in bankruptcy must be express and unqualified but need not be in writing.—Craig v. Seitz, 63 Mich. 727.

¶ 129. The moral obligation forms a sufficient consideration for a promise to pay a debt barred by a bankruptcy discharge.—Edwards v. Nelson, 51 Mich. 121; Craig v. Seitz, 63 Mich. 727.

¶ 130. The discharged bankrupt's telling his creditor that he is going to pay the claim, and that the creditor shall never lose a cent of it, does not, though taken in connection with his statement to the creditor's agent that he will pay all his old matters in a short time, amount to a new promise.—Brewer v. Boynton, 71 Mich. 254.

¶ 131. Where a creditor, in consideration of a bankrupt agreeing to pay his claim in full, advances the money necessary to effect a composition with creditors, and such creditor also receives his share of the proceeds of the composition, and the bankrupt is discharged, and, at the time when the bankrupt is about to renew his note, which the creditor had indorsed so that the bankrupt might obtain money to effect the composition, upon being asked by the creditor if he would include therein the amount coming to him, refused, but promised that he would pay it after he paid the note, such latter promise must be deemed to be a mere attempt to renew or revive the former void agreement, and to be likewise fraudulent and void as to the creditors.—Lieblein v. George, 103 Mich. 462.

¶ 132. A new promise need not be specially counted on in declaring upon a claim otherwise barred by bankruptcy discharge, but may be proved when defendant sets up the discharge.—Craig v. Seitz, 63 Mich. 727.

Sufficiency of proof to overcome presumption of legitimacy, see also post § 10.

¶ 1. Legitimacy is presumed; and where there has been opportunity for intercourse between husband and wife within such a period that a child born of the wife may be legitimate, there must be strong evidence to overcome the presumption and disprove the fact of their intercourse.—Egbert v. Greenwalt, 44 Mich. 245.

¶ 2. The rule that a child born in lawful wedlock will be presumed to be legitimate is as old as the common law and one of the strongest presumptions in the law.—People v. Case, 171 Mich. 282.

¶ 3. The ancient rule that a child born in lawful wedlock is presumed to be legitimate made the presumption of legitimacy conclusive, if the husband was within the four seas; but the modern rule permits the presumption to be overcome when the proof is very convincing.—People v. Case, 171 Mich. 282.

¶ 4. In absence of proof the law presumes that the husband had access to his wife during the period in which he might have become the father of her child, and that he is the father of the child. This presumption is not rebutted by the fact that the wife had intercourse with another.—People v. Case, 171 Mich. 282.

¶ 5. The presumption of legitimacy of a child born in lawful wedlock is so strong that it cannot be overcome by admissions by the wife of her adultery while cohabiting with her husband.—People v. Case, 171 Mich. 282.

¶ 6. Presumption of legitimacy of a child born in lawful wedlock cannot be overcome by testimony of either husband or wife that sexual intercourse did not take place between them during the period when such child must have been begotten.—People v. Case, 171 Mich. 282.

¶ 9. The law being liberal in the admission of evidence of pedigree and legitimacy, it was sufficient to prove the legitimacy of a grantor, claimed to have been the sole heir of a decedent, by testimony of the co-grantor and his own that she was widow and he the only child, their testimony being also supported by that of neighbors who knew them to the same effect.—Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 Mich. 410.

§ 2. Status, custody and disabilities.

Name of bastard, see Names.
Statutes of descent, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11796-11798, 13913, ¶ 6.

¶ 10. Illegitimate children are entitled under How. St., § 5773a, to share as heirs-at-law in their mother's estate.—Watson v. Lion Brewing Co., 61 Mich. 595.

¶ 11. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 9065, providing that every illegitimate child shall be considered as an heir of his mother, and shall inherit her estate in like manner as if born in lawful wedlock, but shall not be allowed to claim as representing his mother any part of the estate of any of her kindred, either lineal or collateral, the child of an illegitimate son, the latter dying before the death of his mother, will inherit the estate of the grandmother.—Goodell v. Yeserski, 170 Mich. 578.

§ 3. Legitimation and adoption.

Adoption of children, see Adoption.
Statutes regulating adoption, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14139.
Legitimation of, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11798.

§ 4. Bastardy proceedings.

Further as to nature of the proceeding, see post § 6.

¶ 12. Bastardy proceedings are special, statutory, and neither strictly criminal nor strictly civil in their nature. They are quasi-criminal so far as they aim to protect the public, but they involve only civil consequences.—Cross v. People, 8 Mich. 113; Semon v. People, 42 Mich. 141; In re Cannon, 47 Mich. 481; People v. Harty, 49 Mich. 490; People v. Phalen, 49 Mich. 492; People ex rel. Pangborn v. Smith, 65 Mich. 1.

¶ 13. The remedy in bastardy cases is purely statutory, and the proceeding is in its nature criminal.—People v. Hamilton, 95 Mich. 210.

¶ 13a. The guardian of minor complainant in bastardy proceedings was entitled to employ counsel to protect her interests, since such proceedings are not strictly criminal, and the statute (Comp. L. 1897, §§ 2556, 2561, 2569) prescribing the qualifications and duties of prosecuting attorneys does not apply.—Harley v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 140 Mich. 642.

¶ 14. The object of prosecutions for bastardy is the protection of the public from the support of bastards by requiring the putative father to contribute, and to furnish indemnity to the authorities and assistance to the mother.—People v. Hamilton, 95 Mich. 210.

¶ 15. The main purpose of the bastardy act is to indemnify the public for the support of the child, and it does not apply to cases where the child lives out of the state, even though it was begotten within the state.—Sutfin v. People, 43 Mich. 37.

¶ 16. Whether bastardy proceedings can be instituted in any court outside of the county in which the child was born and is living, quære.—People v. Harty, 49 Mich. 490.

¶ 17. Where a mother and child are actual residents of a county in Michigan at the time a bastardy complaint is made, the fact that the child is born outside the state is unimportant in determining whether the proceeding is properly brought in said county of Michigan.—People v. Oppenheimer, 170 Mich. 505.

§ 5. ——Abatement of proceeding.

Abatement of actions generally, see Abatement and Revival.

¶ 18. In a prosecution for bastardy the pendency of prior proceedings in behalf of the same complainant, and for the same cause, is not a bar to an examination upon a second complaint.—People v. Hamilton, 95 Mich. 210.

¶ 19. Where a respondent in bastardy proceedings dies after conviction, the judgment, under chapter 153, 2 Comp. L. 1897, abates, and his administrator cannot be held thereunder.—People v. Kemppainen, 163 Mich. 186.

¶ 20. The death of an illegitimate child does not abate a pending bastardy proceeding; since the father is liable for its support until the time of death.—People v. Grunland, 187 Mich. 52.

§ 6. ——Before justice; complaint, process and recognizance to appear.

Bond to comply with judgment, see post § 14.

Making and reception of complaint by woman, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7753.

Issuance of warrant and hearing and recognizance to appear, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7754.

Information by superintendent of the poor to justice to make inquiry, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7760.

Examination of woman on information by poor superintendent, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7761.

Place where warrant for arrest may be executed, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7762.

¶ 21. The proceedings before the justice are merely preliminary to the trial of the issue in the circuit court.—People ex rel. Pangborn v. Smith, 65 Mich. 1.

¶ 22. In a proceeding to compel the support of a bastard child by its father, no complaint distinct from the "accusation and examination" of the mother in writing, under oath, is required. And where such accusation and examination appear, preceded by a formal complaint made by another person, the latter may be treated as surplusage.—Cross v. People, 10 Mich. 24.

¶ 23. Where the complaint showed in the body of it that it was sworn to before the proper justice, the words "before me" in the jurat were held unnecessary.—Cross v. People, 10 Mich. 24.

¶ 24. Bastardy proceedings are not civil to the extent that one under arrest under a capias ad respondendum or attending in response thereto, being a nonresident, is privileged from arrest on a bastardy charge.—Cady v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 139 Mich. 618.

¶ 26. A complaint for bastardy made the 20th of March, 1880, setting forth the pregnancy and mentioning that it arose from three acts of intercourse had Sept. 15, Oct. 1 and Oct. 15, 1879, but which of these the complainant was unable to state, is sufficient, where the child was born June 26, 1880.—Hamilton v. People, 46 Mich. 186.

¶ 27. Where a recognizance binding a person to appear and answer a complaint in bastardy proceedings requires him to appear day by day and not depart from court without leave, it remains in force, though the cause be continued as permitted by Comp. L. 1871, § 1975, How St., § 2006, and it is not discharged by the respondent's appearance on the first day of the next term of court after it is given.—People v. Phalen, 49 Mich. 492.

¶ 28. The liability of a surety on a recognizance for the appearance and answer of a respondent charged with bastardy under How. St., chap. 53, § 2005, cannot exceed that of his principal.—People v. Morrison, 75 Mich. 30.

§ 7. ——Pleadings and issues.

Relevancy of evidence to prove other offenses, see post § 8.
Admissions by others as evidence against defendant, see Evidence VII, C.
Issues to be tried, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7756.

¶ 29. No formal issue is necessary in bastardy cases. The complaint stands in lieu of a declaration, and no plea need be entered; but if defendant does not admit the charge it is to be left to the jury.—Cross v. People, 10 Mich. 24; People ex rel. Pangborn v. Smith, 65 Mich. 1.

¶ 30. Plea in abatement is inadmissible in a bastardy case after respondent has recognized to appear in circuit court and answer complaint.—People ex rel. Pangborn v. Smith, 65 Mich. 1.

¶ 31. If a plea in abatement is admissible at all in bastardy proceedings it is not after the defendant has recognized to appear in the circuit court and answered to the complaint.—People ex rel. Pangborn v. Smith, 65 Mich. 1.

¶ 32. A conviction in bastardy proceedings was not warranted, where the time of begetting was fixed in the testimony at an earlier date than stated in the complaint, and there was no testimony to show that the child was begotten at the time charged.—People v. Wilson, 136 Mich. 298.

On issues in other than bastardy proceedings, see also ante § 1.
Competency of woman as witness, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7756.

¶ 33. A woman suing for seduction, who was married to another man after the time of the alleged seduction and was thereby rendered incompetent to testify as to the nonintercourse with her husband (in order to impute to defendant paternity) may testify to acts of intercourse with defendant, since conception is not an essential element of the cause of action.—Rabeke v. Baer, 115 Mich. 328.

¶ 34. Plaintiff in an action for seduction, who was married to a third person in April following the acts complained of, and gave birth to a child in September, cannot testify that she first met her husband in February of the year they were married, as the tendency of such testimony would be to rebut the presumption of legitimacy which obtains as to children born in lawful wedlock, and which public policy requires to be preserved.—Rabeke v. Baer, 115 Mich. 328.

¶ 35. The physician who attended the mother may testify that she told him who was the father of her child.—People v. Cole, 113 Mich. 83.

¶ 36. Resemblance of a bastard as evidencing paternity, may be noted by the jury where the child is in court.—People v. White, 53 Mich. 537.

¶ 37. A conviction of bastardy was not reversed because the prosecution asked the jury to consider the alleged resemblance between respondent and the child.—People v. Wing, 115 Mich. 698.

¶ 38. In bastardy proceedings it is error to admit evidence that the offense was committed at a time and place other than those specified in the complaint.—Hull v. People, 41 Mich. 167.

¶ 39. A complaint in a bastardy case may properly be read to the jury, and the effect it might have by itself in evidence need not be considered where the complainant was thoroughly examined and cross-examined as was also the defendant, and the examination of the complainant covered all the matters set out in the complaint and the jury acted on the evidence.—Hamilton v. People, 46 Mich. 186.

¶ 40. Where the preliminary deposition of the complaining witness in a bastardy case is admitted in evidence, it is unnecessary to have her detail its contents, or to ask her if she remembers the same, and the court exercises a proper discretion in rejecting the question.—People v. Keefer, 103 Mich. 83.

§ 9. ——Admissibility of other acts or of character.

Instructions as to other acts, see post § 11.

¶ 41. A party charged with bastardy has a right to show that others have had sexual intercourse with the complaining witness about the time the child was begotten, and he may show this by the testimony of such persons themselves, their credibility being wholly for the jury.—People v. Kaminsky, 73 Mich. 637.

¶ 42. In bastardy proceedings, testimony as to acts of intercourse and undue familiarity both before and after the alleged act resulting in conception, are admissible as bearing upon the probability of the intercourse at the time stated in the complaint.—People v. Jamieson, 124 Mich. 164.

¶ 43. In a prosecution for bastardy, testimony establishing other acts of intercourse, had a legitimate tendency to prove the defendant guilty of the ocense for which he was being tried, and therefore to contradict his testimony on direct examination in denial of the charge.—People v. Dupounce, 133 Mich. 1.

¶ 44. In a bastardy prosecution evidence of acts of intercourse other than the one charged in the complaint is admissible as bearing upon the probability of the particular act having occurred as charged.—People v. Schilling, 110 Mich. 412.

¶ 45. In a bastardy case evidence of previous acts of intimacy and sexual intercourse between the parties is competent.—People v. Keefer, 103 Mich. 83.

¶ 46. In bastardy proceedings, testimony that at about the time the child was begotten the reputation of the prosecutrix for chastity was bad, was not competent.—People v. Wilson, 136 Mich. 298.

§ 10. ——Weight and sufficiency of evidence.

On issues in other than bastardy proceedings, see also ante § 1.

¶ 47. The rules as to weight of testimony are the same as in civil cases. The jury need not be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt before they can convict—Semon v. People, 42 Mich. 141; People v. Phalen, 49 Mich. 492.

¶ 48. In proceedings for bastardy the jury need not be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt before they can convict.—Semon v. People, 42 Mich. 141; People v. Phalen, 49 Mich. 492.

¶ 49. The rules of evidence applying to criminal cases as to the proof required to find against defendant are not applied to bastardy proceedings, since they are not strictly criminal in their nature—Harley v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 140 Mich. 642.

¶ 50. In bastardy proceedings complainant testified that defendant got her with child in May, 1907, at Detroit, where she had lived with her parents all of her life; that four months thereafter she went to Cincinnati, Ohio, for the purpose of concealing the situation; that the child was born January 20, 1908, at Cincinnati, where complainant remained for two years more, supporting herself and the child by her own labor; that she then returned to Detroit and remained two years working for her living; and that she again went twice to Cincinnati, one visit being for the purpose of placing the child in a home and returning to Detroit to marry defendant. Complaint was filed June 18, 1910, at which time complainant had been living six or seven months in Detroit. She spoke in her testimony of Detroit as her home and stated that when she went away the second time it was with the intention of returning to Detroit to make her home there. Held, the evidence was sufficient to warrant submitting to the jury the question of her residence in Detroit.—People v. Oppenheimer, 170 Mich. 595.

¶ 51. In a statutory proceeding to determine whether or not the husband was the father of the child of a married woman, the testimony of the mother that she had connection with one not her husband was admitted, and the case was submitted to the jury. Held, that whatever force such testimony had in showing that respondent was father of the child was outweighed by the presumption of legitimacy, and that there was not sufficient testimony tending to rebut the presumption of legitimacy to make a question of fact for the jury.—People v. Case, 171 Mich. 282.

¶ 52. An order requiring a father to pay a sum of money for the support of an illegitimate child prior to its death, cannot be sustained when not supported by evidence as to the amount expended or the liability incurred therefor.—People v. Grunland, 187 Mich. 52.

¶ 53. In a bastardy case where the evidence clearly established the act of intercourse and the time when the child was begotten, it was immaterial that the precise place was on the way from one party rather than another in the vicinity.—People v. Keefer, 103 Mich. 83.

§ 11. ——Trial and instructions.

Continuance and extension of recognizance or taking new recognizance, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7755.

¶ 54. A conviction of bastardy was not reversed because the people's counsel asked the jury to consider the alleged resemblance between respondent and the child.—People v. Wing, 115 Mich. 698.

¶ 55. It is not clearly error to permit argument in a bastardy case upon the resemblance between the child and the respondent, as the child may properly enough be in the court room, and the jury cannot be prevented from noticing it.—People v. White, 53 Mich. 537.

¶ 56. In a bastardy case in preserving an exception to a ruling refusing to strike out part of the testimony, the court's remark, "Exceptions don't amount to anything in this case, I suppose you understand," was technically correct, and its tendency was not to prejudice respondent's rights with the jury.—People v. Keefer, 108 Mich. 83.

¶ 57. Where evidence of acts of intercourse other than the one charged in the complaint for bastardy has been properly admitted, an instruction so framed as to justify the inference that respondent may be convicted upon proof of some act other than the one so charged is erroneous.—People v. Schilling, 110 Mich. 412.

¶ 58. The judge's reference to the time of intercourse in a bastardy case as "on or about" the alleged date cannot be regarded as having misled the jury into believing they might find that it took place on another date than the one alleged, where in six other places in the charge the proof was specifically confined to that date and one of them emphatically limited the question to that time.—People v. Keefer, 103 Mich. 83.

¶ 59. An instruction in a bastardy proceeding as to the respondent's conduct generally towards women and children held sufficient.—People v. Hansen, 183 Mich. 565.

§ 12. ——Questions of law and fact.

¶ 60. A jury cannot pass on objections to the sufficiency of a complaint for bastardy nor decide whether evidence has been improperly received under it.—Hamilton v. People, 46 Mich. 186.

¶ 61. Whether the respondent in a bastardy proceeding was the parent of the complaining witness' child is a question for the jury, where she has made conflicting statements with reference thereto.—People v. Hansen, 183 Mich. 565.

§ 13. ——Judgment and costs.

General law of judgments, see Judgments.
Judgment as bar of other actions or as estoppel of facts decided, see Former Adjudication.
Form of judgment, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7756.

¶ 62. No judgment known to the common law follows the verdict. Defendant, if found guilty, is adjudged to be the father of the child.—Cross v. People, 8 Mich. 113.

¶ 63. Order for imprisonment of the putative father in Detroit house of correction until he shall give bond for support of child is illegal, since that prison is for punishments alone.—In re Kaminsky, 70 Mich. 653.

¶ 65. An order in a bastardy case that the respondent pay a certain amount per month until the further order of the court is void under People v. Wing, 115 Mich 698; People v. Jamieson, 124 Mich. 164.

¶ 66. An order of maintenance which provides that unless the proper bond, conditioned for the performance of the terms of the order be executed by a certain date, the father shall be committed to jail until he shall execute and deliver such bond, "and until the further order of the court," is erroneous, in that it permits the restraint of the father after the required bond is furnished and approved.—People v. Wing, 115 Mich. 698.

¶ 67. Comp. L. 1871, § 1979; How. St., § 2010, provides that the amount of a judgment in bastardy proceedings on the part of a woman should be paid to her or to the county superintendent of the poor, or to both in specified proportions. Held, that the omission to direct that the mother shall provide some part of the child's maintenance is not error where the judgment provides to what extent the father shall assist her.—Hull v. People, 41 Mich. 167.

¶ 68. An order which, after adjudging defendant to be the father of a bastard child, directs him to pay towards the support of the child a specified sum, "with the assistance of the mother," is bad for uncertainty. It should definitely fix the liability of the defendant.—Cross v. People, 10 Mich. 24.

¶ 69. The bastardy act is to secure the public against the necessity of supporting bastard children; and the expense of enforcing it against the father of such a child falls on the public and not on the child's mother.—Waite v. Washington, 44 Mich. 388; People v. Phalen, 49 Mich. 492.

¶ 70. In a prosecution for bastardy no costs can be awarded against defendant, the statute providing for none.—Booth v. McQueen, 1 D. 41; Cross v. People, 8 Mich. 113.

§ 14. ——Bond or commitment.

Recognizance to appear for trial, see ante § 6.
Provisions in judgment or order as to bond, see ante § 13.
Requisites and form of bond, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7757.

¶ 71. A judgment in a bastardy case requiring respondent to file a bond without sureties as an alternative to imprisonment does him no legal injury unless imprisonment itself would be unlawful.—People v. White, 53 Mich. 537.

¶ 72. Imprisonment of the person adjudged to be the father of a bastard child is provided for not as a punishment but only as a detention until the proper bond is given; hence, such person cannot be imprisoned in the Detroit house of correction, which is a prison provided for the confinement of persons convicted of criminal offenses.—In re Kaminsky, 70 Mich. 653.

¶ 73. The putative father of bastard child cannot be ordered to be imprisoned in Detroit house of correction, which is a punitive prison.—In re Kaminsky, 70 Mich. 653.

§ 15. Discharge or compromise.

General mode of obtaining discharge from imprisonment of poor debtors, see Civil Arrest.

Provisions for discharge of person imprisoned for noncompliance with judgment, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7758.

Subsequent action on the bond, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7759.

Power of superintendent of the poor to compromise with putative father, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7763.

§ 16. Review of proceedings.

Certiorari to review bastardy proceedings, see Certiorari.

Reviewability on appeal or error, see Appeal and Error, III.

Stay bond on proceedings for review, and liability on such bond, see Stay of Proceedings, II.

Harmless error in rulings, see generally Harmless Error.

¶ 74. Bastardy proceedings are purely statutory and the only method of review is by certiorari.—People v. Brannen, 173 Mich. 411.

¶ 75. Proceedings in the circuit court under the bastardy act cannot be removed into the Supreme Court by writ of error.—Cross v. People, 8 Mich. 113.

¶ 76. Where the record of a bastardy case on certiorari does not indicate that there was any dispute as to the identity of the child, the statement of counsel in his argument to the jury that the child was present in the court room within the jury's view will be taken as true.—People v. Wing, 115 Mich. 698.

BILLS OF LADING.

TREATS of formal written acknowledgments of receipt of goods for carriage under contract of affreightment of which the bill is the evidence, excluding mere shipping receipts and way bills, etc., as to which see Carriers, II, B.

Analysis.

§ 1. In general.
§ 2. Negotiation and transfer.
§ 3. ——As incident of draft or bill of exchange.
§ 4. As contract of carriage.
§ 5. As representing goods sold.

§ 1. In general.

Uniform Bills of Lading Act, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 8174-8229.

For the earlier statute, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 8165-8173.

[Note. The Carmack Amendment to the Federal Interstate Commerce Act has superseded state laws with respect to interstate matters.]

¶ 1. A bill of lading constitutes a contract between the parties thereto, and is evidence of the receipt of the goods, of their condition when received, of the contract of carriage, and to whom they are to be delivered; but it is not, as between the owner and the shipper, conclusive evidence of such receipt and condition.—Gibbons v. Robinson, 63 Mich. 146.

¶ 2. A bill of lading fixes the rights and liabilities of the parties when its terms have been agreed upon, and its acceptance without objection by the consignor is evidence of assent, which cannot be rebutted, in the absence of fraud or imposition, by showing that the consignor received it without reading or being aware of its conditions.—McMillan v. Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co., 16 Mich. 79.

¶ 3 In the absence of fraud or mistake a bill of lading free from ambiguity cannot be explained.—Perkett v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co., 175 Mich. 253.

As affecting delivery by carrier, see Carriers, II.

Sale by delivery and transfer of bill of lading, see Sales.

Pledges involving bills of lading, see Pledges.

¶ 4. An indorsement of a bill of lading does no more than assign the shipper's obligations and the property called for by the bill; it does not bind the indorser to do anything toward forwarding the property, or impose upon him any duty.—Maybee v. Tregent, 47 Mich. 495.

¶ 5. The transferee of a fictitious bill of lading, or of one fraudulently transferred, has no remedy against an indorser unless for the special wrong.—Maybee v. Tregent, 47 Mich. 495.

¶ 6. In an action by a bank as holder of a bill of lading, upon assignment from the consignor of a carload of potatoes, against a railroad company to recover damages for negligence in transportation and in making delivery to a stranger without requiring surrender to it of the original bill of lading properly indorsed, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that plaintiff was a bona fide owner of the bill of lading.—First Nat. Bank of Allegan v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 195 Mich. 1.

Right of bank receiving draft to wait until shipment arrives to collect, see also Banking, ¶ 105.

Liabilities of collecting banks on drafts with bill attached, see Banking § 37.

¶ 7. Where plaintiff, a shipper, delivers a bill of lading, with draft attached, to a bank for collection, and after a diversion of the shipment, the bank being unable to collect returns the bill of lading, plaintiff is entitled to maintain an action for conversion of the goods.—Perkett v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co., 175 Mich. 253.

§ 4. As contract of carriage.

Duty and liability of carrier under bill of lading, Carriers, II.

¶ 8. The Carmack Amendment has superseded all inconsistent state laws affecting bills for interstate transportation.—Harrison Granite Co. v. Grand Trunk Ry. System, 175 Mich. 144.

§ 5. As representing goods sold.

Bill of lading as token or symbol of the goods for purposes of sale of the goods, and title to such goods by transfer, see Sales, V, B.

¶ 1. A bond is not vitiated by the omission in the body of it of the Christian name of the principal obligor, he having executed the same by his full name.—Walbridge v. Spalding, 1 D. 451.

¶ 2. The fact that the obligors in a bond indorse it on the back and under the form of a property justification does not alter the essential character of their undertaking nor relieve them of liability.—Cunningham v. Hawkins, 163 Mich. 317.

¶ 3. Bonds are contracts between the parties.—Webster v. Jossman, 199 Mich. 98.

¶ 4. The obligees in a bond are presumed to have notice of its form and the reasonable import thereof.—Hall v. Parker, 37 Mich. 590.

¶ 5. A bond under seal imports a consideration.—Healey v. Newton, 96 Mich. 228.

¶ 6. A bond, especially a negotiable one, is a prima facie obligation of the obligor, if he has capacity to make it; and is binding on its face until the contrary be shown.—Township of Lincoln v. Cambria Iron Co., 103 U. S. 412, 26 L. ed. 518.

¶ 7. A joint and several bond under seal to refund at a given time future advances expressed to be for the benefit of one of the obligors is not void on its face as against the other for want of consideration.—Lee v. Wisner, 38 Mich. 82.

¶ 8. A sealed bond, signed by the obligors to pay a fixed sum of money into the bridge fund of the township where the obligors resided in case a certain bridge should be ordered built by the board of supervisors and given solely to induce them to build it, is a mere voluntary, gratuitous promise by them, and cannot be sustained as a gift and cannot be sustained and enforced as a subscription to an object of public utility or necessity, since under the law a seal may be impeached as to consideration.—Township of Danby v. Beebe, 147 Mich. 312.

¶ 9. On a bond conditioned to pay certain notes given by principals to their sureties on said notes by which bond they agree to pay the notes secured within thirty days after maturity, the sureties may recover the amount of the notes whether they have paid them or not.—Hall v. Nash, 10 Mich. 303.

¶ 10. A bond in these words: "Know all men by these presents, that I, A. B., principal, and C. D., E. F. and G. H., sureties, are held," etc., "for the payment of which sum well and truly to be made we bind ourselves, our heirs, executors and administrators, severally, firmly by these presents." is a joint as well as several bond.—St. Joseph County Sup'rs v. Coffenbury, 1 Mich. 355.

¶ 11. The addition of figures indicating a fraction to each signature to a bond does not limit or change the liability of the obligors to the obligee, whatever may be the effect in a suit for contribution.—Fourth Nat. Bank v. Olney, 63 Mich. 58.

¶ 12. A bond for money to be void upon the doing of a certain thing is in legal effect a contract to do that thing.—Healey v. Newton, 96 Mich. 228.

¶ 13. A bond given to secure the performance of a written contract is to be construed as if the contract were copied into the preamble of the condition of the bond.—Locke v. McVean, 33 Mich. 473.

¶ 14. The liability of sureties on a bond for faithful performance of a contract is determined by the bond and not by such written contract.—Stauber v. Ellett, 140 Mich. 271.

¶ 15. In an action on the bond of a sewing-machine agent it was held that all the papers connected with it and the material circumstances surrounding the parties, and which might be supposed to have been contemplated by them, should be considered together in determining the liability upon the bond where the contract secured by it was not otherwise clear.—White Sewing Machine Co. v. Mullins, 41 Mich. 339.

¶ 16. A bond, reciting possession of certain goods under a bill of sale and the obligor's desire to regain possession of them, and conditioned that the obligor should take possession of said goods "an inventory of which is hereto attached" and sell them, accounting to the obligees for the proceeds to a stated amount, is to be construed as referring to the bill of sale for a description of the goods and to the inventory merely as a more specific description but not as a description covering goods not covered by the bill of sale.—Wheeler v. Meyer, 95 Mich. 36.

¶ 17. A bond, conditioned for the sale and accounting to obligees of certain goods held for security "at the best price obtainable. at not less than manufacturer's prices," cannot be construed as requiring that "scrap" and second-hand goods included in the lot must be sold at manufacturer's prices, where a right of repossession was reserved to the obligees should they feel insecure and where the obligor was allowed to keep possession for three years afterwards and make sales from the stock of goods in the course of trade.—Wheeler v. Meyer, 95 Mich. 36.

¶ 18. A bond given by the defendant in foreclosure to the complainant, and conditioned to pay any decree that might be obtained if complainant would consent to the dissolution of a preliminary injunction issued in the case, is valid, for there is sufficient consideration to support it and, although not required by statute or practice of the courts, no rule of law or public policy forbids it.—Rynearson v. Fredenburg, 42 Mich. 412.

¶ 19. A bond does not take effect from the signing, but only from delivery or filing.—Hall v. Parker, 37 Mich. 590.

20. An antedated bond does not bind the sureties for the period preceding the date of its delivery if its language is not retrospective.—Hyatt v. Grover & Baker Sewing Mach. Co., 41 Mich. 225.

§ 3. Statutory and common law bonds.

Treating appeal bond as common law bond when appeal is abandoned, see Appeal, ¶ 2401.

Imperfect statutory bond to secure public deposit as good common law bond, see also Banking, ¶ 79.

Irregular public contractor's bond as good common law bond, see also Public Contracts, VII.

¶ 21. A bond may be valid although the obligee named is not the one designated by the statute which requires it; as where a bond given by one who contracts to build a school house runs to the board of education instead of to the people of the state of Michigan.—Detroit Board of Education v. Grant, 107 Mich. 151.

¶ 21a. Where the statute providing for the giving of a bond does not prescribe its form, and expressly declare that bonds not in accordance therewith shall be void, a bond with a condition in part prescribed by the statute, and in part not so prescribed, will be sustained, if it be clearly divisible, so far as it conforms to the statute, and the rest will be rejected as surplusage.—Detroit Board of Education v. Grant, 107 Mich. 151.

¶ 22. A bond delivered and filed in legal proceedings and acquiesced in by the obligee may be enforceable as a common-law obligation, though its condition does not conform to the statute.—Healey v. Newton, 96 Mich. 228.

¶ 23. A statutory bond must be interpreted according to the intent and meaning of the legislative enactment.—Brockway v. Petted, 79 Mich. 620.

¶ 24. Where a statute fixes conditions and consequences to an undertaking in a legal proceeding, all of its terms are as much a part of the agreement as if expressly incorporated in its language.—People ex rel. Loh v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 26 Mich. 186.

Liability of obligors on attachment bond or on bond for release from attachment, see Attachment, XIV.

¶ 25. Recovery on a bond can in no case exceed the amount of the penalty, so the insertion of the clause "10% attorney fees to be paid in addition" has no legal effect.—White Sewing Machine Co. v. Dakin, 86 Mich. 581.

¶ 26. Recovery in debt on a penal bond cannot exceed the penalty and costs.—Fraser v. Little, 13 Mich. 195.

¶ 27. In an action on a bond to insure the payment of money, recovery is limited to the penalty, and interest beyond it cannot be recovered.—People's Sav. Bank v. Campau, 124 Mich. 106.

¶ 28. A private bond may properly limit the time within which action may be commenced.—Township of Forest v. American Bonding Co. of Baltimore, 187 Mich. 657.

¶ 29. Conditions against a surety in a bond must be construed with reasonable strictness.—Hoffman v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 184 Mich. 210.

¶ 30. On a bond conditioned that an award be made on or before a certain day at a certain hour, there can be no recovery if the submission, hearing and award were all had after that hour.—Elliot v. Hanson, 39 Mich. 157.

¶ 31. A bond conditioned to pay any decree obtained in a specified suit applies to the final decree obtained in the appellate court, and is not avoided by an appeal, nor is it superseded by an appeal bond designed merely to cover costs.—Rynearson v. Fredenburg, 42 Mich. 412.

¶ 32. The obligor on a bond to pay any decree that might be obtained on a foreclosure cannot be released on the ground that a prior incumbrance remained undischarged and that the obligee refused to indemnify him if he should bid in on the foreclosure sale.—Rynearson v. Fredenburg, 42 Mich. 412.

¶ 33. Where a bond conditioned to pay all the debts of a certain firm is given under a penalty, and the obligor makes payments to the amount of the penalty, he is not liable further upon the bond, notwithstanding some of the debts remain unpaid. If he chooses voluntarily to perform his obligation to the full extent of his legal liability it is equally meritorious and effectual as though done under legal compulsion.—Spencer v. Perry, 18 Mich. 394.

¶ 34. Where a bond is conditioned for the payment of a sum of money "in five years" from date, the natural acceptation is that it may be paid inside of the five years, and must be paid at the expiration thereof; but this will not warrant payment in instalments without the consent of the obligee.—Verdine v. Olney, 77 Mich. 310.

¶ 35. In a suit to foreclose a mortgage given to secure performance of a bond made by a son to his father in consideration of the father's deeding to him his farm, an undertaking in such bond to furnish the father a horse and buggy whenever required for his own use, is held not to warrant the latter in arbitrarily demanding that a horse and buggy should be furnished him regularly upon certain days for an indefinite period, without any reference to the necessities likely to exist at such times requiring him to use the same, or in demanding compensation on that basis; and the undertaking in such bond that the father should have the possession and use of a certain house, and that in case it should be destroyed another suitable house should be provided, will not support a claim for compensation for repairs to the house.—Tucker v. Tucker, 35 Mich. 365.

¶ 36. A bond given by a son conditioned for his keeping his aged parents provided with specified conveniences during their lives is to be read as obligating him to act in that connection as occasion therefor may require.—Tucker v. Tucker, 35 Mich. 365; and see Tucker v. Tucker, 24 Mich. 426; Tucker v. Tucker, 27 Mich. 204.

¶ 38. A bond given by a prior guardian who had converted his ward's funds conditioned upon the payment of a sum of money to the succeeding guardian, as trustee, his successors, executors, administrators or assigns, is in default upon failure to keep up the payments to a trust company appointed next succeeding trustee and guardian although there was also an administrator of the estate of the deceased guardian where some payments had been made by the debtor to the trust company after the guardian's death.—Union Trust Co. v. Conus, 129 Mich. 156.

¶ 40. Act No. 266, Pub. Acts 1895, declaring that any bond required by law to be given with surety or sureties may be executed by a surety company and that in those cases where by the laws of the state more than one surety is required, it shall be lawful to approve and accept a bond with but one surety, provided the surety is a corporation duly qualified does not operate to compel those charged with the duty of accepting and approving bonds of saloon keepers under Act No. 313, Pub. Acts 1887, to accept a bond with a foreign corporation as sole surety, where their refusal is based on an honest doubt as to the sufficiency of the surety proposed.—Schmitt v. ¶ 44. Where one declares upon a covenant alleged to be contained in a replevin bond he need not set forth the penal part of the bond; only so much of an instrument need be set forth as constitutes the foundation of the action.—Prentiss v. Spalding, 2 D. 84.

¶ 45. A declaration in an action on a bond conditioned for the payment of such sum as might be decreed against the principal in a suit for a partnership accounting then pending in chancery, which alleges that no part of the amount decreed in the suit, in favor of a receiver, has been paid, and that plaintiff is damaged thereby, sufficiently shows the relation of the receiver to the chancery suit, and the interest of plaintiff in the payment of the sum decreed, where the decree, which is set out in the declaration, contains a recital of the appointment of a receiver, and directs the receiver, out of the sum decreed, to pay the plaintiff a specified amount.—Robson v. Dayton, 111 Mich. 440.

¶ 46. Suit on a bond against one of two obligors is good if the non-joinder of the other is not pleaded in abatement.—Porter v. Leache, 56 Mich 40.

¶ 47. The defense, in an action upon a bond, that the instrument was without sufficient consideration, is unavailable under How. St., § 7521, unless notice thereof is given with the plea of the general issue.—Boyer v. Sowles, 109 Mich. 481; Robson v. Dayton, 111 Mich. 440.

¶ 48. In a suit on a bond, the failure of the defendants to deny the execution of the bond under oath admits a legal execution of the bond.—Cunningham v. Hawkins, 163 Mich. 317.

¶ 49. In an action on an indemnity bond that does not attempt to describe fully the bond secured, the identity of which has been proven, it is no variance that the latter contains the name of a surety not mentioned in the former.—Lee v. Wisner, 38 Mich. 82.

¶ 50. In suit on a bond without covenant conditioned otherwise than for money payment, a declaration following a summons in debt, containing the common counts, assigning breaches and claiming damages, is in debt, not in assumpsit or covenant, and the bond's penalty must be treated as the debt to be sued for.—Bishop v. Freeman, 42 Mich. 533.

¶ 51. A declaration assigning breach in terms of the condition of the bond and not specifying particular breaches is good, if not demurred to.—Van Middlesworth v. Van Middlesworth, 32 Mich. 183.

¶ 52. A declaration on a sealed bond will not permit evidence of one without seal, and an amendment would be necessary to avoid the effect of the variance.—McCormick v. Bay City, 23 Mich. 457.

¶ 53. An allegation that defendants acknowledged themselves held and firmly bound unto "the board of supervisors of the county of St. Joseph" is not sustained by a bond to "the supervisors of the county of St. Joseph," the declaration not alleging that the bond was made to the plaintiffs by the name mentioned in the bond.—St. Joseph County Sup'rs v. Coffenbury, 1 Mich. 355.

¶ 54. A joint action on an official bond fails if it appears that any one of the defendants is not liable.—City of Detroit v. Houghton, 42 Mich. 459.

Seal as importing consideration, see ante § 2.

¶ 55. Where a bond other than for the payment of money is sued upon, and the plaintiff assigns a breach as the statute requires, the burden of proving the breach rests upon him, notwithstanding it may involve the proving of a negative. But the same clear proof is not necessary in such case as where proof of an affirmative is required.—Young v. Stephens, 9 Mich. 500.

¶ 56. Under a bond containing an absolute promise to make good the defaults of the principal, testimony to the effect that the bond did not contain all of the contract and that a portion of it resting in parol, made the obligation dependable upon immediate notice to the surety by the obligee, of the principal's default, was properly stricken, as there was no unperformed condition precedent when the bond was delivered.—Mason & Hamlin Co. v. Gage, 119 Mich. 361.

¶ 57. Evidence tending to show that the owners of an issue of bonds, claiming to hold the entire issue, destroyed those in their hands, is insufficient to overcome the presumption that the holder on one of bonds of the issue was a bona fide holder, there being evidence that only part of the issue of bonds was in the owners' hands and destroyed and the bond in question also being produced.—Toledo, Saginaw & M. Ry. Co. v. Peters, 177 Mich. 76.

Measure of recovery on bail bond, see Arrest, § 56.

Measure of recovery on attachment or release bond, see Attachment, §§ 145, 146.

¶ 58. The statute, like the common law, treats the penalty of a bond given to secure anything but the payment of money as the debt to be sued for in an action of debt on the bond. It requires the plaintiff to assign breaches, and allows a recovery of the debt, but permits execution for only the damages and costs, the judgment standing as security for the satisfaction of further breaches which further damages are recoverable on scire facias, the breaches being alleged according to the facts (Comp. L. 1871, §§ 6155-61; How. St., §§ 7737-45).—Bishop v. Freeman, 42 Mich. 533.

¶ 60. Recovery on a bond penal in form is limited to the amount of the penalty.—Fraser v. Little, 13 Mich. 195; Spencer v. Perry, 18 Mich. 394.

¶ 61. Breach of the condition of a bond given by a son to support his parents during their natural lives does not necessarily entitle them to the full penalty of the bond as damages, especially if the condition has been satisfactorily carried out for some years, and no evidence is given of the actual injury resulting from the breach.—Wright v. Wright, 49 Mich. 624.

¶ 62. It is impossible to determine in advance, where the instruments furnish no means of computation, the measure of damages for future breaches of the condition in a son's bond and mortgage to furnish the use of a horse and buggy to his parents whenever they, or either of them, may desire; each complaint must stand on its own merits.—Tucker v. Tucker, 27 Mich. 204.

¶ 63. In a transaction of mortgage between rural parties, where a son has promised to furnish his parents the use of a horse and buggy on reasonable demand and has given a mortgage as security, on default in the promise, the amount due as compensation may be estimated at $1.50 per week.—Tucker v. Tucker, 27 Mich. 204.

¶ 64. A finding in an action on a bond that defendants are liable for a sum greater than the penalty of the bond is not invalid because of the excess, but will support a judgment in debt for the penalty, and up to that amount as damages found by the referee.—Odd Fellows v. Morrison, 42 Mich. 521.

¶ 65. Where a bond given on the transfer of goods, some of them "scrap" and some second hand, binds defendant to sell such goods for "the best price obtainable at not less than manufacturers' prices" and to pay the proceeds to plaintiffs, and further provides that plaintiffs may take possession of it any time they feel insecure, and where defendant, after using some of the goods and selling others, has refused to give possession on plaintiffs' demand three years afterwards, the measure of damages to plaintiffs on such bond is, as to the articles sold in good faith, the proceeds of such sales; as to the articles on hand at the time of the demand, their value at such time; and as to the articles converted and not accounted for, the value at the time of conversion.—Wheeler v. Meyer, 95 Mich. 36.

¶ 66. The measure of recovery on a recognizance of bail is the whole amount of the obligation without reference to the merits. —Courtright v. Attorney General, 43 Mich. 411.

¶ 1. An agreement between adjoining landowners establishing a boundary line, acquiesced in by the parties is binding, although the line established is not the original one. —Breakey v. Woolsey, 149 Mich. 86.

¶ 2. To avoid How. St., § 6179, prohibiting a conveyance of land by parol, an agreement establishing a boundary line must not only be express and monuments be erected, but there must also have been a controversy as to the line to be settled by the agreement. —Olin v. Henderson, 120 Mich. 149.

¶ 3. An oral agreement to set over a boundary fence eight feet, conveys no title to the eight-foot strip, where there has been no occupancy and acquiescence under the agreement.—Hooper v. Herald, 154 Mich. 529.

¶ 4. Where the owners of adjoining lots 2 and 3 had agreed on a fence as a boundary line for more than the period of the statute of limitations, and had occupied the land in accordance with this boundary, a purchaser of the west forty-one feet of lot 2, adjoining lot 3, cannot dispute this boundary, and attempt to set up a new one, in an attempt to move the east line of his forty-one-foot strip farther east.—Cullen v. Ksiaszkiewicz, 154 Mich. 627.

¶ 5. A voluntary adjustment of boundary lines in the bed of a meandered lake is not an "alienation of lands" by a corporate party, which by How. St., § 4052, must be upon a vote of three-fifths of the stockholders.—Pittsburgh & L. A. Iron Co. v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 118 Mich. 109. Writ of error dismissed in 178 U. S. 270, 44 L. ed. 1065, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 931.

¶ 6. The defendant and his grantors for over fifty years treated a certain fence as the boundary between his land and that of the plaintiff and his grantors. After more than twenty years had elapsed, he consented, with the plaintiff's grantors, to join in a new survey, and to straighten out the fence. Defendant refused to recognize the new survey line as the true boundary, and continued to treat the old fence as the correct boundary. Held, that by joining in the new survey, and consenting to straighten the fence, the defendant did not agree upon a new boundary so as to lose his title to the land up to the old fence.—Ebel v. Hulce, 154 Mich. 230.

¶ 7. Where a mutual adjustment of a disputed boundary has been followed by the building of a line fence and by long occupancy and acquiescence, it fixes the confines of the land.—Husted v. Willoughby, 117 Mich. 56.

¶ 8. The rule that a boundary line, long treated and acquiesced in as the true line, becomes the legal boundary of the premises, regardless of the result of new surveys, is applicable to a case where the owners of premises divided by a township line, agreeing that the government surveyed line was crooked and incorrect, established by parol, and marked by a fence, a different line, in which they acquiesced for upwards of 30 years.—Tritt v. Hoover, 116 Mich. 4.

¶ 9. The boundaries of a town lot, when in dispute, will be determined from the lines actually established upon the ground, agreed upon by the adjacent owners, and long acquiesced in by them, rather than from a recent survey, dependent upon a different construction of the plat.—White v. Peabody, 106 Mich. 144.

§ 3. ——Existence of dispute or doubt.

See also ante ¶ 2.

Acquiescence where there is no dispute or doubt, see post § 5.

¶ 10. There is a dispute supporting an adjustment of boundaries by agreement, where it appears that one of the owners on a meandered lake asked the other for a deed to land beyond a section line which was refused on the ground that ownership extended beyond it.—Pittsburgh & L. A. Iron Co. v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 118 Mich. 109. Writ of error dismissed in 178 U. S. 270, 44 L. ed. 1065, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 931.

¶ 11. A railroad company bought a 100-foot strip of land and built a fence some thirty feet from the center of the strip. There was no dispute as to the true boundary between the company and the grantor. Held, the building of the fence could not be treated as the location of a boundary line by the parties so as to deprive the company of title to the unfenced portion.—Sheldon v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 101 Mich. 503.

¶ 12. Where the boundary line of premises conveyed is clearly located by the deed, the fact that during prior negotiations for the purchase it was agreed between the parties that the boundary should be marked by a certain cistern, and the further fact that the grantor acquiesced therein during the time that he continued to own the adjoining parcel, it being about 20 inches over the line, do not amount to a mutual adjustment of a disputed boundary such as will estop a subsequent purchaser of the parcel adjoining from setting up the statute of frauds against a claim based upon the parol agreement.—De Long v. Baldwin, 111 Mich. 466.

§ 4. ——Length of time occupied.

Acquiescence in line for more than statutory period, see post §§ 5-8.

¶ 13. A parol agreement long acquiesced in to settle the boundary between adjoining proprietors, being the result of an honest attempt to fix the true boundary, and according to which they have actually occupied, will be held good in an action at law, although the time has not been sufficient to establish title by adverse possession.—Smith v. Hamilton, 20 Mich. 433; Jones v. Pashby, 67 Mich. 450.

¶ 14. Acquiescence in a boundary line fixed by agreement need not, to be effectual, have continued for a period equal to that prescribed by the statute of limitations.—White v. Peabody, 106 Mich. 144.

¶ 15. It is a settled rule that where disputed boundary lines have been established by express agreement, or under such circumstances that an agreement will be implied, and the parties have for any considerable time recognized them, they will be upheld, though title by adverse possession could not be maintained.—Pittsburgh & L. A. Iron Co. v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 118 Mich. 109. Writ of error dismissed in 178 U. S. 270, 44 L. ed. 1065, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 931.

¶ 16. To make an arrangement as to a boundary binding, where such arrangement is less than fifteen years old, it must have been made with the understanding that it should be so regarded.—Bird v. Stark, 66 Mich. 654.

¶ 17. Where parties by mutual agreement and for that express purpose meet and fix a boundary line, and thereafter acquiesce in the line so established between them, such line will be considered the true line between them, notwithstanding the period of such acquiescence falls short of the time fixed by the statute of limitations for gaining title by adverse possession.—Veltmans v. Kurtz, 167 Mich. 412.

Sufficiency of evidence as to, see post § 37
Adverse possession of disputed strips, see Adverse Possession, § 20.
Inclusion of strip in adverse possession taken under color of title, see Adverse Possession, § 38.

¶ 18. A boundary long treated and acquiesced in as the true line, or fixed by adverse possession, should not be disturbed on new surveys.—Dupont v. Starring, 42 Mich. 492; Bunce v. Bidwell, 43 Mich. 542; Wilmarth v. Woodcock, 66 Mich. 331.

¶ 19. Where two parties who have bought a lot together have it surveyed in order to establish its boundaries and divide it in halves, and thus make a practical and actual division of it, and both occupy and improve their respective halves with reference to this division, a long acquiescence in the division line so fixed, even though insufficient to create a bar under the statute of limitations, will estop the parties and their grantees from disputing it.—Joyce v. Williams, 26 Mich. 332.

¶ 20. Unless the attempt to settle a boundary is honestly made in view of a question about it, mere acquiescence in the boundary does not operate as an estoppel.—Cronin v. Gore, 38 Mich. 381.

¶ 21. Long practical acquiescence in a boundary, between the parties concerned, may constitute such an agreement regarding it as to be conclusive, even if it has been erroneously located.—Diehl v. Zanger, 39 Mich. 601.

¶ 22. Resurveys cannot be allowed to unsettle the lines of town lots after the lot-owners have established such lines in accordance with the stakes which they have found planted or recognized by authority, and in reliance on which they have purchased.—Flynn v. Glenny, 51 Mich. 580.

¶ 23. The acquirement of title through the settlement of a boundary line by consent and acquiescence, does not appear, where the evidence does not justify such a conclusion, but shows a dispute as to the boundary.—Brudin v. Inglis, 121 Mich. 410.

¶ 24. A line of possession adhered to for more than twenty years in the supposition that it is the true line becomes fixed thereby, though the true line is afterwards discovered to be elsewhere; otherwise where it is a line of occupancy continued in the expectation of settling it when finally ascertained.—Bunce v. Bidwell, 43 Mich. 542.

¶ 25. A boundary line fixed by user cannot be disturbed by survey when such line has been established for more than the statutory period.—Seitz v. Peoples' Sav. Bank, 140 Mich. 106.

¶ 26. A boundary line treated for fifteen years as the true line, and acquiesced in by persons concerned, ought not be disturbed by new surveys.—Gildea v. Warren, 173 Mich. 28.

¶ 27. Acquiescence by landowners for a period of more than thirty years in accepting fences along a lane as a boundary line of the properties must be deemed conclusive against them where the use of such lane has been open, notorious, adverse and continuous as a means of ingress and egress from the respective properties adjoining thereon.—Marion v. Balsley, 195 Mich. 51.

¶ 28. A boundary line by agreement and acquiescence is not established where the party building a fence intended to put it on the correct line, and the adjoining owner and his grantees simply assumed that the fence was upon the line.—Lake Shore & M. S. Ry, Co. v. Sterling, 189 Mich. 366.

§ 6. ——Permanent fences or improvements.

See also ante ¶ 24.
Temporary fencing, see post § 7.
Fence by only one party, see post § 8.
Fences as evidence of location, see post §§ 28, 33, 37.
Superior weight of evidence of old fences, see post § 33.

¶ 29. The mere building of a division fence by adjacent landowners does not preclude their contesting the boundary so fixed; nor does their occupancy to the line of the fence unless it is adverse for the full period required by the statute of limitations.—Chapman v. Crooks, 41 Mich. 595.

¶ 30. Where evidence clearly establishes that a fence has been located and recognized for more than 20 years as being on the true line between adjoining owners, the question whether it was originally established on the true line is foreclosed by the acquiescence of the parties.—F. H. Wolf Brick Co. v. Lonyo, 132 Mich. 162.

¶ 32. Land was so partitioned by mutual conveyance as to make it uncertain where the dividing line lay. A subsequent grantee of one portion built a house on the doubtful strip and mortgaged it, and the mortgagee went into possession. On foreclosure certain persons impleaded as subsequent incumbrancers made it part of their defense that the mortgagee should account for rents and profits, and decree was rendered on that basis. Held, that they were thereafter estopped from bringing ejectment for the disputed strip as grantees from the adverse claimant.—Jones v. Pashby, 48 Mich. 634.

¶ 33. Where one who by adverse possession has acquired title to a strip of land beyond the true boundary expressly disclaims title thereto and for nearly fourteen years acquiesces in a fence placed along the true line, his subsequent grantee cannot claim title to such strip.—Mowers v. Evers, 117 Mich. 93.

§ 7. ——Temporary or convenient divisions.

Permanent fencing, see ante § 6.
Admissibility in evidence, see post § 27.

¶ 34. A dividing line of contiguous properties established by the owners for mutual convenience, rather than in agreement upon any official plan, was held no evidence of line originally surveyed.—Dondero v. Frumveller, 61 Mich. 440.

¶ 35. If a fence is laid provisionally with the understanding that it shall not supplant the true line, that understanding may prevent its becoming conclusive even after fifteen years.—Bird v. Stark, 66 Mich. 654.

¶ 36. A boundary cannot be established by acquiescence in a fence which extends but a portion of the distance upon the line in dispute, and which was not continuously maintained but was permitted to fall into decay.—Conner v. Detroit Terminal R. Co., 183 Mich. 241.

§ 8. ——Fence by one party alone.

See also ante ¶ 28.

¶ 37. A plaintiff in ejectment is not estopped by having put up a fence which he afterwards claims is wrongly located, unless it was built with the deliberate purpose, on both sides, of fixing the boundary, or unless its location is so acquiesced in by the other side as to bind the latter not to dispute the line so drawn.—Van Den Brooks v. Correon, 48 Mich. 283.

¶ 38. Two adjacent owners, one of whom was the other's grantee, set a fence and planted trees on the grantee's side of it. Held, that the latter might afterwards remove them, and that grantees of the other were estopped from denying his right to do so.—Reed v. Drake, 29 Mich. 222.

¶ 39. One who, not knowing where the boundary of his land is, puts up a fence inside of the true line, is not thereby estopped from moving the fence to the true line unless the adjoining owner has in the meantime acquired title by adverse possession.—Beecher v. Ferris, 112 Mich. 584.

¶ 40. The mere fact that a line fence has existed forty years and a complainant has cultivated the land up to the fence for that time, does not give him title by adverse possession where there is no evidence that the fence was built pursuant to a dispute and an agreement.—Parsons v. Bills, 163 Mich. 415.

¶ 41. A boundary by agreement or estoppel is not shown by the fact of its adoption by heirs, to be satisfied by conveyance on their coming of age, followed by erection on such line of a division fence built by both parties, but soon after repudiated by the heirs because they found out that the other party had no title to the land claimed by him.—Wilson v. Hoffman, 70 Mich. 552.

¶ 42. No estoppel from disputing a boundary arises merely from allowing the adjacent owner to make improvements, so long as neither has supposed the boundary to be wrong.—Cronin v. Gore, 38 Mich. 381.

¶ 43. The fact that a landowner puts up a fence inside of his boundary line, without knowing where the line is, will not estop him from subsequently removing it to the true line, unless the adjoining owner has in the meantime acquired title by adverse possession.—Beecher v. Ferris, 112 Mich. 584.

§ 9. Estoppel by deed or purchase.

See also ante ¶ 4.

Estoppel by asserting rights based on line, see ante ¶ 32.

Acquiescence in line as established, see ante §§ 5-8.

Sufficiency of evidence as to estoppel, see post § 37.

¶ 44. While it is true that title to land cannot be established by estoppel in this state, the fixing of a boundary line may be so established inasmuch as the establishment of a boundary line is not supposed to affect title.—Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Co. v. Gauthier, 143 Mich. 206.

¶ 45. Where a fence has been acquiesced in for fifteen years as the correct boundary line between adjacent owners, the boundary ought not to be disturbed even if it somewhat varies from the true line; and where the fence was the line actually agreed on, and a deed giving distances had been accepted under assurances that it did not vary such boundary line, the grantor and all claiming under him, except a bona fide purchaser without notice, would be estopped from setting up a different boundary.—Stewart v. Carleton, 31 Mich. 270.

¶ 46. Where parties claiming under the same grantor recognize a boundary between them, and one of them afterwards conveys with reference to that boundary and without encroaching upon any rights existing in third parties, he and those who claim under him are bound by the description as against his grantee, and a change of the recognized boundary by a resurvey will not affect the grantee's rights.—Fahey v. Marsh, 40 Mich. 236.

¶ 47. The pointing out by a vendor to the purchaser of a lot of a boundary line of such property which was not correct, according to the description in the deeds, will not operate, under the statute of frauds, as against the purchaser of the adjoining land, to convey to the purchaser more land than is covered by the deed; even though the line so pointed out was located at the time by an actual survey, where there is no disputed boundary at the time of such sale.—Turner v. Angus, 145 Mich. 679.

¶ 48. The description in a deed by the last grantor of a lot, as regards its boundaries, must be construed, as against subsequent grantees, in accordance with the oral declaration of such grantor to his grantee, where, in such declaration, the grantor recognized as determining the new boundaries of such lot certain changes in the lines of the highway which it fronts, which changes had been acquiesced in for many years by the owners of lands adjacent thereto and with reference to which the lines of buildings had been located.—Rix v. Smith, 145 Mich. 208.

¶ 49. In an action to quiet title to land where the vendors of adjoining tracts of land had sold them with the intention to convey all the land occupied by them, and it was known to them that complainant intended to develop the properties as one mine, and the purchase was made for that purpose, and the lands had been conveyed by metes and bounds according to a fence that had existed for about forty years, but it was afterwards learned through a new survey that the fence was not upon the true line, the vendor of that portion of the land claimed under the true boundary is estopped to deny that the fence marked the real boundary where he made no claim to the disputed tract until after the complainants with his knowledge had expended large sums in the development of the disputed strip.—Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Co. v. Gauthier, 143 Mich. 296.

¶ 50. Where a grantee of land, prior to the purchase thereof, is informed by the grantor that a certain fence constitutes the boundary line thereof, he is bound as between himself and the grantor to accept such fence as the boundary despite the fact that the legal description contained in the deed indicates a different boundary line.—Veltmans v. Kurtz, 167 Mich. 412.

§ 10. Location and application of description and calls.

Assumption of points, see post § 11.
Monuments, marks, adjoinments, courses and distances as indicia of location, see post §§ 12-14.
Division line where conveyance is of "half" or fractional portion, see post § 15.
Line denoted by call for plat, see post § 21.
Location as question of law or fact, see post § 39.
Uncertainty or mistake as affecting validity of deed, see Deeds, III, C.

¶ 51. In relocating lost monuments, the question is not how an entirely accurate survey would have located the lots, but how the original stakes located them.—Diehl v. Zanger, 39 Mich. 601.

¶ 52. In fixing upon the point of beginning in a description of land, in a deed, not definitely expressed in that respect, it is well to compare the whole description with the lines claimed by the respective parties and determine upon a point that from the comparison seems to be the only reasonable and intelligent one.—Anderson v. Scott, 75 Mich. 300.

¶ 53. The only practical way of ascertaining the true line is by a survey made from some fixed starting point,—some monument placed under the original government survey,—and, if such monuments are no longer discoverable, the question is, where were they located.—Carpenter v. Monks, 81 Mich. 103.

§ 11. ——By resurvey.

Conflict between calls, which control, see post § 16.
Admissibility of resurvey in evidence, see post § 30.

¶ 54. Old surveyed lines which have become uncertain are not to be superseded by new ones, but are to be ascertained by a resurvey, if rights have become fixed and regulated in reliance upon the common understanding as to where they lie.—Baker v. McArthur, 54 Mich. 139.

¶ 55. Test surveys based upon speculative starting points cannot be used to fix a disputed boundary between lots which can be settled by a proper construction of a plat.—Reimers v. Quinnin, 49 Mich. 449.

¶ 56. Boundaries are not to be disturbed and moved upon a survey made from an assumed starting point, without some proof of its being a true line, located and fixed by the original survey.—Carpenter v. Monks, 81 Mich. 103.

¶ 57. The method laid down by the federal department of the interior for the restoration of lost corners of government surveys on base and correction lines is not conclusive, and is not to be preferred to a survey of the township line between two established monuments upon such line.—Hess v. Meyer, 88 Mich. 339.

¶ 58. A boundary line between adjoining proprietors, unless fixed by agreement, acquiescence, or adverse possession, is to be determined in accordance with the original government survey on which it depends for location.—Woodbury v. Venia, 114 Mich. 251.

§ 12. ——Monuments, marks and corners and adjoinments.

Impropriety of assuming points without evidence, see ante § 11.
Calls for monuments or adjoinments as prevailing over course and distance, see post § 16.

¶ 59. As a general rule a boundary line marked part of the way will be continued in the same direction for the full distance.—Seitz v. People's Sav. Bank, 140 Mich. 106.

¶ 60. In determining the location of original lot lines of platted property, where the plat does not contain any monument or starting place of any character, it is proper to use an iron pin as a starting point, where such pin has been located at the intersection of streets which have been opened for a long time in supposed conformity with the plat.—Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Graham, 150 Mich. 219.

¶ 61. Where the description in a deed calls for lands owned and occupied, the actual line of occupation is a material call to be considered in locating the boundaries.—Hoffman v. City of Port Huron, 102 Mich. 417.

¶ 62. A deed conveying land described as bounded on the north by the land of W. & N.

and on the east and west by lands of others, does not include a small strip of land protruding between the land of W. & N. and bounded on the north by the end of a public street.—Gogle v. Dreger, 127 Mich. 679.

¶ 63. A description in a deed which gives a part of the boundary as "thence running to the rear of the said" land does not necessarily mean that the granted parcel is bounded by the rear line of the land referred to, but may simply indicate the direction of the boundary, as if the word "towards" were used instead of "to."—Moran v. Lezotte, 54 Mich. 83.

¶ 64. Under How. St., § 622, a section corner on a town line should be relocated by running lines from the nearest known government monuments east and west on the township line, and not by measuring from a known quarter section corner north of the line to one south of the line, and dividing the distance.—Hess v. Meyer, 73 Mich. 259.

§ 13. ——Highways and waters.

Call for stream or highway as controlling course and distance, see post § 16.
Stream line as superior to call for meander line, see post § 16.
Border or thread of stream as line denoted, see post § 18.
Line denoted by call for side line or shore line, see post § 20.
Call for highway as denoting center or side line, see post § 19.
Line denoted by call for description in plat, see post § 21.
Evidence as to location and change of roadway, see post § 29.
Sufficiency of evidence where location of stream called for is uncertain, see post § 38.

¶ 65. Where the question involved in construing the description in a deed was whether the term "public road," referred to as a boundary, meant a mere paper street as laid down on a plat, or an actual highway, so known, and not by any name appearing on the plat, it was construed to mean the latter rather than the former.—Purkiss v. Benson, 28 Mich. 538.

¶ 66. A description referring to a highway as a boundary presumably refers to the highway as it existed upon the ground at the time the deed was executed and not to the line indicated in the record of its survey.—Atwood v. Canrike, 86 Mich. 99.

¶ 67. The location of a street that has been established and recognized for more than ten years cannot be shifted about by surveyors.—Pratt v. Lewis, 39 Mich. 7.

¶ 68. As between the record of a highway survey by the proper authorities and a shifting way of travel on a margin from ten to thirty rods in width along the shore of a lake, the former must prevail because the most certain; although ordinarily actual location controls.—Hoffman v. City of Port Huron, 102 Mich. 417.

¶ 69. Where streets have been opened, used and acquiesced in by the parties interested, or by the public authorities, they become permanent boundaries and form new starting points for later surveys.—Twogood v. Hoyt, 42 Mich. 609.

¶ 70. Streets that have been opened and acquiesced in by the parties interested, or by the public authorities, become permanent boundaries and form new starting points for later surveys.—Hoffman v. City of Port Huron, 102 Mich. 417.

¶ 71. Streets that have been opened in supposed conformity to a plat, and have been long acquiesced in, should be accepted as fixed monuments in locating lots or blocks contiguous thereto or fronting thereon.—Van Den Brooks v. Correon, 48 Mich. 283.

¶ 72. A call for a highway must be taken as referring to a surveyed continuation of one defined by reference in adjoining conveyances, where at the time there was no actual location by fixed use and no dispute as to the location of the road.—Hoffman v. City of Port Huron, 102 Mich. 417.

¶ 73. The deed of a city lot, and the plat with reference to which it was made, called for the south line of a certain street as the boundary of the lot, the lot to be fifty feet in width. The said south line, as marked and built to by improvers of lots, and the division lines of the lots thereon in conformity therewith, were treated for more than thirty years as the true lines of boundary. To move it three feet, as shown by a later survey, would shift numerous accepted lines. Held, that the true width of the lots must be measured from the located present line of the street.—Wilmarth v. Woodcock, 66 Mich. 331.

¶ 74. A boundary stated in a deed as "a line forty feet above the border of the river at high-water mark" is not ambiguous, and if disputed is to be fixed, like any other fact, by testimony and an examination of the ground.—Bresler v. Pitts, 58 Mich. 347.

¶ 75. Where the initial point in the description of premises in a deed was the S. E. corner of the N. half of the S. E. quarter, fractional, of a section, and the quarter-section was made fractional by a meandered lake, so situated as to cover the eastern and central portions of it, and the parcel described had been carved out of the N. half within a year after it was patented, it was held that the S. E. corner in question should be construed to be the point which constituted the S. E. corner of the land under the government survey and patent, which located it on the meandered line of the lake, and that the fact that the waters of the lake have since receded cannot change the boundaries of the lands described as previously located. —Verplank v. Hall, 27 Mich. 79.

¶ 76. A permanent county drain is a sufficiently known boundary or monument to be used in describing land in an action of trespass.—Husted v. Willoughby, 117 Mich. 56.

§ 14. ——Courses and distances.

Assumption that highway continues in same course, see also ante § 13.
Courses and distances yielding to monuments, see post § 16.
Course as superior to distance in case of conflict, see post § 16.
Parol to supply omitted description, see post § 17.

¶ 77. A correct survey of lots conveyed by deed with reference to a plat, which calls the points of the compass with reference to the lines and angles of the lots, must follow the plat though its lines are not conformable to the true meridian.—Bower v. Earl, 18 Mich. 367.

§ 15. ——Calls for quantity or portions.

Calls for quantity as inferior to calls for monuments, see post § 16.

¶ 78. A sale of "the north half" of a tract bordering on a river, does not call for such a division as will carry one-half of the river frontage, where the claim as made by the bill is simply for one-half of the tract.—Au Gres Boom Co. v. Whitney, 26 Mich. 42.

¶ 79. The median line between portions of a tract conveyed by "half" should be laid according to quantity unless the context or surrounding facts and circumstances show a contrary intention, and not at a point midway between the side lines.—Hartford Iron Mining Co. v. Cambria Mining Co., 80 Mich. 491.

¶ 80. In an action of quare clausum fregit, where two parties own respectively the E. one-half and the W. one-half of a fractional one-fourth, the north end of which is occupied by a lake, the dividing line will be fixed equidistant from the E. and the W. sides of a one-fourth rather than by an equal division of the quantity of land.—Edinger v. Woodke, 127 Mich. 41.

§ 16. Conflicts and repugnancies in calls and description.

Between plat and magnetic courses, see also ante ¶ 77.
Sufficiency of evidence to resolve conflict, see post §§ 32-38.
Questions of law and fact, see post § 39.

¶ 81. In the construction of grants, courses and distances must give way to natural or artificial monuments or objects.—Bruckner's Lessee v. Lawrence, 1 D. 19; Gilman v. Riopelle, 18 Mich. 145; Turner v. Holland, 65 Mich. 453.

¶ 82. In private as in public surveys monuments control course and distance.—Diehl v. Zanger, 39 Mich. 601.

¶ 83. Courses must be varied, and distances lengthened or shortened, so as to conform to the natural or ascertained objects or bounds called for in the grant; but where there is nothing in a conveyance to control the call for course or distance the land must be run according to the course and distance given in the description.—Bruckner's Lessee v. Lawrence, 1 D. 19.

¶ 85. The original monuments established by the government surveyor to mark section-corners must control the courses and distances indicated by the field-notes.—Brown v. Morrill, 91 Mich. 29.

¶ 86. The rule that monuments control courses and distances, and that, when monuments and measurements vary, the monuments always control, applies only to monuments and measurements made by the original survey.—Woodbury v. Venia, 114 Mich. 251.

¶ 87. The rule in all cases of disputed boundaries of land is, that stakes rather than surveyed lines must prevail.—Turner v. Angus, 145 Mich. 679.

¶ 88. A call for a natural object, such as a stream, in a government survey will prevail over courses and distances.—Brown v. Milliman, 119 Mich. 606.

¶ 89. Where definite and permanent boundaries are given, a deed must be considered to convey all the land within those boundaries, notwithstanding the quantity is much greater than that mentioned.—Gilman v. Riopelle, 18 Mich. 145.

¶ 90. Quantity in a description must generally give way to fixed lines and monuments. —Keyser v. Sutherland, 59 Mich. 455.

¶ 91. The statement of quantity in the descriptive clause of a deed may properly be taken as controlling where the circumstances show that it is the particular least likely to be wrong, and where the description is ambiguous or indefinite in respect to fixed lines and monuments.—Moran v. Lezotte, 54 Mich. 88.

¶ 92. Where two surveyors materially disagree as to the course, quantity becomes a material consideration.—Hoffman v. City of Port Huron, 102 Mich. 417.

¶ 93. If courses and distances in a plat do not agree courses will, as a general rule, govern.—Bird v. Stimson, 197 Mich. 582.

¶ 94. Where the meander lines and a stream do not coincide, the stream controls as a boundary.—Arnold v. Brechtel, 174 Mich. 147.

§ 17. Parol evidence in aid of description.

Parol evidence to control or vary terms of description in deed, see Evidence, V, A Parol to alter dimensions fixed by plat, see Evidence, V, A.

¶ 95. Where a suit is pending in ejectment, in which the recovery depends on the construction of a deed which presents a case of latent ambiguity in the description, susceptible of being cleared up by the extrinsic proof, a resort to equity for reformation and to fix the boundary is unnecessary, for the explanation can be made as readily in the ejectment suit as in equity.—Dart v. Barbour, 32 Mich. 267.

¶ 96. Resort to deeds conveying excepted parcels is proper and essential where an uncertain description calls for such deeds.—Hoffman v. City of Port Huron, 102 Mich. 417.

¶ 97. In order to supply an omitted course in a description, left by a careless scrivener in a deed prepared by him in a transaction in which one party had, for a consideration, agreed to convey an acre of land to the other, the court may, if the dimensions are satisfied thereby, consider the land itself as found staked by the surveyor employed by these parties at the time, and for the purposes of the transaction.—Burke v. Clixby, 75 Mich. 311.

¶ 98. Declarations of grantor of a lot contemporaneous with the making of the deed admitted in evidence in determining the boundaries of such lot, is not varying the description in such deed by parol; where the lot in question is 132 feet deep, and the description in the deed calls for 75 feet of this depth, and not for a specified fraction of the lot, and such declarations are admitted merely to locate the east line of the street shown by the plat referred to in such deed as the boundary of the lot.—Rix v. Smith, 145 Mich. 203.

§ 18. Line or point denoted by call for stream.

By call for side line or shore line, see post § 20.
Effect of recession of waters on point located by line of same, see also ante ¶ 75.
Apportionment of submerged land among adjoining riparian owners, see post § 22.
Effect of meander line on right to land on water side thereof, see post § 22, ¶ 118.
Presumption as to lake being meandered, see post § 26.
As question for jury, see post § 39.
Relative rights of public and riparian owners in navigable waters, see Navigable Waters, II.
Ownership of bed of stream or lake, see Waters, IV, A.

¶ 99. The common law principle, that title to the soil under tideless public rivers is in the owner of the adjacent bank, prevails in Michigan, and applies to the Detroit river. —Lorman v. Benson, 8 Mich. 18.

¶ 100. It is settled law of Michigan that the title of the riparian owner extends to the middle line of inland waters.—Webber v. Pere Marquette Boom Co., 62 Mich. 626.

¶ 101. The rule in Lorman v. Benson, 8 Mich. 18, applies to Muskegon lake as far out as the submerged land is susceptible of beneficial private use, but subordinate to the paramount rights of the public to navigation and other public rights, and unless by the presence of islands apparently reserved by the government survey, the line is drawn at the center between the island and the main land.—Rice v. Ruddiman, 10 Mich. 125, per Christiancy, J.

¶ 102. The owner of land abutting on a water course owns to the middle of the stream.—Hartz v. Detroit, P. & N. Ry., 153 Mich. 337.

¶ 103. Where an artificial pond is created by damming a stream, the same rule applies to the pond as to the stream before the dam was built.—Hartz v. Detroit, P. & N. Ry., 153 Mich. 337, Dictum.

¶ 104. Where the boundaries of a stream have been changed by artificial means so as to create a pond, and the description in a conveyance describes land as running along the bank of such pond, such description conveys the right to the water front and for the use of the stream in its natural state should the artificial pond be discontinued. —Hartz v. Detroit, P. & N. Ry., 153 Mich. 337.

§ 19. ——By call for highway.

What road or way is meant by call for highway as boundary, see ante § 13.

Ownership of land within highway limits, see Highways, X.

¶ 105. Where a boundary is expressly made by a public road, it indicates an intent to convey, according to the rules governing boundaries on highways, and extends the ownership to the center.—Purkiss v. Benson, 28 Mich. 538.

¶ 106. The doctrine that the grantee of a lot bounded upon a street or other highway takes to the center of such street, subjects only to the public easement, unless something appears upon the plat or in the terms of the conveyance excluding the title from passing under a boundary so described, applies to actual highways, not to paper ones. —Plumer v. Johnston, 63 Mich. 165.

§ 20. ——By calls for side line or shore line.

Location of line by reference to high water, see ante ¶ 74.

¶ 107. A deed of land lying east of a certain street, and explicitly described as bounded by the east line of the street, conveys no title to the soil in the street.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 38 Mich. 62.

§ 21. ——By conveyance according to dedication or plat.

Agreement fixing boundary variant from plat, see ante § 2.

Plat as prevailing over magnetic course, see also ante ¶ 77.

Adjustment of shortage or surplus area among owners, see post § 23.

Questions for jury as to location of line, see post § 39.

¶ 108. Where a deed conveys lots in a town, and refers to a plat to identify them, and in describing their lines calls the points of the compass as designated on the plat by its lines and angles, a correct survey cannot be based on any other system; and, although the lines delineated are not conformable to the true meridian, the plat, and not the compass, must govern.—Bower v. Earl, 18 Mich. 367.

¶ 109. Streets opened, used and acquiesced in form new starting points in subsequent surveys of premises conveyed with reference to a recorded plat.—Twogood v. Hoyt, 42 Mich. 609; Wilmarth v. Woodcock, 66 Mich. 331.

¶ 110. Purchasers of town lots have the right to locate their lot lines according to the stakes set by the platter of the lots, and no subsequent survey can be alleged to unsettle such lines.—LeCompte v. Lueders, 90 Mich. 495.

¶ 110a. Where lands are platted into lots, with shore boundaries marked, conveyances with reference thereto carry the submerged land to the center of the stream.—Watson v. Peters, 26 Mich. 508; Fletcher v. Thunder Bay, etc. Boom Co., 51 Mich. 277.

§ 22. Apportionment of submerged land among adjoiners.

¶ 111. The submerged land is not necessarily to be divided by extensions of the side lines of the fronting tract; this might depend on the shape of the lake and the relative rights of adjoining owners.—Rice v. Ruddiman, 10 Mich. 125, per Christiancy, J.

¶ 112. The boundary between adjoining owners on a river is to be determined by extending a line from the boundary at the shore perpendicularly to the general course of the river opposite that point.—Clark v. Campau, 19 Mich. 324.

¶ 113. The land in the bed of the Saginaw river is to be divided among riparian owners according to right lines from the thread to the intersection of the side lines with the shore, though the side lines intersect the shore at a different angle.—Bay City Gas Light Co. v. Industrial Works, 28 Mich. 182.

¶ 114. The submerged lands belong to the riparian owners as divided by lines extended from their side lines to the thread of the river.—Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 41 Mich. 453.

¶ 115. The boundary line between two adjoining riparian owners as to the land covered by water, is not in any way dependent upon the direction of the lines on land, but the lines from the shore should run, as near as may be, perpendicularly to the course of the stream.—A. M. Campau Realty Co. v. City of Detroit, 162 Mich. 243.

¶ 116. The rule for division of the lands submerged under waters of the Great Lakes or indentations thereof among the riparian owners is: (1) To measure the whole extent of the ancient bank or line of the cove or bay and compute the linear frontage of each owner; (2) To divide the newly formed line into as many equal portions as those contained in the shore line, and then draw straight lines from the points at which the proprietors bounded on the old line to the points of division of the new line. This rule is to be modified under particular circumstances to secure justice, and a general line ought to be taken rather than a shore line following deep indentations.—Blodgett & Davis Lumber Co. v. Peters, 87 Mich. 498.

¶ 117. The dictum in Clute v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 48, that, in small inland lakes having meandered lines the shore owners take the submerged land within the extended lines of a fractional division, is inconsistent with the rule that the shore owner takes to the thread or center of the stream and also with the rule that the submerged land is divided by right angle lines from the center thread of the stream. The correct rule is that the submerged area belonging to the shore owner depends on his frontage on the stream and on the form, length and breadth of the water. On the authority of Jones v. Lee, 77 Mich. 35, where the division of lands under a lake cannot be accomplished by reference to any middle thread, it should be done by some rule of proportion, which probably could only be got at by some partition proceeding.—Grand Rapids Ice & Coal Co. v. South Grand Rapids Ice & Coal Co., 102 Mich. 227.

¶ 118. Meanders in a government survey are not to be regarded as boundaries of a fractional subdivision bordering a lake, but the title cannot be carried over upon another legal subdivision by projecting lines from the intersection with the meander line of the subdivision lines to the center of the lake or marsh so meandered.—Palmer v. Dodd, 64 Mich. 474.

§ 23. Adjustment of surplus or deficiency among adjoiners.

Weight of evidence of excess of land to impeach survey, see post ¶ 157.

¶ 119. Where there is a shortage in land platted into lots, blocks and streets, each block should, if possible, be treated as distinct, and the shortage distributed among the lot owners of the block except so far as possession has fixed the limits.—Anderson v. Wirth, 131 Mich. 183.

§ 24. Actions or suits to settle boundaries.

Power of equity to adjudicate on disputed boundary where involved incidentally to its proper jurisdiction, see post § 25.

Burden of proof and evidence as to location, see post §§ 26-38.

Questions of fact and instructions, see post §§ 39, 40.

Bills to quiet title, see Quieting Title.

Ejectment for strip, see Ejectment.

¶ 120. The remedy to settle a disputed boundary line is at law, and not in equity, it appearing that each party claims a legal right, and that the land has never been adjudged to belong to the complainant.—Andries v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 105 Mich. 557.

¶ 121. A bill alleging that plaintiff and defendant owned adjoining blocks of land abutting on a lake, and that defendant had taken possession of a part of plaintiff's land, prayed a determination that title to such land belonged to plaintiff, and a determination of the boundaries and riparian rights of the parties. Held, that ejectment was the proper remedy and that equity had no jurisdiction.—Nicholls v. Boyne City Lumber Co., 157 Mich. 234.

¶ 122. Equity will not entertain a suit for the purpose of determining the boundary between properties, where the possession has been in the defendant, and ejectment is open to try the title.—Cullen v. Ksiaszkiewicz, 154 Mich. 627.

¶ 123. A court of equity has no inherent jurisdiction to determine a boundary line and will not restrain the interference with complainant's purpose to build a sidewalk over a disputed strip along a boundary line where it is not shown that the complainant was at the time of the filing of the bill in possession of the disputed strip.—Dolan v. Smith, 147 Mich. 276.

¶ 124. The settlement of boundaries that are disputed and difficult of ascertainment is not on that account within the jurisdiction of a court of equity.—Bresler v. Pitts, 58 Mich. 347.

¶ 125. Equity cannot take cognizance of a dispute as to the true location of the boundary between the premises of parties, if the settlement of such dispute leaves no question as to the title to the property on either side; the remedy is at law.—Kilgannon v. Jenkinson, 51 Mich. 240.

¶ 126. The comparative means of the parties to a boundary dispute are immaterial to the question whether the case should fall within the jurisdiction of law or of equity.—Kilgannon v. Jenkinson, 51 Mich. 240.

§ 25. ——Relief incident to other suit.

Adequacy of ejectment to ascertain location, see also ante ¶ 95.

¶ 127. A court of equity has no inherent jurisdiction to determine boundary lines, but it may determine such a question when encountered while administering a remedy which properly belongs to some recognized head of equity jurisprudence.—Dolan v. Smith, 147 Mich. 276.

¶ 128. Courts of equity may pass upon a disputed boundary when incidental to and connected with other issues properly coming under some recognized head of equity jurisprudence, but they have no inherent and independent jurisdiction for such purpose.—Weissert v. Fuller, 188 Mich. 327.

¶ 129. Where the fundamental question in a controversy over the removal of lateral support is the true line between the parties and the legal title to a disputed strip of land, the case is properly cognizable at law and not in equity.—Wykes v. Ringleberg, 49 Mich. 567.

130. Where there is stated some ground for equity jurisdiction, the mere fact that there is involved in the case a controversy as to the boundary line between two properties will not oust the court of jurisdiction. —Cullen v. Ksiaszkiewicz, 154 Mich. 627.

§ 26. Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence as to location.

Burden to show that starting point was correct, see also post § 30.
Admissible evidence, see also post ¶ 188.
Admission as to location, see Evidence, VII, C.
Hearsay evidence as to location, see Evidence, VII, A.
Admissibility of parol in aid of description, see ante § 17.
Burden to show nonperformance of duty by county surveyor, see Evidence, II.
Presumption on appeal that survey and plat were correct, see Appeal, ¶ 1596.

¶ 131. The burden of proving that a government survey line was not direct between two points, is on the party alleging such fact.—Smith v. Rich, 37 Mich. 549.

¶ 132. The burden of proof is upon one who claims that the boundary between him and an opposing party has been fixed by actual location and acquiescence upon a line different from that required by the legal construction of the deeds under which both parties claim.—Jones v. Pashby, 67 Mich. 459.

¶ 133. In a case of trespass where the questions as to the location of the north line of a plat and whether a certain fence was on that line were in issue, and the question of a line established by acquiescence was not in issue, nor of a line by agreement between the parties, nor of adverse possession by plaintiff, the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to establish by a preponderance of evidence that the trespass charged was committed upon the land owned by him, that is he must show the true boundary line. —Clarke v. Case, 144 Mich. 148.

¶ 134. No presumption arises that a lake surrounded by one's land is meandered, merely from its size, location or relation to other waters.—Giddings v. Rogalewski, 192 Mich. 319.

¶ 134a. Where the true location of a boundary was involved, the deeds under which the parties claimed title were held competent evidence on plaintiff's part to show the location of the line and those executed to plaintiff to show his claim of title. —Wineman v. Grummond, 90 Mich. 280.

§ 27. ——Agreements or conveyances.

Settlement of boundary by agreement, see ante §§ 2-4.

¶ 135. A dividing line established for convenience by adjoining proprietors, and established by mutual quitclaims, is no evidence of the boundary as originally surveyed.—Dondero v. Frumveller, 61 Mich. 440.

§ 28. ——Fencing, improving or use of land.

Erection of party wall, see also post ¶ 199.
Weight to be given to evidence of early fencing or improvements on supposed line, see post § 33.

¶ 136. Disregard of the evidence furnished by fences, buildings and common repute, as to the true location of a surveyed line would justify granting a new trial in ejectment.—Baker v. McArthur, 54 Mich. 139.

¶ 137. In determining whether a boundary line has been established by acquiescence in a fence, the character of the land on either side should be taken into consideration, especially when unfit for husbandry and of little value even for pasturage.— Conner v. Detroit Terminal R. Co., 183 Mich. 241.

¶ 138. Where a surveyor had testified in an action of trespass that he had located a disputed section corner at a given point by reference to the field notes of the government survey, and that he had discovered there traces of the stake driven by the government surveyor to mark the place, it was not a material inquiry whether existing fences would have to be changed under his survey.—Woodbury v. Venia, 114 Mich. 251.

§ 29. ——Location of roads.

¶ 139. The record of the laying out and surveying of a state road is admissible without proof that it was ever opened or traveled, but it is immaterial for the purpose of defining the boundary of a tract under a deed calling for an existing highway, or under a prior deed calling for a "state road," which may have been a different one.—Atwood v. Canrike, 86 Mich. 99.

§ 30. ——Surveys and field notes.

Admissibility of evidence that datum taken for survey was erroneous, see post § 31.
Ex parte surveys, see also post ¶ 191.
Weight and effect of unrecorded survey, see also post ¶¶ 171, 172.
Relative weight of early and recent surveys as evidence, see post § 36.
Form and certification of the survey to be admissible, see Evidence, VIII, C.
County surveyor's survey as presumptive evidence of facts shown, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2481.

¶ 140. A county surveyor's certificate is not evidence of the facts therein contained (Comp. L. 1871, § 587, How. St., § 616) unless it contains the particulars required by Comp. L. 1871, § 590, How. St., § 619, to be entered in the surveyor's record; it must show that there was a survey, for whom made, etc.—Smith v. Rich, 37 Mich. 549.

¶ 141. The record of a county surveyor's survey that shows neither the name of the person for whom it was made nor the variation of the magnetic needle from the true meridian (How. St., § 619), is not admissible in evidence.—Van Der Groef v. Jones, 108 Mich. 65.

¶ 142. A survey recorded in the office of the county surveyor is admissible in an action of trespass under How. St., § 619.—Sherrard v. Cudney, 134 Mich. 200.

¶ 143. A resurvey which starts from a point outside of and not belonging to the immediate plan or local system that controlled the original survey is inadmissible to show that an old fence is an incorrect boundary.—Burns v. Martin, 45 Mich. 22.

¶ 144. A starting point cannot be assumed to be true merely because surveyors agree upon it; some proof must be made that it was one of the points actually fixed by the original survey before a survey starting from such point can be regarded.—Beaubien v. Kellogg, 69 Mich. 333.

¶ 145. In an action involving the boundary between a front and rear concession of a private claim, the field notes of the rear concession made by a United States surveyor are admissible in connection with the field notes of the front concession, to show the location of the witness trees as bearing upon the location of the true line and the quantity of land in each concession.—Olin v. Henderson, 120 Mich. 149.

¶ 146. In an action involving boundaries, evidence of a survey recently made, where the surveyor could find no old monument for a starting point, but started from a point which he testified he was certain was nearly correct, is admissible under instructions that its weight depends upon finding by the jury that the starting point was the proper one.—Olin v. Henderson, 120 Mich. 149.

¶ 147. Where a surveyor authorized by the board of supervisors to locate lost corners makes no return of his doings and does not cause the survey to be recorded, the fact of his authority to make the survey cannot be shown in a case where he has testified as to the location of the corners, for the jury might infer that his acts were official and so give his testimony undue weight.—Hess v. Meyer, 73 Mich. 259.

¶ 148. In ejectment to recover a strip of land separated from plaintiff's land by a line fence thirty years old, it was not error to refuse to strike out the testimony of a surveyor, testifying for plaintiff, that he ascertained that such fence stood several feet over plaintiff's land by measuring from a stone located at a certain corner, on the ground that there was no testimony showing that this was a proper starting point; where although the stone was not set at the time of the original survey, the fact that it stood very near if not at the center of two highways, and that it was properly situated with reference to a re-established quarter section post, furnished evidence of its proper location.—Miller v. Shumway, 135 Mich. 654.

¶ 149. In ejectment, it was not error to refuse to strike out the testimony of a surveyor, because in making his survey of the disputed strip he failed to observe all the requirements of law; where it might be fairly inferred that a correct measurement was made by the witness from the starting point and if so, it afforded evidence of the proper location of the disputed line.—Miller v. Shumway, 135 Mich. 654.

§ 31. ——Erroneous datum for survey.

¶ 150. In an action involving the boundary between two lots, where a surveyor testified that he took the center of a railroad track as a starting point on the assumption that the location of the track was in the exact center of the right of way, and that it had not been moved, it is error to exclude evidence that the track was not in the place where originally laid though the offer of such testimony did not include a proposition to show that the track was originally laid in the center of the right of way.—Anderson v. Wirth, 131 Mich. 183.

¶ 151. Where ejectment is based on an allegation of a mistake in the original survey, it is admissible to show that the boundaries have been defined for twenty years or more.—Diehl v. Zanger, 39 Mich. 601.

¶ 152. A resurvey was had when the evidences of the original survey had nearly disappeared, and a question afterwards arose as to where the true line was. The boundaries of property conveyed before the resurvey were not to be disturbed. Held proper to show that lots had been laid out and buildings put up with reference to the line as established by the first survey and that it had been shown by a recent survey that the line as run by the resurvey would cross lots and bisect buildings.—Baker v. McArthur, 54 Mich. 139.

¶ 153. Two official surveys having resulted differently the question in ejectment was the real location of a section line. Held proper to show that a surveyor who had helped to run the original line had again run it in laying out village lots, while the corner post and witness trees were still standing; and that afterwards a grantee had built a fence along the line so run, and this fence was understood in the neighborhood to indicate that line.—Baker v. McArthur, 54 Mich. 139.

¶ 154. Where the accuracy of the starting points taken for test surveys is merely matter of speculation, they cannot be used to fix a disputed boundary between two lots when the dispute arises from a discrepancy which affects all the lots in the block, and which must therefore be apportioned among them. —Reimers v. Quinnin, 49 Mich. 449.

Of evidence of old fences, etc., located on supposed line, see post § 33.
Of surveys and surveyors' testimony, see post §§ 34-36.
Instructions, see post § 40.

¶ 155. Ejectment for land described as being in the southeast quarter of a specified section cannot be maintained if the evidence shows that it lies west of a line drawn north and south through a quarter post that stands midway of the south section line.—Wilson v. Hoffman, 54 Mich. 246.

¶ 156. Evidence of plaintiff's possession of what he has occupied as his lot cannot be overthrown, in a case where title is not in question, by any proof of where the line ought to have been.—Fisher v. Dowling, 66 Mich. 370.

¶ 157. It requires something more than proof of an overplus of land to change boundaries that are marked by monuments. —Prudin v. Inglis, 121 Mich. 410.

¶ 158. A supposed boundary line long acquiesced in is better evidence of where the real line should be than a survey made after the original monuments have disappeared.—Hoffman v. City of Port Huron, 102 Mich. 417.

Earliness of survey as factor of weight, see post § 36.
Instructions as to, see post § 40.

¶ 159. A long-established fence is better evidence of actual boundaries settled by practical location than any survey made after the monuments of the original survey have disappeared.—Diehl v. Zanger, 39 Mich. 601.

¶ 160. Old fences have always been regarded as strong and trustworthy evidence in ascertaining and fixing boundaries.—Hoffman v. City of Port Huron, 102 Mich. 417.

¶ 161. As between old boundary fences and any survey made after monuments had disappeared, the fences are by far better evidence as to what the lines of a lot actually are.—Anderson v. Wirth, 134 Mich. 612.

¶ 162. An agreed dividing line between farms upon which a line fence has been maintained for nearly sixty years is better evidence than surveys made after government monuments have disappeared.—Pugh v. Shindler, 127 Mich. 191.

¶ 163. Fences and monuments of long standing, established not long after a survey and plat were made, are better evidence of true boundary lines than surveys made after the original stakes have disappeared.—Breakey v. Woolsey, 149 Mich. 86.

¶ 164. Fences which before their removal had stood a long time and the positions of which can be traced are strong evidence in fixing boundary lines as located by the original survey; and such lines are not to be disturbed by a new survey made from a starting point assumed by the late surveyors to be the true one.—Beaubien v. Kellogg, 69 Mich. 333.

¶ 165. Old fences are strong evidence in fixing boundary lines as located by the original survey; and if they have stood for twenty or thirty years they should be taken as the true lines, at least as against a resurvey which assumes a starting point at a certain street without any evidence that it was a point fixed by the original survey.—Beaubien v. Kellogg, 69 Mich. 333.

¶ 166. An old fence or a highway, merely supposed to be upon the boundary line between two sections, but not proved to have been erected or laid out with any reference to the original survey, is not better evidence of the actual location of a disputed section corner than surveys made from the government field notes by subsequent surveyors.—Woodbury v. Venia, 114 Mich. 251.

¶ 167. Undisputed evidence that a certain board fence had served as a line fence for many years together with confirming testimony as to the location of the boundary is held sufficient to support a decree fixing the dividing line.—Board of Managers of Michigan Soldiers' Home v. Jackman, 128 Mich. 679.

¶ 169. On a bill to establish a boundary line and to quiet title under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 256, § 36, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 11965, evidence held to sustain a finding that a boundary fence had been in existence for more than twenty years.—Parent v. Hodges, 188 Mich. 69.

§ 34. ——Official or recorded surveys.

See also ante ¶ 166.

¶170. The survey by the Federal Government of land adjacent to Lake Erie and the transfer to and sale by the state of the land up to the meander line of the lake as state swamp land conclusively establishes the boundaries of the lake and the titles of abutting owners extend to the meander line upon a presumption that must be conclusive.—Brown v. Parker, 127 Mich. 390.

¶ 171. No presumptions can be based upon the acts of a county surveyor relating to official surveys, unless the requirements of Comp. L. 1871, §§ 587, 590, How. St., §§ 616, 619, have been complied with. Oral evidence of his acts is of no more weight than similar evidence would be concerning the acts of any other surveyor.—Beeman v. Black, 49 Mich. 598.

¶ 172. Under How. St., § 616, the record of a survey by a county surveyor, if complying with the requirements of How. St., § 619, is presumptive evidence of the facts therein contained, and casts upon the opposing party the burden of producing evidence to rebut the presumption; but whenever other surveys, made by competent surveyors, are introduced, the survey of the county surveyor is of no more binding force than the others, unless it has been acquiesced in by the parties.—Van Der Groef v. Jones, 108 Mich. 65.

¶ 173. The record of a survey authorized under the statute to restore lost corners, etc., is evidence of the true location of the corners, but the work of the surveyor is not prima facie correct.—Hess v. Meyer, 73 Mich. 259.

§ 35. ——Surveyor's testimony or conclusions.

Impropriety of assuming data for relocation, see ante § 11.

¶ 174. A tangible and established boundary is not to be disturbed by a surveyor's opinion based on examination of records, etc.—Stewart v. Carleton, 31 Mich. 270.

¶ 175. In an action of ejectment involving a disputed boundary line, a surveyor, who had made a survey of the property, testified that he had taken pains to establish the correctness of a stake designating a section corner, used by him as a starting point; that he had used it for many years as a surveyor; that he knew it to be approximately the location of the original government section corner; that he had used said corner as thus located so frequently with reference to other surveys that he was perfectly sure of its correctness; and that, if it were not correct, the street to the north and the street to the west and the abutting lots would all be thrown out of line. Held, that the witness was shown by this testimony to be sufficiently familiar with the location of the stake to justify the inference by the jury that he had correctly located the starting point of his survey.—Manistee Mfg. Co. v. Cogswell, 103 Mich. 602.

Acquiescence as better evidence than survey, see ante § 32.

Superior weight of evidence of old fences, etc., see ante § 33.

Of official or government or recorded survey, see ante § 34.

Old line by acquiescence as overcoming new surveys, see also ante § 5.

Instructions as to, see post § 40.

¶ 176. Where the line between quarter sections of land has gone unquestioned for a long time—as in this case twenty-three years—it ought not to be disturbed upon a mere disagreement between surveys, especially if the later survey is made under circumstances unfavorable to accuracy, such as the absence of corner posts and witness trees and the existence of a boundary dispute.—Case v. Trapp, 49 Mich. 59.

¶ 177. It seems that a survey made much earlier than another and at a time when the old landmarks were more apt to be found and rightly located is to be preferred as the more correct.—Wilmarth v. Woodcock, 66 Mich. 331.

¶ 178. A resurvey made on the assumption that the correct magnetic declination was used in the original survey cannot be regarded as correct where as projected it leaves a government meander line and runs out into Lake Huron 40 rods beyond and 50 to 70 rods beyond a surveyed road line, and where it also disagrees with long established conditions, and where no effort was made to verify the assumed declination by reference to a connecting portion of the road.—Hoffman v. City of Port Huron, 102 Mich. 417.

¶ 180. Complainant brought a bill to enjoin defendant from building a new fence west of the fence which had for forty years stood as the line fence between complainant and defendant. There was no evidence that there had even been a dispute and an agreement establishing the old fence or any line as a boundary. The evidence showed two surveys, each made without an established starting point. One of them showed the boundary to be the old fence, the other that it should be some feet west of the old fence. Held, in view of the fact that the old fence was as likely to be the correct boundary as the new one, the decree for complainant should stand.—Parsons v. Bills, 163 Mich. 415.

¶ 181. The fact that the city surveyor, several years after a plat was made, made surveys of the land and located the boundaries of a tract according to the line of a warehouse, is not evidence that the warehouse line is the proper line of the plat in the face of further evidence to the contrary.—Anderson v. Wirth, 134 Mich. 612.

¶ 182. On a bill to establish a boundary line and to quiet title under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 256, § 36, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 11965, evidence held to sustain a finding that a particular survey was the correct one.—Parent v. Hodges, 188 Mich. 69.

§ 37. ——As to acquiescence or agreement.

¶ 183. A boundary by agreement or estoppel is not to be found on facts that heirs, assuming to represent themselves and infant coheirs, adopted a division line and with the other party built a fence thereon, that the fence remains, and that shortly after adopting it the heirs who negotiated the agreement, ascertaining that the other party had no title, gave notice that they would not carry out the agreement by making conveyances to the line in which all the heirs were to join as they came of age.—Wilson v. Hoffman, 70 Mich. 552.

¶ 184. The fact that the maker of a plat, several years afterwards located a warehouse along a railroad right of way, as shown, is not conclusive evidence that the warehouse represents the boundary line of the plat, in the face of other uncontroverted evidence to the contrary.—Anderson v. Wirth, 134 Mich. 612.

¶ 185. In ejectment, an attempt to fix the boundary line of a plat on the boundary of a warehouse, which it is alleged is fifty feet from the center of the railroad track, is defeated by evidence that after the plat was made showing such distance, the railroad track was moved two or three feet, that other monuments along the railroad track are situated at distances varying two or three feet, and that the lot owners have enjoyed possession of their respective lots since the time the plat was made, where all of these boundary lines of said lots would be changed a few inches if the plaintiff's contentions were upheld.—Anderson v. Wirth, 134 Mich. 612.

¶ 186. Evidence supporting an inference that all the parties agreed upon a survey, afterwards acquiesced in it and defendant changed the character of his occupancy in reliance upon such agreement, is sufficient to support a verdict for defendant in ejectment.—Brown v. Bowerman, 134 Mich. 695.

§ 38. ——As to water boundaries.

¶ 187. A government survey calling for a river at the end of the first course, and thence meandering it, will be held to have included area claimed to have been an island when the survey was made, where evidence is that the shore line has not changed in 30 to 60 years prior to 1897, and where the government field notes called for a stream intersecting the meander line which would require inclusion of the area, but a line run by a surveyor on an assumed starting point did not intersect the stream and could not be supported except by assuming its nonexistence. The case is governed by the rule that monuments prevail over courses and distances.—Brown v. Milliman, 119 Mich. 606.

General rules as to court and jury questions, see Instructions, I; Trial, VI.

Law and fact questions in adverse possession, see Adverse Possession, § 53.

¶ 188. What constitutes a boundary is a question for a jury, and is provable by any evidence which is admissible to prove any fact; e. g., actual occupation, ancient reputation, admissions of one in possession against his own interest, or agreements by the parties as to the place of the boundary.—Jones v. Pashby, 62 Mich. 614.

¶ 189. All bounds and starting points are questions of fact to be fixed by evidence.—Cronin v. Gore, 38 Mich. 381.

¶ 190. The location or starting point of a section line cannot be determined finally by the opinion of a surveyor, but is a question of fact for the jury.—Stewart v. Carleton, 31 Mich. 270.

¶ 191. Surveyors cannot finally determine boundaries; all bounds and starting points are questions of fact, to be determined by testimony; and ex parte surveys cannot be regarded.—Cronin v. Gore, 38 Mich. 381; Gregory v. Knight, 50 Mich. 61; O'Brien v. Cavanaugh, 61 Mich. 368; Fisher v. Dowling, 66 Mich. 370.

¶ 192. The true location of a disputed section line is a question of fact for a jury, where the evidence of the original surveyor and that of a subsequent one are in conflict.—Herpel v. Malone, 56 Mich. 199.

¶ 193. It seems that it would be proper to take the question of the location of a government corner from the jury, where surveyors, retracing the lines from field notes of the original government survey, located it and nothing contradicted them, although no witness trees were ever taken for the section in question, and the field notes called for a stake of which apparent traces were found by running lines from other monumented section corners; but at any rate it was not reversible error to submit it to the jury which found accordingly.—Woodbury v. Venia, 114 Mich. 251.

¶ 194. The question as to whether or not the defendant's fence was too far south of the true boundary of the tracts in question, was properly submitted to the jury, where there was testimony from which it might be found that plaintiff's claim was correct.—Pugh v. Schindler, 133 Mich. 314.

¶ 195. It is not error to submit to the jury as a question of fact the true boundaries of land described in a deed where such land faces a street which had apparently been widened by the owners of the lands adjacent thereto by adding ten feet to each side of said street as shown by the plat expressly referred to in such deed.—Rix v. Smith, 145 Mich. 203.

¶ 196. The location upon the ground of the boundary lines of lots described in the deeds as the north and south halves of certain lots, is a question for the jury, where the testimony tended to establish the correct line of the street lying to the north of the premises so divided, by running a line between a point at the northwest corner of the northeast corner of such premises, the location of such points being undisputed, that such line was found to coincide, not only with the platted distance from the section line, but also within an inch of the distance at which the street curb was actually laid, and the only testimony inconsistent therewith was that of an employee of the city who fixed the line for laying such curb, who testified that at the time of laying such curb there was a stake near the northwest corner 14 inches north from such straight line, but that there were also a number of stakes about there.—Turner v. Angus, 145 Mich. 679.

¶ 197. A., the owner of a parcel of land supposed to contain 40 acres, conveyed to B. and C. each 12½ acres of the north 25 acres, and to D. the south 15 acres of such parcel. It subsequently developed that the parcel did not contain full 40 acres. A boundary dispute arose between C. and D., and in a suit in ejectment brought by the latter, wherein C. claimed that D. had agreed to a line as established by a certain surveyor engaged by C., it appeared that the surveyor, without D.'s knowledge, had divided the land by giving to B. and C. the full amount described in their deeds, reducing D.'s parcel to the extent of the shortage. The evidence tended to show that B. and C. were parties to such arrangement. Held, that there was at least a question of fraud for the jury, and that even a direction of verdict for the plaintiff would have been proper.—Dauer v. Hildebrandt, 110 Mich. 272.

¶ 198. It is a question for the jury whether the north and south side boundaries of a city lot had been fixed by mutual agreement and acquiescence of the adjoining property owners who at various times had made deeds to rectify deviations from the lot lines and had fixed party-wall rights thereby.—Scott v. Baird, 145 Mich. 116.

¶ 199. It is a question for the jury whether the defendant in ejectment is not estopped to deny that the wall standing at the north and the wall standing at the south of a city lot are party walls and mark the north and south boundaries of such lot, where the evidence shows that the defendant admitted an agreement to establish and subsequently to such agreement had obtained a deed establishing the south wall as a party wall, and that defendant had represented to plaintiffs that the north and south walls marked the north and south boundaries of such lot.—Scott v. Baird, 145 Mich. 116.

¶ 200. Where in ejectment to establish a disputed boundary line there was testimony to support the claim of plaintiff as to making a survey in 1872 to fix the line, and there was built a fence thereon which had been recognized by the parties for more than twenty years, such was sufficient to put it before the jury, and it was error to direct a verdict although it was claimed that the effect of this testimony had been destroyed by the cross-examination of the witness.—Coleman v. Robens, 146 Mich. 333.

¶ 201. In an action of ejectment arising out of an alleged encroachment of two inches on plaintiff's property by defendant's building, it was held that the property line between the adjoining lots was a question for the jury.—Outhwaite v. Gunn, 180 Mich. 66.

§ 40. Instructions.

General law of instructions, see Instructions.
As to correctness of assumed starting point, see also ante ¶ 146.

¶ 202. In an action involving title to land along the boundary between two concessions of a private claim, it is not error to instruct the jury that the question is where the true line between the two concessions lay unless a line had been established by adverse possession, where there is no evidence that there was any unsurveyed land between the two concessions.—Olin v. Henderson, 120 Mich. 149.

¶ 203. It was not error to tell the jury in the charge in an ejectment case involving the true location of fences, that plaintiff claimed that such fences started at a quarter post when built, where the charge did not state what the testimony was in that regard, and the whole question was left to the jury upon such evidence as there was as to where the quarter posts were.—Pugh v. Schindler, 133 Mich. 314.

¶ 204. When admissions of a party as to location of a boundary, made at the time of a survey had for the purpose of ascertaining the line, are introduced, he is entitled to an instruction explaining the effect to be given such admissions.—Sherrard v. Cudney, 134 Mich. 200.

¶ 205. Where a survey which attempted to reproduce the original regarded the lines of twenty-year-old fences, while a later survey, made after the fences had been removed, assumed a starting point, it was held that the jury should have been instructed to consider the relative situations of the fences in determining which survey best reproduced the lines as originally located.—Beaubien v. Kellogg, 69 Mich. 333.

¶ 207. In ejectment where the true location of a fence was in dispute, an instruction telling the jury that the old crooked fence in question was better evidence of the line in its entirety and at all points than a survey lately made, was properly refused, and especially so, as from the counsel's statement there was no presumption that the fence as a whole was upon a true line if it was a crooked fence.—Pugh v. Schindler, 133 Mich. 314.

¶ 208. An instruction that the jury is not bound by surveys introduced in an ejectment trial, but must consider them with other evidence as to location of the monuments is correct.—Dawson v. Falls City Boat Club, 125 Mich. 433.

¶ 209. It is not error to refuse requested instructions relative to the inaccuracies of early plats, and that such should not be subject to correction by new surveys, where the only plat in the case was made in 1899, and the trial was soon thereafter.—Dubay v. Kelly, 137 Mich. 345.

¶ 210. An instruction in a disputed boundary case, bearing on the acquisition of the strip by adverse possession which in turn depended on whether a fence established on the supposed line had thereafter been moved, is misleading, where it refers to "that property" in telling the jury that if the fence was moved the possession thereby acquired was shifting and not the basis of adverse possession, and where under the evidence it was possible that it had been moved without passing over the true line or taking in any property that did not belong to the party.—Dawson v. Falls City Boat Club, 142 Mich. 615.

¶ 2. Laws 1864, Act No. 23, providing for the payment of a state bounty of $100 to soldiers enlisting after its passage, and credited under any call or order made or issued since January 1, 1864, applies only to soldiers who enlisted under the call of February 1, 1864.—Smith v. Board of State Auditors, 85 Mich. 407.

¶ 3. Under the act of March 6, 1863, authorizing the payment of a state bounty to volunteers in the military service of the United States, when the state authorities had offered a bounty they had no right to discriminate between the various classes of volunteers who came within the terms of the offer. A man drafted for nine months, and then allowed to volunteer for three years, was entitled to the bounty.—People ex rel. Blair v. Quartermaster General, 12 Mich. 191.

¶ 4. Where one enlisted March 12, 1864, and was credited to a town whose quota under the call of October 17 was not full, he was held not entitled to the bounty under Laws 1864, Act No. 23.—People ex rel. Lomane v. Hammond, 13 Mich. 247.

¶ 5. Where one enlisted after the quota of the town to which he was credited was actually filled, he was entitled to the bounty under Laws 1864, Act No. 23, notwithstanding the state authorities at the time supposed it was not filled.—People ex rel. Nichols v. Palmer, 19 Mich. 384.

¶ 6. Laws 1864, Act No. 23, authorizing the payment of bounties to volunteers from this state in the military service of the United States, was designed to distinguish between volunteers under the president's call of October 17, 1863, and those enlisting under the call of February 1, 1864, and to provide a bounty for the latter only.—People ex rel. Lomane v. Hammond, 13 Mich. 247.

¶ 7. The act authorizing the payment of a state bounty, not exceeding $50, to each volunteer from this state mustered in the national military service (Laws of 1863, p. 60), conferred on the governor a discretionary power in the exercise of which he might confine the bounty to such organizations, or such branch of the service, as, in his opinion, the public interest might require, provided it should be uniform to all coming within the terms of the order. The word "each" is to be understood only as restrictive of the amount that could be paid, and not as designating the persons who should be included within the offer of bounty.—People ex rel Hanselmann v. Quartermaster General, 14 Mich. 23.

¶ 8. Where the governor, by a published order, offered a uniform bounty of $50 to each volunteer who should enlist and be mustered into the service of the United States "in any regiment or battery," held, that the terms of such order did not embrace volunteers in a separate company, like the state guard.—People ex rel Hanselmann v. Quartermaster General, 14 Mich. 23.

¶ 9. A substitute is not a volunteer within the meaning of the acts providing for bounties to volunteers.—People ex rel. Giddings v. Quartermaster General, 25 Mich. 340.

¶ 10. Under municipal resolutions authorizing the payment of bounties to such as shall give satisfactory evidence that they have furnished a recruit, one enlisting of his own motion, and without solicitation, might "furnish" himself as an enlisted man.—Roberts v. Field, 27 Mich. 337.

§ 3. ——Assignment of bounties.

¶ 12. Laws 1864, Act No. 23, only authorized the raising of money to pay bounties, as such, to the person enlisting; when, therefore, a recruit, "for value received," assigned his certificate of enlistment, together with the bounty to be paid for such enlistment and additional bounty was afterwards granted by municipal action taken under said act, it was held that he had assigned only so much as had been actually advanced to him by the assignee, and that whatever additional bounty might afterwards be drawn by the assignee on the strength of the assignment was drawn to the use of the recruit.—Roberts v. Field, 27 Mich. 337.

¶ 13. The assignment by a recruit of a future bounty coming from a municipal corporation was held sufficient evidence, as between the assignee and the corporation, that the bounty had been paid or purchased by the assignee; as between the assignee and the recruit, however, it is not conclusive evidence of such payment, but may be explained by oral evidence, like a mere receipt.—Roberts v. Field, 27 Mich. 337.

§ 4. ——Allowance and payment.

Persons entitled, see ante § 2.
Refundment by townships, see Townships, III.

¶ 14. By Laws 1881, Act No. 173, the quartermaster general's authority in allowing claims for bounties for soldiers, under Laws 1864, Act No. 23, is revoked, and such claims, like others against the state, must be established before the board of state auditors, consisting of the secretary of state, state treasurer, and commissioner of the state land office.—Smith v. Aplin, Auditor General, 80 Mich. 205.

§ 15. The proviso to Laws 1881, Act No. 183, repealing the war bounty acts of 1864 and 1871, recognized and preserved the rights of soldiers to their bounties under such acts, and is a waiver of the statute of limitations. —Smith v. Aplin, Auditor General, 80 Mich. 205.

§ 1. A breach of promise suit does not lie upon a minor's promise to marry.—Frost v. Vought, 37 Mich. 65.

¶ 2. Where a man who is engaged to one woman marries another, he has put it out of his power to marry the first, who has thus an immediate right of action against him for breach of promise.—Sheahan v. Barry, 27 Mich. 217.

¶ 3. It cannot be said as matter of law that persons otherwise competent, occupying immoral relations, may not contract marriage with each other.—Foss v. Brown, 151 Mich. 119.

¶ 4. Where a woman submits herself to the sexual embraces of a man solely in consider. tion of his promise to marry her if she becomes pregnant, such consider tion is immoral and a promise based thereon is void. —Gagush v. Hoeft, 198 Mich. 263.

¶¶ 5, 6. A declaration for breach of promise averred a promise to marry plaintiff (1) on request; (2) within a reasonable time; and (3) generally. Held, that evidence was admissible to prove a promise to marry when certain buggies were finished, at all events where this promise was only a part of what had passed between the parties, on which the suit was based.—Bennett v. Beam, 42 Mich. 346.

¶ 7. In an action for breach of promise to marry it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove that defendant was of full age when the contract was made.—Simmons v. Simmons, 8 Mich. 318.

§ 4. ——Evidence.

Competency of evidence in general, see Evidence.

Evidence as to damages, see Damages, XI.

Mode of examination and cross-examination of parties, see Examination of Witnesses.

¶ 8. In an action to recover damages for breach of promise of marriage, aggravated by claimed seduction, a wide range of inquiry as to the conduct of the parties during the existence of the claimed contract, as well as the causes attending the breaking of the engagement is permissible.—Bischoff v. Harris, 198 Mich. 59.

¶ 9. It is not error to allow proof that defendant borrowed money of plaintiff, and renewed his notes therefor immediately before marrying another, as it is important for the jury to understand as fully as possible the mutual conduct of the parties during the existence of the contract, as well as the causes and circumstances attending the breaking off of the engagement.—Simmons v. Simmons, 8 Mich. 318.

¶ 10. Proof of the frequent intermarriage of the ancestors of the parties—who are cousins—and of the evil tendency of the marriage of relations in producing deformed or sickly and imbecile children, is incompetent where the contract was not broken on any such ground.—Simmons v. Simmons, 8 Mich. 318.

¶ 12. Where in reply to a note from plaintiff, asking why he did not call, defendant, sued for breach of promise to marry, had replied that it was because his proposal of marriage was never accepted and he had concluded that his company was not wanted and there was no use in coming, her ensuing letter stating that she thought he knew his offer was accepted, and that she would not have him think otherwise, is admissible in her behalf as part of the res gestæ.—Rutter v. Collins, 96 Mich. 510.

¶ 13. Judgment in favor of a woman complaining of breach of promise was, by the equal division of the Supreme Court, left standing, where the error assigned was that plaintiff's witnesses had been allowed to state what she had, in defendant's absence, told them, tending to show that she was engaged to him.—McPherson v. Ryan, 59 Mich. 33.

§ 5. ——Evidence as to promise.

¶ 14. Plaintiff, in a breach of promise suit, may put in evidence the letters written by her to defendant before she broke the engagement.—Vanderpool v. Richardson, 52 Mich. 336.

¶ 15. Where plaintiff in a breach of promise suit has put her letters to defendant in evidence, defendant may put in evidence the replies.—Vanderpool v. Richardson, 52 Mich. 336.

¶ 16. Where defendant admits making an offer of marriage which plaintiff testifies she accepted, while defendant testifies there was no acceptance, the subsequent conduct of the parties is admissible as bearing on the truth of their respective stories as to what occurred when the offer was made, but their conduct from the time of their introduction cannot be considered in determining their agreement.—Rutter v. Collins, 96 Mich. 510.

¶ 17. In a breach of promise suit, the plaintiff claimed she cohabited with defendant trusting to his agreement that he would marry her. Held, evidence was admissible of acts and declarations made in defendant's presence to show that he held out the plaintiff as his wife and treated her two adopted children as his own.—Duff v. Judson, 160 Mich. 386.

¶ 18. Surmises and conclusions of witnesses, based on what they have observed of mutual behavior, are not sufficient to prove a promise of marriage; the facts observed should be shown.—Vanderpool v. Richardson, 52 Mich. 336.

¶ 19. Where in an action for breach of contract to marry, plaintiff confesses to the establishment of immoral relations with defendant, it cannot be said as matter of law that her testimony does not tend to prove the mutual promises relied on, made when she was legally competent to contract.—Foss v. Brown, 151 Mich. 119.

§ 6. ——Instructions and jury questions.

In general, see Instructions; Trial, VI.
Instructions as to damages, see Damages, XII.

¶ 20. In an action for breach of promise and seduction a charge to the effect that if the promise was made solely in consideration of sexual intercourse, and to be fulfilled in case of pregnancy, it was void, held correct.—Jaskolski v. Morawski, 178 Mich. 325.

¶ 21. In an action for breach of marriage promise, aggravated by seduction, a requested instruction that if the jury found that the only consideration for the promise, if any promise was made, of marriage, was a promise that, if plaintiff would submit herself to have sexual intercourse with defendant, he would marry her in case she became pregnant, and that was the only consideration, the contract rested upon an immoral consideration and was void, held to be improperly refused.—Gagush v. Hoeft, 198 Mich. 263.

¶ 22. Alluding in the charge in a breach of promise case to "the contract under which this suit was brought," while giving the rule of damages, does not assume that there was a contract to marry, where the immediately succeeding part of the charge expressly disavowed that meaning and left it to the jury whether there was a contract proven.—Rutter v. Collins, 103 Mich. 143.

¶ 23. A charge: "Taking into consideration what I have said, and what has been given you bearing upon the subject during the courtship, and after the time it is claimed that the contract was made, which has been allowed to go to you as bearing upon the proposition of her acceptance and the forming of a contract, looking the whole situation of the parties over in connection with all the evidence here, you are to decide who is in the right in that contention," cannot be regarded as having misled the jury as to the question so left to them, where the quoted language followed a charge which was explicit on the sole subject of an offer by defendant and an acceptance by plaintiff of a proposal to marry.—Rutter v. Collins, 103 Mich. 143.

¶ 24. In a breach of promise suit, it was not prejudicial error for the trial court to suggest in his charge that the Supreme Court and a certain judge had not considered an alleged compromise a bar to the suit, where the court added that if the compromise was made without fraud or deceit it would bar a recovery by plaintiff.—Duff v. Judson, 160 Mich. 386.

¶ 2. Authority granted by the board of county supervisors in 1891 for the construction of a bridge by a city, is sufficient to cover the construction of a bridge in 1902. —Kundinger v. City of Saginaw, 132 Mich. 395.

¶ 3. Where the proceedings for laying out a highway were regular and the said highway was to extend across a millpond, although the petition made no reference to the construction of a bridge, such construction is necessarily implied.—Andrews v. Weckerman, 144 Mich. 199.

¶ 4. The duty of mill owners to build and maintain a bridge over a mill race is a common-law duty.—McRae v. Township of Hart, 179 Mich. 325.

¶ 5. Public Acts, 1909, No. 283, Ch. VIII, §§ 14-16 relative to the construction and repairing of bridges over mill races is an affirmance of the common-law duty and affords a means of benefit to the public.—McRae v. Township of Hart, 179 Mich. 325.

§ 3. Regulation and manner of construction.

Issue of bonds for building of bridge by city, see Municipal and Public Bonds.

¶ 6. A township which has acquired a right to construct a highway across a millpond is not limited to any particular form of structure, but is under obligation to leave an opening sufficient for the flow of water at ordinary stages of high and low water, and having done this might erect a solid embankment from the shores to the bridge over such opening, and any injury resulting to the water power is damnum absque injuria.—Andrews v. Weckerman, 144 Mich. 199.

II. USE, CONTROL AND MAINTENANCE.

Public duty to erect and keep up bridges, see post V.

§ 4. In general.

Right of recovery for injury to bridge, see post § 25.

¶ 7. Under 1 Comp. L. 1897, § 3441, and 2 Comp. L. 1897, §§5516-5521, the bridge commission acquiring a drawbridge from Bay County, and controlling the same, is acting in the interest of the public, and is not liable as an independent corporation for torts to third persons arising from the negligent operation of the bridge.—Scharman v. Bay County Bridge Commission, 158 Mich. 77. (Blair, C. J., Moore, Montgomery and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

§ 5. Responsibility and control.

Degree of care required in maintenance of bridge, see post §§ 8-10.
Power of legislature to interfere with control of bridge by city authorities, see Constitutional Law, II.
Officers intrusted with care and custody of bridges within city limits, see Municipal Corporations, VIII.

¶ 8. In an action for personal injuries caused by defective railing on a bridge over a mill race on a state road within the corporate limits of a village, the road having been laid and the bridge built before the incorporation of the village, under Comp. L. 1897, § 2775, and Public Acts 1909, ch. VIII, § 26, the authority to repair the bridge vested in the township and not in the village, and hence the former and not the latter is liable.—McRae v. Township of Hart, 179 Mich. 325.

¶ 9. Since the public must use a bridge constructed over a mill race on a highway, negligence of the owner in failing to construct or repair the bridge may support an action by an individual lawfully using the highway and injured by defects in the bridge.—McRae v. Township of Hart, 179 Mich. 325.

¶ 9a. A railroad company which built a bridge over its tracks under contract with a city under which the company agreed to maintain the masonry and foundations at its own expense and to deliver the bridge to the city, was not liable for an injury sustained by a pedestrian because of defects in planking, after the bridge was turned over to the city, as the company was under no legal obligation to maintain the bridge, and the superstructure was to be under the control of the city to be maintained at its expense.—Wetherbee v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 122 Mich. 1.

§ 6. Boundary bridges.

Proper plaintiff to sue for injury to bridge, see post § 25.

Duty to erect or reconstruct, and apportionment of expense, see post §§ 28, 29.

¶ 10. Two townships contracted under Laws 1861, No. 163, § 4, that each should maintain specified divisions of a highway upon the township line between them, and the agreement was performed for many years. Subsequently one township knowingly allowed a bridge on its division to remain out of repair, whereby plaintiff was injured. Held, that plaintiff could recover, although the contract was not recorded as required by the statute.—Hunter v. Township of Dwight, 157 Mich. 634.

§ 7. Joint use and liability.

¶ 11. In construing a contract by which a railroad company agreed to keep in repair the road-bed or road-way across the draw in a draw-bridge used by it, and by which a bridge company agreed to keep in repair the highway or roadway across said drawbridge used exclusively by it, it being mutually agreed that all other portions of said drawbridge, its piers and abutments, should be maintained in common by both of the parties, the wheels supporting the draw, upon which it rested and turned, are to be regarded as included with the "other portions of the draw-bridge" mentioned in the contract—Portage Lake Bridge Co. v. Wright, 78 Mich. 426.

¶ 12. In an action for injuries sustained as a result of the defective railing of a bridge over a mill race, both the owner of the mill and the township in which the bridge was situated may properly be joined as parties defendant, since though legal defense is open to one defendant it may not have been open to the other, as both defendants owed ultimately the same duty.—McRae v. Township of Hart, 179 Mich. 325.

III. INJURIES TO USERS AND ADJACENT PROPERTY.

§ 8. Duty and negligence as to construction, inspection and repair.

What constitutes negligence in permitting use for heavy vehicle, see also post ¶ 23.

Pleading negligence, see post § 15.

Necessity of railing as fact question, see post § 20.

¶ 13. The obligation of a township is to provide reasonably safe bridges under existing conditions and it is not liable for the failure to provide structures that will not sustain loads that could not reasonably be anticipated.—Moore v. Township of Hazelton, 118 Mich. 425.

¶ 14. Such means should be employed by township officers from time to time in making their examinations of bridges, as usually disclose the defects to be expected.—Stebbins v. Township of Keene, 55 Mich. 552.

Sufficiency of guard rail or barrier on bridges as dependent upon ability to resist automobiles and other vehicles, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 1022-1025.

What are bridges within statute rendering public corporations liable for injuries thereon, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 199-207.

§ 9. ——Notice of defect.

Presumptions and evidence as to notice of defects, see post § 17.

Presumptions from fact of repairs after notice of defect, see post § 16.

Questions of fact, see also post § 20.

Instructions as to notice of defects, see post § 21.

¶ 15. The failure of a township to keep a bridge in a reasonably safe condition for travel is not a ground of recovery, unless knowledge or notice of the existence of the defect and an opportunity to remedy it is shown, and such notice is not inferable from a mere failure to seasonably inspect.—Pearl v. Township of Benton, 123 Mich. 411.

¶ 16. Those whose duty it is to keep a bridge in repair may be charged with notice of a deficiency, if, when repairs are going on, caused by suspicious appearance in one part of the timber, a full examination is not made.—Stebbins v. Township of Keene, 60 Mich. 214.

¶ 17. A city was not liable for an injury sustained through the absence of a short board forming part of the floor of an iron bridge which was first observed to be loose on Saturday night preceding the Tuesday on which the accident occurred, where the board had been put back in place and thus gave no sign of the defect, and where the city had no notice and there was no evidence from which notice could be properly inferred; the mere neglect of the city to inspect not being actionable under Comp. L. 1897, § 3441 et seq., imposing liability for injuries sustained upon a defective bridge provided the city had reasonable notice of the defect.—Thomas v. City of Flint, 123 Mich. 10.

¶ 18. Notice to a contractor that a bridge was not properly built would not be notice to the town that such bridge was weak, such contractor not being an officer of the town. —Moore v. Township of Hazelton, 118 Mich. 425.

§ 10. ——Means or ability to repair.

¶ 19. A township which elected to maintain its highways and bridges, not by general taxation as provided by the general highway act, Comp. L. 1897, § 4104-4114, but by the labor of the inhabitants, under chapters 2 and 3, sections 4072-4103, was not relieved from the obligation to keep its highways in repair as provided by Pub. Acts 1887, Act No. 264, because it had neither the means nor the authority to comply with such act; as the township had authority to make repairs under sections 1, 2 and 3 of chapter 7 of the highway act, and was therefore not relieved from liability for a personal injury sustained upon a bridge.—Pearl v. Township of Benton, 136 Mich. 697.

§ 11. Injury and proximate cause.

Instructions, see post § 21.

¶ 20. Where plaintiff's horse, frightened by a hole in a bridge, backed against the railing of the bridge, which gave way and threw plaintiff below, the defective condition of the bridge is the proximate cause of the injury.—Smith v. Township of Sherwood, 62 Mich. 159.

¶ 21. A township is not responsible for injuries to a driver of a vehicle, caused by a horse being frightened because of a large crack in the snow on the bridge, as the want of barriers was not the proximate cause of the injury, but a remote cause, and the township is liable only where the negligence complained of is the proximate cause of the injury.—White v. Township of Riley, 121 Mich. 418.

¶ 22. Under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 5516, 5517 (How. 2d Ed., §§ 4239, 4240), a city is liable in a civil action for the death of an occupant of an automobile, which was driven by the owner, due to the failure of the bridge tender to close the gates on the approach to a drawbridge while the bridge was up, resulting in the automobile going into the river and drowning such occupant.—Beach v. City of St. Joseph, 192 Mich. 296.

§ 12. Injury in unusual use.

Overloading as contributory neglect, see post § 14.

Question for the jury as to what load a bridge must be able to sustain, see post ¶ 56.

Instructions, see post § 21.

¶ 23. Where the driver of an engine was warned to use planks in crossing a bridge, and told by the highway commissioner that it would be safe if planks were used and probably was safe anyway, and planks were used but the engine fell off the planks and through the bridge, the township, not being an insurer, was not liable though the running off the planks was not due to plaintiff's negligence.—Comstock v. Township of Georgetown, 137 Mich. 541.

§ 13. Contributory negligence.

Mode of questioning of plaintiff as to carelessness, see Examination of Witnesses, II.

Presumptions and evidence as to, see post §§ 18, 19.

Questions for jury, see post § 20.

Instructions as to contributory negligence, see post § 21.

¶ 24. There is contributory negligence in driving across a bridge so recklessly and turning off from it so abruptly as to suffer injury in consequence of catching the wheel in or upon some crack or obstruction not in the traveled part of the way. And it is no excuse that others are similarly careless, especially if one is not familiar with the bridge and cannot therefore rely upon the carelessness of others.—Abernethy v. Township of Van Buren, 52 Mich. 383; Beckwith v. Township of Van Buren, 66 Mich. 89.

¶ 25. One, who starts to cross a bridge when a vicious bull is being driven across and is tossed by the bull, is not contributorily negligent if ignorant of the bull's vicious disposition.—Barnum v. Terpening, 75 Mich. 557.

¶ 26. Plaintiff was injured by his team and wagon falling off a bridge without railings, in the night-time, and sued defendant township. He was familiar with the bridge, but did not go ahead of the team to find his way. Held, he was not as matter of law guilty of contributory negligence.—Priebe v. Township of Moorland, 162 Mich. 110.

¶ 27. A bicyclist misled by the moonlight and shadows on a bridge, which is not in alignment with the road, who turns from one side of the road to the other for a better path and thereby falls off the bridge, which is not protected by a rail, cannot be said to be guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.—Lauder v. Township of St. Clair, 125 Mich. 479.

¶ 28. A drawbridge was opened with no signal of danger except a bell placed upon it. The night was dark, and a bicyclist approaching at a moderate speed ran into the open bridge and was drowned. There was evidence that he looked both up and down the river and directly ahead while approaching. Held, he was not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence.—Scharman v. Bay County Bridge Commission, 158 Mich. 77. (Brooke and Grant, JJ., dissenting.)

§ 14. ——Overloading; heavy vehicles.

Evidence as to, see also post § 18.

¶ 29. One who crosses a bridge with an unusually heavy load does so at his own risk.—Fulton Iron & Engine Works v. Township of Kimball, 52 Mich. 146.

§ 15. Actions and pleading.

Joinder of owner of mill race and township as defendants in action for negligence in repairing bridge, see ante ¶ 12.

General law of pleading and practice, see Pleading, and other specific practice topics.

¶ 30. A declaration for causing the death of plaintiff's intestate alleged that the planks in the bridge where the accident occurred were loose, and the stringers uneven, so that the planks were liable to slip off and turn over, and thereby to trip horses, and that decedent's horses became entangled in the loose planks and thereby tripped. The evidence showed that there was a broken plank and a hole in consequence thereof, and that one of the horses driven by decedent had stepped into the hole, whereby the team became frightened, resulting in the injury complained of. Held, no variance.—Merkle v. Township of Bennington, 68 Mich. 133.

¶ 32. Plaintiff's intention to rely upon structural as well as surface defects in a bridge, by the collapse of which she claims to have been injured, is sufficiently indicated by the averment in her declaration that defendant allowed its sidewalk and bridge "to become and remain broken, torn up, and out of repair, and not reasonably safe and convenient for public travel," and that, "while the plaintiff was walking over said walk and bridge, said sidewalk and bridge, by reason of its being in an unsafe, broken, torn up, and out of repair condition, broke and fell into the river." So held, at least, where, though no demurrer had been interposed, want of notice of the exact nature of the claim was urged to defeat the verdict.—Snyder v. City of Albion, 113 Mich. 275.

¶ 33. In an action for injury from a defective highway, which injury was caused by a horse's backing off from an unguarded approach to a bridge, a variance of four feet between the evidence and the averment in the declaration as to the distance from the end of the bridge to the point at which the horse backed off is not fatal.—Ross v. Township of Ionia, 104 Mich. 320.

¶ 34. In an action against a township for failing to maintain a bridge in proper condition the declaration alleged fully the defective condition of the bridge, and that because of such condition plaintiff's horse became frightened and sprang suddenly forward with great violence, whereby his wagon came against loose planks, and was suddenly checked, causing plaintiff to be jerked and thrown forward. Held, that proof of the dangerous condition of the bridge and that the horse stepped into holes caused by the loose planks, whereby the progress of the wagon was suddenly checked and plaintiff was thrown forward, sufficiently supports the declaration.—Hunter v. Township of Dwight, 157 Mich. 634.

¶ 35. A declaration for injuries on "a bridge" on Lake street in defendant village "constructed across Bear river and flume, as aforesaid," further alleging that for want of a railing plaintiff fell from the bridge over the raceway (flume), is sufficient to allow recovery respecting negligence in keeping up the bridge over the flume, which was a duty of the village; though there were in fact two adjacent bridges, one over the flume and one over the river, and it was the duty of the township at large to keep up the bridge over the river.—Williams v. Village of Petoskey, 108 Mich. 260.

¶ 36. An allegation in a declaration in an action for personal injuries against a township caused by the falling of a bridge, that the original construction of the bridge was defective in that the bridge which crossed a drain, rested on mudsills which were not sunk below the bottom of such drain, and that the bridge was not properly braced and strengthened and no piling or posts were driven to prevent the mudsills from dropping into the drain, does not warrant recovery on the ground of negligent construction, where each count showed that no such claim was relied on but that the accident was ascribed to a subsequent deepening of the ditch whereby the undermining by the action of the water occurred.—Pearl v. Township of Benton, 123 Mich. 411.

§ 16. Presumptions and evidence.

As to contributory negligence, see post § 18.
Weight and sufficiency, see post § 19.
In cases of injury on highways, see Highways, XII, H.

¶ 37. In the absence of any knowledge on the subject or anything apparent to observation that would lead to a contrary opinion, it may be presumed that a township has repaired a weak and shaky bridge after a lapse of a year from the time that it was known to be in that condition.—Moore v. Township of Hazelton, 118 Mich. 425.

¶ 38. In an action for injury resulting from the breaking of a bridge, evidence of new methods in building bridges is immaterial unless it appears that there was fault in not knowing and using them.—Fulton Iron & Engine Works v. Township of Kimball, 52 Mich. 146.

¶ 39. As bearing on negligence in failing to repair a bridge it is not competent to show in what manner the city repaired the bridge after the accident.—Woodbury v. City of Owosso, 64 Mich. 239.

¶ 40. In a suit against a township for injuries received by plaintiff in being thrown from a bridge through the backing of his horse which took fright at a hole in the bridge, it is competent to show particular instances of other horses being frightened at the hole; such evidence tended to show the dangerous character of the bridge, and knowledge thereof on the part of the township authorities.—Smith v. Township of Sherwood, 62 Mich. 159.

¶ 41. One who sued a drawbridge company for the injury caused him by falling in the night into the gap while the draw was open, and who alleged that defendant negligently left it so without any protection against the opening, is entitled to show the situation and circumstances at the time of the accident, including the number of men in charge of the bridge, and the fact that during the month when it happened there was no bar or gate, or anything put up by the company when the draw was open.—Goodale v. Portage Lake Bridge Co., 55 Mich. 413.

¶ 42. In an action against a bridge company for personal injuries sustained by a man falling into the draw in the night, it is proper to show that a bull's-eye-headlight, so placed as to illuminate the toll-house, did not shine so as to show the opening when the bridge was drawn.—Goodale v. Portage Lake Bridge Co., 55 Mich. 413.

¶ 43. A traveler, at night, fell into an open draw on a toll-bridge. Held, in his action against the bridge company, that if negligence was shown a liability existed; that it might be shown that the bridge company knew its draw-tender to be incompetent, and that the light was so placed as not to show the opening, and generally the situation and circumstances existing at the time.—Goodale v. Portage Lake Bridge Co., 55 Mich. 413.

§ 17. ——As to structural conditions and notice thereof.

See also ante ¶¶ 37, 38, and § 9.

¶ 44. The general condition of a bridge at the time of an accident from its non-repair being in issue, it is proper to ask, after evidence had been offered showing the condition of the lugs which carried the floor joists where the accident occurred, about the condition of the lugs on the other part of the bridge.—Woodbury v. City of Owosso, 64 Mich. 239.

¶ 45. Where a city is sued for injuries from a defective bridge, evidence that a few days before the accident another person drove over it and found the planks loose, by reason of which his horses fell through, is competent as tending to show the bridge's condition before the accident complained of occurred, there having been no repairs meantime.—Woodbury v. City of Owosso, 64 Mich. 239.

¶ 46. Where the condition of a bridge at the time of an accident is in issue, evidence that some of its planks were loose and that its stringers were rotten less than a month before is admissible.—Lay v. City of Adrian, 75 Mich. 438.

¶ 47. To rebut testimony that the stringers of a bridge were not decayed, as alleged by plaintiff, the latter may in rebuttal interrogate as to the condition of the bridge a witness who had walked over the bridge the day of the accident and before plaintiff left it.—Lay v. City of Adrian, 75 Mich. 438.

¶ 48. On issue of the strength of defendant's bridge evidence of the strength of the bridge to sustain heavy loads at the time of the trial and after the structure has been changed, is inadmissible.—Woodbury v. City of Owosso, 64 Mich. 239.

¶ 49. In an action against a city under the Highway Damage Act (Comp. L. 1915, § 4287 et seq.) for the death of the occupant of an automobile who met his death as the result of the car plunging into the river while a drawbridge was open at night, and alleged to be due to the failure of the bridge tender to lower the gates, which were operated by an electric button, and where defendant contended that the accident was due to a defective mechanism which had not been discovered at the time of the accident, held that evidence that the morning after the accident a defect was discovered in the mechanism of the gate which prevented its lowering when the button was turned the first time the defendant attempted to lower it after the accident, that neither the defendant nor its agents knew of any such defect before the injury, nor had any notice, and that one of defendant's officers, when the gate refused to work on a subsequent trial, ordered the draw closed, and fixed the defect so that it then worked, was erroneously excluded.—Beach v. City of St. Joseph, 192 Mich. 296.

§ 18. ——Of contributory negligence.

See also ante § 13.

Cross-examination of plaintiff as to carelessness, see Examination of Witnesses, II.

¶ 50. In an action for injuries caused by the breaking of a bridge while an engine was crossing it, testimony is admissible to show that it was negligent and unusual to take a tank full of water upon the bridge with the engine, such evidence being competent on the question of defendant's negligence and on plaintiff's contributory negligence.—Comstock v. Township of Georgetown, 137 Mich. 541.

¶ 51. The exclusion of evidence that a threshing machine outfit consisting of a ten-horse engine and a tank full of water is an extraordinary load for a bridge is error where the other party to an action has been allowed to prove that such engines or larger ones frequented the highways of the township.—Moore v. Township of Hazelton, 118 Mich. 425.

¶ 52. In action for negligence in leaving a drawbridge unguarded by reason of a broken guard chain, where a defense of contributory negligence was made, it was proper to receive proof that on a prior occasion deceased rode his bicycle against the chain, since it tended to show knowledge of the situation; but it was inadmissible to show that he was habitually a careless rider and so inferentially was negligent on the occasion when he met his death.—Benedict v. City of Port Huron, 124 Mich. 600.

§ 19. ——Weight and sufficiency.

¶ 53. It is only necessary for a party injured by a defective bridge in an action for damages to show upon the subject, by proper testimony, knowledge on the part of the township officers of such a state of facts as reasonably and necessarily made it their duty to examine and act, in order to protect the traveling public, and their neglect to do so.—Stebbins v. Township of Keene, 55 Mich. 552.

¶ 54. Evidence that in rebuilding a bridge the township left the mudsills some 12 to 16 inches above the bottom of the drain, is insufficient to show that it was improperly constructed where it appeared that the mudsills were more than 5 feet distant from the edge of the drain at the bottom, and that the bridge stood for three years after rebuilding though subjected to repeated severe tests, and that it was weakened through extraordinary circumstances.—Pearl v. Township of Benton, 131 Mich. 275.

¶ 55. In an action against a township for damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of its negligence in permitting the supports of a bridge to become rotten, so that one side was lower than the other, the testimony of the highway commissioner that an actual measurement showed an incline of one inch, if unimpeached, must prevail as against the testimony of witnesses who confessedly rely upon estimates in placing the incline at several inches.—Perkins v. Township of Delaware, 113 Mich. 377.

See also ante ¶¶ 26, 28.

¶ 56. The question whether a township is required to provide a bridge sustaining a load such as a threshing machine outfit consisting of a ten-horse engine and a tank full of water, is a question of fact upon which it is proper to receive evidence.—Moore v. Township of Hazelton, 118 Mich. 425.

¶ 57. The question of notice, in an action against a township for injuries caused by the fall of a bent under a bridge, should be submitted to the jury where there is testimony that the imperfect condition of the bridge was visible and generally known for a long period.—Pearl v. Township of Benton, 131 Mich. 275.

¶ 58. A question as to whether a township had notice, prior to the date of an injury, that snow would create an appearance upon single-floor bridges at night to the effect that seams or cracks would appear wider than they really were, is properly given to the jury in an action for injuries sustained because of a horse's shying and backing up, causing a vehicle to fall off the bridge, and a driver to become injured.—White v. Township of Riley, 121 Mich. 413.

¶ 59. Whether a railing along the banked approach to a bridge is necessary for the safety of travelers is a jury question.—Shaw v. Township of Saline, 113 Mich. 342.

¶ 60. Where the evidence is conflicting, the question as to whether or not it is the duty of a township to maintain a rail upon the side of a bridge is for the jury.—Lauder v. Township of St. Clair, 125 Mich. 479.

¶ 61. In an action against a city for the death of an occupant of an automobile, who was riding with the owner, resulting from the automobile plunging into a river at night after a drawbridge had been raised, and alleged to be due to the failure of the bridge tender to lower the gates when the drawbridge was open, where it appeared that the owner of the automobile had passed over the bridge a number of times and knew that the drawbridge was provided with gates which were lowered when the drawbridge was opened, and other safeguards were provided in the way of lights and stop signals, held that it was a question for the jury whether the driver of the automobile acted as a reasonable and prudent man would act.—Beach v. City of St. Joseph, 192 Mich. 296.

¶ 62. In an action for injuries to a threshing machine outfit caused by the fall of a bridge, it is proper to submit to the jury the question of the plaintiff's knowledge and opportunities of knowing if the bridge has been repaired.—Moore v. Township of Hazelton, 118 Mich. 425.

¶ 63. In an action for personal injuries caused by an engine's breaking through a bridge, where it appears that plaintiff had been warned that the bridge was not very strong, the question of contributory negligence in attempting to cross with a tank full of water attached to the engine, is for the jury.—Comstock v. Township of Georgetown, 137 Mich. 541.

¶ 64. Plaintiff on dismounting from his bicycle upon a bridge over a mill race on account of an accumulation of dirt washed upon the bridge either struck, pushed against or rested upon a temporary railing of the bridge, which being insecure gave way, causing him to fall some twenty feet into the stream below. In an action against the township and the owner of the mill his contributory negligence was held to be for the jury.—McRae v. Township of Hart, 179 Mich. 325.

¶ 65. Whether the owner of a horse, in permitting it to be driven unshod when the roads were slippery because of rains, was guilty of contributory negligence, precluding a recovery for damages resulting from its inability to keep its footing upon an inclined highway and bridge, which was unprotected by barriers, was a question for the jury, as was also the question of the negligence of the driver in not alighting before attempting to drive up the incline.—Perkins v. Township of Delaware, 113 Mich. 377.

§ 21. Instructions.

Presumption that person killed exercised due care as matter of self-preservation, see Negligence, V, B.

Instructions as to the foregoing presumption, see Negligence, V, C.

General law of instructions, see Instructions.

¶ 66. In an action against a township for personal injuries caused by an engine which broke through a bridge, requests to charge as to latent defects not being notice to the township are properly refused where it appears that the township officers had notice and claim to have given the information to plaintiff.—Comstock v. Township of Georgetown, 137 Mich. 541.

¶ 67. A statement, in a charge to the jury, of the law governing actual notice, of which there was no evidence, in an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by a defective bridge, is not reversible error where it was immediately followed by instructions regarding constructive notice upon which the jury alone could base their verdict.—Bratfisch v. Township of Mason, 120 Mich. 323.

¶ 68. Where the testimony was conflicting as to whether, for a long time prior to an accident, a bridge had been out of repair at the place where the accident occurred, and some recent repairs had been made, it was proper for the court to direct the jury's attention to the precise place in controversy, and to the disputed question whether it had been repaired there as bearing on notice of the defect.—Merkle v. Township of Bennington, 68 Mich. 133.

¶ 69. In an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the defective condition of a bridge. the fact that the court in the charge to the jury recognized the failure to erect railings for the bridge, which was only 3½ feet high and from 12 to 14 feet wide and 8 feet long, as negligence, is not reversible error where such instruction was immediately followed by one which limited the right to recover upon a finding relative to a hole in the bridge.—Bratfisch v. Township of Mason, 120 Mich. 323.

¶ 70. In an action against a city for the death of a bicyclist by riding through an open draw at night and drowning, it was not error to refuse to instruct that if the deceased rode over the draw because of the absence of the chain which he was looking for, plaintiff was entitled to recover, as the request for such charge left out other circumstances.—Benedict v. City of Port Huron, 124 Mich. 600.

¶ 71. In an action against a city for the death of a bicyclist by riding at night through an open drawbridge and drowning, it was not error for the court to fail to call the attention of the jury to differences in the condition of the bridge and surroundings at the time of the accident from those existing at the time of the trial, where the request was more in the nature of an argument than a proper request and the jury could not have failed to understand, if possessed of ordinary intelligence, that it was the condition upon the former and not the latter occasion that they were considering.—Benedict v. City of Port Huron, 124 Mich. 600.

¶ 72. In an action against a city for the death of a bicyclist by his riding on a moonlight night into an open draw and drowning, where the proof showed that the deceased knew he was approaching a place that might be dangerous, the refusal of a request to instruct the jury that the deceased had a right to assume that the city would do its duty in the premises, was not error when coupled with the implication that the deceased was under no obligation to look for danger if he could not reasonably be expected to see or expect that the draw was open.—Benedict v. City of Port Huron, 124 Mich. 600.

¶ 73. A man was driving a traction engine across a bridge. The bridge gave way and the driver's foot slipped and caught in the chain so that he was seriously hurt. Held, that in an action for the injury the court should have charged, if there was evidence to support the instruction, that the driver was negligent in having no guard for his foot if he knew of the danger, or in removing it if there had been one.—Stebbins v. Township of Keene, 55 Mich. 552.

¶ 75. In an action for injury to a person crossing a defective bridge with a team it was error to charge that the fright of a team was no defense unless the jury found it was caused by something else than the defect, for that places the burden upon the defense of proving that it was something else while in fact it was the plaintiff's duty to establish his own case and show the affirmative fact, if it existed, that the defect caused the fright.—Merkle v. Township of Bennington, 58 Mich. 156.

§ 22. Liability for injury to adjacent property.

Liability of assenting board of supervisors for creation of nuisance in erection of bridge, see Nuisance, I.

¶ 76. If even a lawful bridge or pier is constructed so near to a riparian owner's dock as to preclude its profitable use or to inconvenience its use, he is entitled to compensation.—Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 46 Mich. 278.

¶ 77. A city constructing a bridge in a street over a railroad track without eminent domain proceedings, is liable to an abutting owner for damages from depreciation in rental value resulting from such structure.—Phelps v. City of Detroit, 120 Mich. 447.

¶ 78. The act of the legislature in legalizing rates of toll fixed by a board of supervisors for the use of a bridge previously erected without authority of law does not cut off an existing claim for damages arising from the establishment of such bridge.—Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 46 Mich. 278.

IV. INJURIES TO, OR CRIMES RESPECTING BRIDGES.

§ 23. Liability in general.

Proper plaintiffs, see post § 25.

¶ 79. One who contracts for logs to be cut and delivered at the mouth of a stream is not liable under Comp. L. 1897, § 4160, for injuries caused to a bridge through the negligence of the other party to the contract.—Overseer of Highways of Road District No. 4 of St. Ignace Township v. Pelton, 120 Mich. 31.

¶ 80. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 4160, providing for treble damages for injuries to a public bridge by logs drawn over it or in any other way, a party driving logs on a river is not liable for injuries caused by a jam and freshet after notice, except where the act is wilful or the negligence so gross as to amount to culpable and wanton negligence.—Overseer of Highways of Road District No. 4 of St. Ignace Township v. Pelton, 120 Mich. 31.

Injury to bridge by floating logs, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 404-405.

§ 24. Indemnification of public by primary wrongdoer.

¶ 81. In an action by a township to recover indemnity against a person who wrongfully took down a good railing on a bridge over a mill-race, which was built and maintained by the owners of the mill-race, and substituted a temporary and inadequate one without authority from either the township or the owners of the mill-race, the township having paid a judgment in favor of a person injured as a result of falling into the stream while attempting to lean on the railing, a declaration that defendant wrongfully and without authority removed and took away substantial railings from the bridge and later substituted defective railings; that the plaintiff in the former action against the township, while lawfully passing over the bridge, and without any fault on his part, came into contact with such railing, and, as a result of its defective condition, was precipitated into the stream and injured, and that such person recovered a judgment, of a certain amount, which was paid by the city, held sufficient.—Township of Hart v. Noret, 191 Mich. 427.

¶ 82. Where a person, without authority from a township or from the owner of a mill-race, who built and maintained a bridge, took down a good railing thereon and later put up a temporary and inadequate one, and a person using the bridge was injured as a result of leaning on such defective railing and falling into the stream, the township, upon payment of a judgment recovered against it and the owners of the mill-race, may recover indemnity from the person who erected the inadequate railing, although it had notice of its defective condition, as the doctrine of no contribution between joint tort feasors is inapplicable.—Township of Hart v. Noret, 191 Mich. 427.

§ 25. Who can sue.

¶ 83. The overseers of two adjoining road districts cannot join as plaintiffs in an action for an injury to a bridge partly in each district, nor, on their refusal to sue, can the highway commissioners of the township bring a joint action.—Port Huron Highway Com'rs v. Stockman, 5 Mich. 528.

¶ 84. Damages to highways, bridges and culverts in a township by flooding cannot be recovered by the township either at law or in equity under the rule established in Township of Denver v. White River Log & Booming Co., 51 Mich. 472, and Township of Merritt v. Harp, 131 Mich. 174, but must be recovered by the overseer or commissioner of highways designated by the statute to sue for such damages.—Township of Merritt v. Harp, 141 Mich. 233.

Sufficiency of title of statute requiring joint action of city and township in rebuilding bridge, see Statutes, III.

¶ 85. Municipalities are under no legal obligation, outside of the constitution and statutes, to build bridges where no bridges ever stood before.—Fulton Iron & Engine Works v. Township of Kimball, 52 Mich. 146.

¶ 86. It is the duty of the highway commissioners of townships to build, rebuild or repair bridges and keep them in repair where they are not called upon to expend more than $1,000 (How. St., §§ 1379-1381).—Pigelow v. Brooks, 119 Mich. 208.

¶ 87. In a mandamus proceeding to compel commissioner of highways of a township to erect a bridge the "necessity of the public safety" mentioned in the statute (Comp. L. 1897, § 4131), refers to the bridge on the highway of which it is a part and not to a bridge on another highway several miles distant. The necessity of the public highway in question has been settled in the proceeding to lay it out. A bridge must be built so as to constitute an essential part of the highway in question.—Berube v. Wheeler, 128 Mich. 32.

Liability of county for failure to keep bridge in repair, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 697 714.

§ 27. ——Enforcement of duty.

Mandamus to enforce duty to erect bridges, see Mandamus, III.

Interest sufficient to sustain mandamus to erect bridges, see Mandamus, I.

¶ 88. On the petition of private citizens, the circuit court has the power to mandamus the township highway commissioners to rebuild a bridge where the necessary appropriation is within the power of the commissioners and the road has never been vacated.—Brophy v. Schindler, 126 Mich. 341.

¶ 89. It is no defense to a petition in mandamus to compel the township highway commissioner to build a bridge that no money has been voted by the electors to construct the bridge; the statute provides for issuing orders and the method for collecting them (Comp. L. 1897, § 4130).—Berube v. Wheeler, 128 Mich. 32.

¶ 90. In a mandamus proceeding to compel the commissioner of highways of a township to erect a bridge, opinion evidence as to the necessity of a bridge over the stream is not competent.—Berube v. Wheeler, 128 Mich. 32.

§ 28. Boundary line bridges.

Effect of failure to record contract apportioning expense and duty of upkeep, see ante ¶ 10.

¶ 91. It is lawful for a township, with the authority of the board of supervisors, and by virtue of an express grant from the legislature, to assume voluntarily the erection and maintenance of a drawbridge over a navigable stream that is the dividing line between it and another township.—Dietrich v. Schremms, 117 Mich. 298.

¶ 92. Comp. L. 1897, § 4131, requiring the voters of a township to pass upon the raising of more than $2,000 for building or repairing any bridge in a township, relates to bridges wholly within the township and does not forbid the raising of a larger sum in each of two townships for a boundary line bridge as provided by Comp. L. 1897. § 4051-4056.—Board Sup'rs Ionia Co. v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 134 Mich. 412.

¶ 93. It is the duty of the several highway commissioners to rebuild a bridge on a town-line road at a point off of the town-line, where the authorities for both townships had regarded the deflected road in question as part of the town-line road and had for ten years recognized a joint obligation to construct and maintain the bridge.—Bigelow v. Brooks, 119 Mich. 208.

¶ 94. Where pursuant to notice duly served the highway commissioners and the township boards of two adjoining townships met to confer about the rebuilding of a bridge that had been destroyed by a freshet, and the officials of one refused to do anything, but a petition by the other township was presented to the supervisors requesting the rebuilding of the bridge, and the supervisors had passed such a resolution by a majority vote, such action is in substantial compliance with the provisions of Pub. Acts 1905, No. 306, providing for ordering the building of bridges between townships on application.—Horner v. Board Sup'rs Ionia Co., 147 Mich. 581.

¶ 95. In case of township authorities being unable to agree about the construction of a bridge on the town-line, How. St., § 1310a et seq., will not be given such retrospective action as would destroy the agreements between such townships lawfully made, existing at the date of its passage, and having been acted upon for years.—Bigelow v. Brooks, 119 Mich. 208.

§ 29. ——Apportioning expense.

¶ 96. In the absence of constitutional restrictions the legislature has power to provide for the erection of a bridge between two townships, and to repose in the board of supervisors the duty of determining the relative proportion of costs for each township.—Board of Sup'rs Ionia Co. v Ionia Circuit Judge, 134 Mich. 412.

¶ 97. Pub. Acts 1889, No. 62 (Comp. L. 1897, §§ 4051-4056), providing for the construction of bridges partly in one township and partly in another, and for the calling of a meeting of the board of supervisors on application of one of the townships, and providing that the board shall have the power and it shall be their duty to grant or refuse the prayer of the petitioner and to fix the character of the bridge and the proportions of cost to be borne by each of the townships, is a complete act in itself; and the action of the board thereunder may be by majority vote, although a two-thirds vote is required by Comp. L. 1897, §§ 2484 (as amended by Pub. Acts 1905, No. 98), and 2485, in taking the actions therein enumerated among which is that of determining the relative proportions which townships shall contribute to the building and repairing of joint roads and bridges. Accordingly Pub. Acts 1905, No. 306, which covers the same subject as the act of 1889 and repeals it, is also satisfied by a majority vote according to the usual order of procedure.—Horner v. Board Sup'rs Ionia Co. 147 Mich.

581. (See Comp. L. 1915, §§ 4441-4446 for the statutes which supplant Pub. Acts 1905, No. 306.—Editor.)

¶ 98. Where for many years the commissioners of two townships had allotted portions of the town line to each township, and where the portion of the highway in question would have fallen under the allotment to one of the townships, but where it also appeared that the construction of the bridges on the town line was not included in the allotment, and that the authorities had acted jointly in building and repairing such bridges, it was the duty of such two townships to rebuild the bridge in question and keep it in repair.—Bigelow v. Brooks, 119 Mich. 208.

[Note. Since the employment of a broker or a factor is a contract creative of an agency, there are many questions arising out of such an employment which present merely general propositions of law pertaining to Contracts or Agency. No attempt has been made to treat such matter in this topic, which is restricted to matter appearing to be specifically or distinctively pertinent to brokers or factors.]

§ 1. In general; nature of the relation.

General law of contracts, see Contracts.
For the law governing principal and agent generally, see Agency.
Broker's contracts, illegal as gambling contracts, see Gambling Contracts.
Consignment and sale distinguished, see also Sales, I.

¶ 1. Brokers who are paid a commission are agents for those for whom they buy.—Gregory v. Wendell, 40 Mich. 432.

¶ 2. Defendant made a written contract with plaintiff authorizing him to sell a homestead for a stipulated sum and agreeing that plaintiff might add to the price such sum as he saw fit for his service in making the sale, said excess to be plaintiff's sole compensation. Defendant's wife did not join with him in the contract. Held, the contract between plaintiff and defendant was a contract of agency and for commissions, and not a contract to sell land, and plaintiff was not precluded from recovering on same by the failure of the wife to join in the contract.—Hayes v. McAra, 106 Mich. 198.

§ 2. ——Factors and consignments.

Burden of showing relationship on accounting, see post § 33.

¶ 3. A commission merchant to whom goods are intrusted for sale is the agent of the consignor.—Hutchins v. Vinkemulder, 187 Mich. 676.

¶ 4. An arrangement which as between a manufacturer and a retail piano dealer would be regarded as a consignment for sale, is not altered in its character by the fact that it is between such a piano dealer and one who has bought certain pianos from a manufacturer.—Wasey v. Whitcomb, 107 Mich. 58.

¶ 5. A transaction is not prevented from being regarded as a consignment for sale from the fact that the consignee is to receive as commission the difference between the amount for which he sells the goods consigned and the valuation fixed in the consignment receipt.—Wasey v. Whitcomb, 107 Mich. 58.

¶ 6. A transaction is not the less a consignment for sale for the reason that the factor sells in his own name.—Wasey v. Whitcomb, 167 Mich. 58.

¶ 7. The fact that on a consignment for sale the consignee agrees to pay interest upon the fixed value of the property consigned, does not alter the character of the transaction.—Wasey v. Whitcomb, 167 Mich. 58.

¶ 8. A transaction may be a consignment for sale though the consignee agrees to make good to the consignor any deficiency between the amount realized through a sale of the property on instalment contracts and the price at which the property was consigned.—Wasey v. Whitcomb, 167 Mich. 58.

¶ 8a. A transaction is not rendered the less a consignment for sale by the fact that the consignee is required to carry insurance upon the property consigned.—Wasey v. Whitcomb, 107 Mich. 58.

Acceptance of contract to deliver mining shares, see Contracts, III, B.
Consideration sufficient to support broker's contract, see Contracts, V, A.

¶ 9. An agency for the period of 60 days only for both tracts of land was created, where in an action for a broker's commission, it appears that such broker in a letter to the owner, asked for prices on two tracts of land, stating that he had customers, and asking the "privilege of looking the lands for 60 days," and that in the owner's reply to such letter, the words granting an option for 60 days are found in a sentence relating to one parcel; since such letter of acceptance must be construed in connection with the letter of request.—Beadle v. Sage Land & Improvement Co., 140 Mich. 199.

¶ 10. A letter in which the owner of timber states the amount which he wishes to have cut, the manner in which it is to be cut, the terms of shipment, and the price, and states that the person to whom the letter is addressed "may have ten days from this date in which to place the stock," amounts to an employment of the person addressed as a broker.—Obenauer v. Solomon, 151 Mich. 570.

¶ 11. A contract of employment of a real estate broker need not be in writing and is not within the statute of frauds.—Hannan v. Prentis, 124 Mich. 417.

¶ 12. A broker who makes a purchase, with the understanding, and with the concurrence of the seller, that the contract is to be at once turned over to his principal, ceases his connection with it on payment of his commissions.—Gregory v. Wendell, 40 Mich. 432.

¶ 13. Where a stockbroker notifies a customer that he is retiring from business and desires to transfer the account to a succeeding broker, and makes a settlement that is accepted and transfers the account to his successor with whom the customer continues to deal, the settlement terminates the liabilities of the original broker on the day it is made and is conclusive unless tainted with fraud.—Vanderveen v. Ellis, 172 Mich. 615.

¶ 14. The right of a broker to sell land does not continue beyond the date of expiration of an option on such land secured by the broker for a customer, where, in an action for a broker's commission, it appears that the only right such agent had asked was the right to sell such land to such particular customer, with the privilege of "looking the lands for 60 days."—Beadle v. Sage Land & Improvement Co., 140 Mich. 199.

§ 4. ——Agency to employ broker.

Authority to employ subagents in general, see Agency, § 29.

¶ 16. If the applicant for purchase of land was not known to the owner prior to the application, and did not represent himself as a broker, but, instead, held himself out as an intending purchaser of the land, and thereupon the owner referred him to her son for the terms and conditions of the sale, such a holding out would not justify the broker in assuming that the son had authority to enter into a contract for his mother with him to find a purchaser of the land.—Hensel v. Maas, 101 Mich. 443.

¶ 17. Defendant Ferris told one Mingus that if he would find a buyer for defendant's real estate, defendant would give him all over $1,800 which he secured for the same. Mingus, assuming to be authorized by defendant, employed plaintiff as a broker to negotiate the sale and plaintiff supplied buyers. In a suit for commissions, held, in the entire absence of evidence showing that defendant authorized Mingus' dealings with plaintiff or ratified them, a verdict should be directed for defendant.—Benham v. Ferris, 159 Mich. 632.

§ 5. Licenses and public regulation.

General law of licenses and power of municipalities to regulate business, see Licenses; Municipal Corporations, IX.
Statutes relating to gambling contracts and validity of contracts as such, see Gambling Contracts.
Specific law regulating insurance agency or brokerage, see Insurance, III.
Regulation under the Blue Sky Law, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 230.

§ 6. Functions, duties and authority; double or single agency.

Right to double compensation, see post § 17.
Right to commissions as affected by representation of third person or other property, see post § 27.
Taking commissions from other party as defense to action for compensation, see post § 29.
Sufficiency of evidence as to double or single agency, see post § 42.

¶ 18. A man placed certain property in the hands of agents for sale or exchange for farm property at his option, and agreed to render all the assistance he could in making such sale or exchange. Held, that the contract conferred authority to negotiate, and did not constitute the agents mere middlemen to bring the parties together.—Scribner v. Collar, 40 Mich. 375.

¶ 19. Where an agent for the sale of land conducted the entire negotiations and, after securing an offer from one party, communicated it to the other, who accepted it, an instruction based on the theory that the agent was a mere middleman, is erroneous.—Woods v. Palmer, 151 Mich. 30.

¶ 20. The authority of a real estate broker to sell property is not limited to a certain purchaser for whom an inquiry is sent by the broker as to the price thereof, where the communications between the owner and the broker are in the form of letters and telegrams from which it seems the question should be settled, and the first telegram to the broker in answer to the inquiry quotes a price and mentions that such owner has six purchasers.—Harger v. Watson, 176 Mich. 192.

¶ 21. Where a sale of perishable goods was consummated through brokers the latter have no authority to make a contract with the buyer on behalf of the seller to annul the contract and authorize him to sell them for the account of the seller where the goods on arrival proved defective.—Jones v. Bloomgarden, 143 Mich. 326.

¶ 22. Plaintiff manufacturer of pianos made a contract to consign to one Ray, a local dealer, pianos to be sold by the latter. Plaintiff reserved title in itself until Ray should fully remit for the pianos. Ray received a piano, put it in his salesroom, and traded the same to defendant for another piano. In replevin, held Ray acted outside the scope of his authority in trading instead of selling the piano, and nothing plaintiff had done estopped him from setting up such facts against defendant.—Starr Piano Co. v. Morrison, 159 Mich. 583.

§ 7. Rights and liabilities of third persons.

Right of broker to recover from opposite party for services, see post ¶ 64.
Right to hold opposite party for refusal to perform contract as negotiated, see post ¶ 63.

¶ 23. A broker contracting in his own name, without authority from others, to furnish lumber at an agreed price, does not contract as the agent of dealers with whom, for a commission, he places the order and the buyer is not liable to them on the contract.—Peirce v. Closterhouse, 96 Mich. 124.

¶ 24. Where a surety on an appeal bond accepts as indemnity an assignment of the appellant's interest in a quantity of apples in the hands of a commission merchant, relying upon the latter's representations that his lien upon the apples amounts to a certain sum, and that the apples are worth enough to make the assignment good security, being silent as to any further claims upon the apples, and where the merchant sells the apples at a price sufficient to cover his lien and the judgment appealed from, which has been affirmed and paid by the surety, the merchant is estopped, in a suit brought against him by the surety to recover the amount of the judgment, from setting up as a defense that the apples were subject to further liens growing out of prior dealings between him and appellant.—Barkworth v. Isbell, 101 Mich. 40.

§ 8. Ratification and disaffirmance.

See also post ¶ 118.
Jury question as to ratification, see post § 43.
Of acts of agents in general, see Agency, II, C.

¶ 25. A merchandise broker, who is not authorized to make binding contracts, as brokers usually do, but to take orders subject to approval, and is paid a commission on approved sales, is so far the agent of the vendor as to warrant the supposition on the part of the vendee that the order will be honestly transmitted, and that the goods will be shipped according to its conditions, and, by accepting the order, the vendor ratifies the contract as made by the broker.—Hitchcock v. Griffin & Skelley Co., 99 Mich. 447.

¶ 26. Even if the doctrine of ratification can be invoked by an agent, such doctrine was inapplicable to a case where the seller of property did not know, when he consummated the sale in question, that the plaintiff had rendered services to him as a real estate agent.—Downing v. Buck, 135 Mich. 636.

§ 9. Rights and liabilities towards principal.

Revocation of contract as breach, see also Agency, § 95.
Liability of bailees for loss in general, see Bailments, §§ 5-9.
Damages for breach of contract, see Damages, II.

¶ 27. The employment of a broker to procure a purchaser for land, which is indefinite as to time, cannot be terminated by the owner without notice to the broker.—Nolan v. Swift, 111 Mich. 56.

¶ 28. The fact that consignees have made advances on goods, which they had been instructed to sell according to their judgment of the market, "unless otherwise advised," could not justify their refusal to sell immediately on being ordered to do so, unless the sale was directed on terms that would prejudice them.—Howland v. Davis, 40 Mich. 545.

¶ 29. Sewing machines, shipped under a contract to be sold on commission, were destroyed by fire without the consignee's fault, and after he had given reasonable notice to the shippers to take them back. The contract did not make him agent of the shippers for any definite time, and did not transfer the title to the machines. Held, that after he had given reasonable notice to remove them he would be liable only for gross negligence, and the shippers could not recover for the loss.—Barrows v. Cushway, 37 Mich. 481.

§ 10. ——Exclusive selling rights.

In property tendered back to consignor and afterwards destroyed, see also ante ¶ 29.
Breach of agreement through sale to stranger by owner, see also post ¶ 115.
Questions of law and fact as to exclusive selling rights, see post § 44.
Instruction as to liability of factor in possession of the goods, see post § 47, ¶ 232.

¶ 30. A contract creating an exclusive brokerage for the sale of land for a certain time, providing a fixed commission for a sale by the broker and for the payment of liquidated damages by the owner in the event of a sale by the latter direct, is not unreasonable or unlawful.—Axe v. Tolbert, 179 Mich. 556.

¶ 31. Contract with a broker contemplating the sale of land at a certain price cont ining provisions for commission to the broker on effecting the sale within a definite time, and for the payment of liquidated dam ges in the event of a sale being made through the owner direct, construed as a contract for an exclusive and special agency for the sale of the land, although in the form of an option.—Axe v. Tolbert, 179 Mich. 556.

§ 11. ——Rights in property held or consigned.

See also ante ¶ 12.
Care required of consignee of goods with privilege of selection, see also Bailments, ¶ 24.

¶ 32. A commission merchant to whom goods are intrusted for sale is required to exercise ordinary prudence in caring for and disposing of the property intrusted to him and to duly account for it or its proceeds.—Hutchins v. Vinkemulder, 187 Mich. 676.

¶ 33. A commission merchant is not a purchaser of property intrusted to him for sale. —Hutchins v. Vinkemulder, 187 Mich. 676.

¶ 34. A commission merchant to whom goods are delivered for sale is a bailee in possession of property for the purpose of sale and accounting for proceeds thereof.—Hutchins v. Vinkemulder, 187 Mich. 676.

¶ 35. A letter from a retail dealer in jewelry to a wholesale dealer, stating that the former has a customer for a diamond, and asking the latter to send him a number of stones, and suggesting that he may have to keep them for ten days or two weeks, as the customer is slow on selection, is merely a request to send goods with the privilege of purchase; and the custody of the goods sent in pursuance of the letter is in the nature of a bailment.—Knights v. Piella, 111 Mich. 9.

§ 12. ——Stock and margin transactions.

Authority to sell to close out transaction, see post § 13.
Right to reimbursement for advances or expenses, see also post § 15.
Lien on stocks, see post § 15.
Rights of broker where stocks are fully paid for, see also post ¶ 43.
Evidence as to margin agreement, see post ¶ 141.
Court and jury questions as to nature of contract, see post § 44.
Gambling contracts and dealings in futures, see Gambling Contracts; and see also Contracts, IV.

¶ 36. The relation between a stockbroker and a customer buying stock on margin is that of pledgor and pledgee, the broker's ultimate rights in the stock being limited to the money he had advanced to purchase the same, with interest, and his commissions for transacting the business.—Austin v. Hayden, 171 Mich. 38.

¶ 37. As between a stockbroker and his customer it is the duty of the former always to have available and be prepared to deliver stock of the kind and quantity purchased by the customer, whenever full payment for the same is made.—Austin v. Hayden, 171 Mich. 38.

¶ 38. By a "marginal" purchase is usually meant a purchase where the full price or cost of the stock purchased is not given to the stockbroker at the time of the execution of the order of the customer, without regard to the percentage of the unpaid balance thereon, and without regard to whether the purchase was made as an investment with the expectation on the part of the customer of later making full payment and acquiring the ultimate possession of the stock, or as a speculation with the intention of selling the stock upon a rise in the market, and without any intention of making full payment therefor, or acquiring possession of the stock purchased.—Austin v. Hayden, 171 Mich. 38.

¶ 39. Where a defendant broker sells stocks on margins to plaintiff, and neither ever had possession of the same, plaintiff, upon defendant's refusal to deliver the stocks, cannot recover upon the theory of a conversion.—Goodspeed v. Smith, 162 Mich. 641.

§ 13. ——Sale or subpledge of stocks or goods.

Scope of agency as to selling or trading, see also ante § 6.
Knowledge of equities of owner of stock by pledgee, see Pledge, II.

¶ 40. A broker, whom a produce dealer has directed to buy corn, and who subsequently tenders to the dealer elevator receipts for the corn, which the dealer thereupon refuses to accept, may sell the corn to indemnify himself, and recover from the dealer for any deficiency.—Gregory v. Wendell, 40 Mich. 432.

¶ 41. Where a contract with a broker for the purchase of wheat provided that the broker could close out the transaction if the margins were not kept good, and the customer died while the margins were in arrears, and his representatives declined to take any action, the broker was justified in closing out the deal.—DeMary v. Burtenshaw's Estate, 131 Mich. 326.

¶ 42. A broker who has bought stock for a customer may repledge this stock en bloc with stock held by him to the broker through whom he purchased, and if the broker through whom the customer dealt becomes insolvent, the customer cannot compel delivery of the stock by the second broker or subpledgee on the strength of having paid the insolvent broker in full for the stock, but must settle according to the lien of the second broker, provided that the second broker acted in good faith and without notice. —Austin v. Hayden, 171 Mich. 38.

¶ 43. Where a broker has bought stock for a customer and the same has been paid for, and the broker wrongfully pledges this stock with another broker who has knowledge of the fraud, the relation becomes one of simple agency, unprotected by either equitable estoppel, the law of brokerage or the usages and customs of the stock exchange. —Austin v. Hayden, 171 Mich. 38.

§ 14. ——Purchasing from or selling to principal.

Agents in general buying from or selling to principal, see Agency, § 92.
Sale of commercial paper by bank president as broker to bank, see Banking, ¶ 159.

¶ 44. An agent who has contracted to sell property for his principal at a minimum price and to retain for his services all above that figure that he can obtain, may himself become the purchaser.—Hutton v. Sherrard, 183 Mich. 356.

¶ 45. A principal who reserves the right to approve all contracts of sale made by his agent, cannot, when the latter may rightfully become the purchaser, arbitrarily withhold his approval.—Hutton v. Sherrard, 183 Mich. 356.

¶ 46. A broker who receives certificate of stock for safe keeping, but who delivers it up to company's officers who cancel it, and issue new certificate to third person, is guilty of conversion and liable for value, whatever his intent.—Hubbell v. Blandy, 87 Mich. 209.

§ 15. ——Advances and expenses and lien.

Estoppel as to amount of lien as against third person, see also ante ¶ 24.
Duty to sell as ordered notwithstanding claim for advances, see ante ¶ 28.
Sufficiency of evidence of improper retention, see post § 42, ¶ 194.

¶ 47. In a proceeding by a principal against his real estate agent for an accounting in relation to the purchase of the principal's property on his own behalf at foreclosure sale, the agent in so accounting, was entitled to interest on disbursements made by him.—Kimball v. Ranney, 122 Mich. 160.

¶ 48. A broker has a lien upon all stocks purchased by him for a customer, for all unpaid balance of the purchase price.—Austin v. Hayden, 171 Mich. 38.

¶ 49. Brokers who, without consideration therefor, merely express a willingness to hold until it rises, wheat bought for their principal, lose no existing lien upon it.—Stebbins v. Walker, 46 Mich. 5.

¶ 50. Brokers who had dealt with O. S. (given name Osmyn), supposing him to be a principal because of appearances held out by his brother O. S. (given name Oramel), and who on learning that the latter was the real principal, agreed to hold wheat that they had bought for him until it should rise in value, did not thereby waive a lien on it for advances and loans made to the supposed principal; since there was no consideration for such a waiver.—Stebbins v. Walker, 46 Mich. 5.

¶ 51. Real estate brokers have no lien upon moneys or papers placed in their hands to use in the purchase of land; e. g., upon an indorsed certificate of deposit delivered to such a broker to be returned to the payee if not used as a deposit on the purchase of certain property.—Robinson v. Stewart, 97 Mich. 454.

§ 16. Compensation and commissions in general.

Procurement of bargain necessary to earn commissions, see post §§ 17-26.
Fraud or misconduct defeating right to compensation, see post §§ 27-29.
Specific agreement as to compensation, see post § 30.
Measure and amount, see post § 31.
When and how earned, see post § 18 et seq.
Right to compensation as jury question, see post §§ 43-46.
Commission agreements with agents generally, see Agency, § 101.

¶ 52. The world "commission" implies a compensation to a factor or other agent for services rendered in making a sale.—Smith v. Starke, 196 Mich. 311.

¶ 53. One who is the procuring cause of the sale of a chattel may recover the reasonable value of his services from the seller, where the latter knowingly accepts and avails himself of the benefit of such services.—Case v. Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., 186 Mich. 81.

¶ 54. In a suit for commissions for the sale of real estate, plaintiff testified that his agreement with defendant was one of ordinary agency, wherein the vendor retained the right to control the selling price; that the price was controlled by defendant, and modified from time to time during the brief negotiations, until an agreement was reached satisfactory to the vendor. Defendant testified that plaintiff was to secure a purchaser for a certain net price named at the beginning of the negotiations. The jury under proper instructions found for the plaintiff. Held, the defendant was not entitled to a reversal on the ground that plaintiff's version of the agreement clearly showed that he agreed to secure a purchaser at said net price.—Prindle v. Allen, 164 Mich. 553.

¶ 55. D. promised M. to compensate him if he would find a purchaser for certain lots. Sale was made to a purchaser found by M. Held, that D. was liable personally although the lots belonged to D.'s wife and were sold by D. as administrator.—Moore v. Daiber, 92 Mich. 402.

¶ 56. A broker who merely brings the parties together, and has no hand in the negotiations between them, they making their own bargain without his aid or interference, can legally receive compensation from both of them, although each was ignorant of his employment by the other.—Ranney v. Donovan, 78 Mich. 318.

¶ 57. A real estate broker cannot recover dual commissions in the case of an exchange where his client has no knowledge that the agent is to receive a commission from the other party.—Hannan v. Prentis, 124 Mich. 417.

¶ 58. A broker acting as middleman to bring two parties together to make their own bargain, may recover commissions from both, though neither knows that he is to receive compensation from the other.—Friar v. Smith, 120 Mich. 411.

¶ 59. One who simply brings buyers and sellers together to make their own bargain is entitled to recover an agreed compensation from both of them.—Montross v. Eddy, 94 Mich. 100.

¶ 60. The same agent was retained by different persons on commission to negotiate sales or exchanges of their property, and he brought about an exchange between two of them, neither knowing that he was acting for the other. Held, contrary to public policy to allow him a right of action against both to recover his commissions, even though he had acted in good faith.—Scribner v. Collar, 40 Mich. 375.

¶ 61. One whose employment was by the buyer, who helped to make the bargain in the buyer's favor, and was not a mere go-between, cannot have commissions from the seller.—Leathers v. Canfield, 117 Mich. 277.

¶ 62. Defendant was employed by plaintiff to act as a broker in negotiating the purchase for plaintiff of a certain piece of real estate. The defendant secured from the seller an option at the price of $19,110, but represented to the plaintiff that the seller demanded $20,000, and upon putting the deal through pocketed the difference, $890. In a suit in assumpsit under section 10421, 3 Comp. L. 1897, held, plaintiff could recover the $890, and that defendant was not entitled to keep the same on the theory that he had a right to accept commissions from both parties.—Hogle v. Meyering, 161 Mich. 472.

¶ 63. A real estate broker who is under no contract relations with the owners of property and who expects to get his commission from the purchaser cannot recover damages against such owners where they refuse to perform the contract, on the theory that by such refusal they became indebted to him for services in procuring a purchaser.—Dickinson v. Hanley, 193 Mich. 585.

¶ 64. A real estate agent employed to sell property for the owner cannot recover from the purchaser for the value of his services in making trips to show him the land.—Hale v. Knapp, 134 Mich. 622.

¶ 65. The commission of a real estate broker is earned when a customer is procured ready to purchase at the price agreed or to make an exchange on terms satisfactory to the employer.—Hannan v. Prentis, 124 Mich. 417.

¶ 66. A contract to procure a tenant for real estate was performed where the plaintiff produced a prospective tenant ready, willing and able to take the lease on the defendant's terms, and the testimony showed that the defendant had announced his satisfaction with such tenant.—Collins v. Kittelberger, 193 Mich. 133.

¶ 67. If an agent appointed to sell property on commission finds a purchaser ready, willing and able to complete a purchase, and the terms are agreeable to the vendor, the agent is entitled to his commission.—Armstrong v. Martin, 171 Mich. 291.

¶ 68. An agent, in order to recover commissions on the sale of real estate, must show that he procured a purchaser, and got from him an unqualified acceptance of an offer of sale which the agent was authorized to make.—Hannan v. Fisher, 82 Mich. 208.

¶ 69. A broker who does not have the exclusive sale of real estate does not become entitled to a commission merely by bringing the property to the attention of the person who finally buys it, but he must also show that his services were the efficient or effective means of bringing about the actual sale.—Kinsey v. Barth, 192 Mich. 219.

¶ 70. In a suit to recover commissions for the sale of real estate, plaintiff must show that he was the procuring cause of the sale, that the purchaser learned of the property through him, and that through his efforts, with no termination of the negotiations until the result was accomplished, the sale was made.—Wood v. Smith, 162 Mich. 334.

¶ 71. The word "sale" as used in an agreement to pay a broker a certain commission upon a sale of the estate applies to a written contract for the purchase of the estate binding both vendor and purchaser, although a formal deed has not been made.—Cain v. Masurette, 196 Mich. 7.

¶ 72. A "sale" of real estate is consummated only when the grantor and grantee have entered into a valid and binding contract for the sale, so as to entitle a broker to his commission on a "sale"; hence a sale agreed upon verbally does not earn commissions because either party is at liberty to retire from his parol agreement.—Horton v. Immen, 145 Mich. 438.

¶ 73. A broker who entered into a written agreement with a land owner whereby he was to receive a commission if he consummated a sale of land to a proposed purchaser within a certain time, otherwise the contract to be null and void, is not entitled to his commission unless a sale is consummated to the person and within the time agreed upon.—Horton v. Immen, 145 Mich. 438.

¶ 74. A broker who negotiated and procured mutual signatures to a contract for exchange of lands, which exchange was not consummated because of a disagreement between the parties over taxes due, cannot recover his commissions, where the original employment made them dependent on his actually effecting a sale or exchange, and where after some negotiation resulting in no bargain his principal told him that "if I [broker] could get K. [purchaser] to give him [principal] six lots and a mortgage back for $2,750, he would pay me $150"; since such statement properly construed with earlier conversations merely amounted to an agreement to make the commission $150 if the other party was induced to modify his unacceptable proposal.—Keating v. Haley, 147 Mich. 279.

¶ 75. While a real estate broker need not be present at a sale to entitle him to his commission for effecting it, yet his efforts must be the procuring cause thereof.—Douville v. Comstock, 110 Mich. 693.

¶ 76. Where a broker's contract binds him, as a condition to his right to demand a commission, to bring the buyer and seller to an agreement, it is not necessary for him to conclude the sale in person, but it is sufficient if his efforts were the procuring cause of the sale.—Reade v. Haak, 147 Mich. 42.

¶ 77. A real estate broker employed to sell land, who negotiates with a corporation for its purchase, is entitled to commissions on a sale made by the owner to one of the stockholders, where the latter was influenced to purchase by the broker's efforts to sell to the corporation.—Brooks v. Leathers, 112 Mich. 463.

¶ 78. Where the owner of land writes to a real estate agent accepting an offer of purchase "if the sale is made right away," the agent has a reasonable time to bring about negotiations with the proposed purchaser.—Lorimer v. Boylan, 98 Mich. 18.

¶ 79. A claim for commissions on a sale of logs was based on the following advices from the owner: "I would sell them for $8 or, if you thought necessary, as low even as $7.50. I want you to find a customer for me, and I will feel greatly obliged, besides paying you whatever you ask for your trouble." The logs were in fact sold to a purchaser designated to the agent by the owner, at prices lower than those stated, and the agent acted in part in the purchaser's interest. Held, that he was not entitled to commissions.—Williams v. McGraw, 52 Mich. 480.

§ 19. Bargain made but not carried out.

¶ 80. If A., at B.'s request, finds a purchaser for B.'s property on B.'s terms he is entitled to his commission, though the bargain falls through by B.'s fault or inability to complete it.—Hannan v. Moran, 71 Mich. 261.

¶ 81. In an action by a real estate agent for commissions for the sale of land, it was held that commissions were properly disallowed on sales where the vendee was unable to meet the terms of the sale as advertised.—Sotham v. Macomber, 180 Mich. 120.

¶ 82. A real estate broker is not entitled to recover commissions for the rental of property by simply producing a party who makes a paper offer where such prospective lessee is unable to meet the conditions for a lease prescribed in the agreement between the owner and the broker.—Morgan v. Zanger, 188 Mich. 212.

¶ 83. Where, in an action by a broker to recover commissions, the evidence shows that plaintiff was not to be entitled to a commission until an order was received and accepted, and the order was never accepted, the court should direct a verdict for defendant.—Sterling v. Aultman Engine & Thresher Co., 151 Mich. 184.

§ 20. ——Due to rejection by principal.

Sufficiency of declaration where sale is made by principal without notice to broker, see post ¶ 142.

Question of law or fact, see post § 45.

¶ 84. An agent who, at the request of a land owner, procures a purchaser ready, able and willing to buy property on the owner's terms, may recover his commission from his principal, notwithstanding the latter refused to make the sale.—Blakeslee v. Peabody, 180 Mich. 408.

¶ 85. A real estate broker who furnishes a buyer for property able and willing to complete the purchase on the owner's terms, is entitled to his agreed compensation if the owner refuses to complete the sale.—Evans v. Russell, 180 Mich. 534.

¶ 86. A produce dealer instructed a broker to bargain for corn, deliverable some months later, and agreed to pay the broker a commission and receive and pay for the corn at the time of delivery. The broker had a like agreement to receive the corn from certain other brokers and they from the sellers. The first broker settled with his correspondents. Held, that on tendering to the produce dealer elevator receipts for the corn he had discharged his obligations, and his right to compensation did not depend upon acceptance.—Gregory v. Wendell, 40 Mich. 432.

§ 21. ——Due to defective title.

See also post ¶¶ 90, 91.

Broker's knowledge that title was bad and would not be accepted, as barring him of commissions, see post § 23.

¶ 87. Where a laundry company employs an agent to procure a laundry agency and barber shop business and such agent enters into a contract with the owner whereby he is to receive certain commission for the sale of such property as broker, and he subsequently enters into a contract with such owner to purchase such laundry agency and barber shop business, and such owner knows that such agreement is executed merely as a means to secure a sale to plaintiff's undisclosed principal and such agreement to purchase is assigned to such undisclosed principal, which refuses to purchase because of the existence of a contract between such owner and another laundry company for the exclusive right to its laundry business for a specified period, such broker is not entitled to recover any commission from such owner of the business.—Hunter v. Blosser, 194 Mich. 157.

¶ 88. Where a real estate broker is authorized to secure purchasers for certain land he is entitled to the commission agreed upon where he secures a purchaser on the terms specified who is ready to accept title and deposits the purchase price in a bank as demanded, though such purchaser refuses to carry out the agreement when he discovers that a suit by attachment levy on the land has been started, and a lis pendens filed in a suit for specific performance of an alleged contract by the owner to convey the land to another purchaser.—Harger v. Watson, 176 Mich. 192.

¶ 89. Where the plaintiff procured a purchaser for defendant of certain land, but the sale failed because the records in the office of the register of deeds failed to show that the defendant had acquired the interest of two heirs interested in the property, his right to recover commissions on the sale is not affected by the existence of a will, which was not known to the parties, wherefrom it appeared that defendant's title was good as the heirs had conveyed their interest.—Weaver v. Richards, 144 Mich. 395.

§ 22. ——Due to insistence on modified terms.

See also ante ¶ 74.
Admissibility of evidence as to, see post § 39.
Questions for jury, see post § 45.

¶ 90. A real estate agent, having secured a purchaser for lands upon which he had acquired an option, is not precluded from recovering his commission from the owner by the fact that the contract of sale subsequently entered into between the purchaser and the owner required the latter to furnish an abstract showing a good and perfect title, which provision was not expressly included in the option, and that the sale failed by reason of the inability of the owner to show such title.—Stange v. Gosse, 110 Mich. 153.

¶ 91. It cannot be said as a matter of law that the purchaser procured by the broker knew of certain reservations in the title tendered and did not object, and that the sale fell through solely because of defective title rather than through the presence of such reservations, merely because of the fact that the title examiner employed by the purchaser saw the deed containing such reservations; since, having found that the title was defective, it cannot be said that he would have unnecessarily communicated to his client that there were also objectionable reservations in the deed.—Weaver v. Richards, 150 Mich. 20.

§ 23. ——Due to conditions known by broker.

Questions for jury, see post § 43, ¶ 204.

¶ 92. A real estate agent does not produce a purchaser for property so as to entitle him to commissions where he knows of an alleged infirmity in the title to the land and the prospective purchaser refuses to complete the purchase until such defect is removed.—Appleby v. Sperling, 194 Mich. 681.

¶ 93. A real estate broker is not entitled to recover a commission contracted for upon a sale where the sale failed because of defects in his employer's title known or which should have been known to such broker at the time he contracted for a commission, unless it was the parties' intention that the employer should subsequently perfect his title in order to be able to perform.—Cain v. Masurette, 196 Mich. 7.

¶ 94. In an action by an agent to recover commissions for a sale which was alleged not to have been consummated by reason of a defect in defendant's title, an instruction that complainant cannot recover in case defendant had only an option for the purchase, and that plaintiff knew such fact, is properly refused where it appears that at the time it was attempted to consummate the sale, defendant had received a deed, and had tendered a warranty deed to the purchasers.—Weaver v. Richards, 150 Mich. 20.

§ 24. Bargain made through others.

Needlessness of personal presence of broker at conclusion of sale, see also ante ¶¶ 75, 76.

¶ 95. An agent who is promised a commission for finding a purchaser does not lose his right to it where, without his knowledge, another agent of his employer has meanwhile effected a sale.—Fox v. Rouse, 47 Mich. 558.

¶ 96. A real estate broker who secures a purchaser, and brings the parties together, cannot be deprived of his commission by the land owner's acceptance of substantially the same offer, secured from the same customer by another party, and upon terms more favorable to the purchaser, notwithstanding the fact that the sale may have been finally consummated by the other party.—Wood v. Wells, 103 Mich. 320.

¶ 97. Where defendant had authorized a broker to find a buyer for certain timber, and later refused to deal with a purchaser procured by the plaintiff, but sold the timber through another broker, plaintiff may sue at once, as defendant had not only repudiated the contract, but had disabled himself from performing it.—Obenauer v. Solomon, 151 Mich. 570.

¶ 98. Where a contract between the owner of real estate and a real estate firm for the sale of such property on commission expressly provides for the right of cancellation of the agency by giving a specified notice, such owner, with knowledge th t the agent had been negotiating with a proposed purchaser, may cancel the authority to sell, and effect the sale through a former agent of the real estate firm, who had been instrumental in presenting such prospective purchaser to the owner during the course of his employment by the real estate firm by which he was formerly employed, and thus avoid the payment of commission.—Holmes Realty Co. v. Silcox, 194 Mich. 59.

¶ 100. The defendant employed the plaintiff as agent to sell certain real estate, and the plaintiff procured one Reed as a prospective buyer. Later defendant sold the property to Reed, through another agent, and plaintiff sues for commissions. Held, it was error for the court to refuse a requested instruction that the defendant was not liable if Reed had abandoned all negotiations for purchase of the property through the plaintiff.—Young v. Hubbard, 154 Mich. 218.

¶ 101. A real estate broker authorized to sell land, but not having an exclusive agency, is not entitled to commissions on a sale made by the owner directly through another broker, because the latter had previously had correspondence with the first broker respecting a sale of the land and a division of the commissions, and the purchasers were the same persons with whom the second broker negotiated during the correspondence, where all attempt at an agreement between the two brokers had ceased before negotiations were commenced directly with the owner, and the first broker had at no time before the sale any knowledge of the prospective purchasers, and the owner, when he consummated the sale and paid the second broker his commissions, was not aware that he had had dealings with the first broker; nor does the fact that the second broker was interested in the purchase entitle the first broker to commissions, where the owner dealt with him as a broker only, and did not know that he was otherwise interested in the purchase.—Douville v. Comstock, 110 Mich. 693.

§ 25. Bargain with person introduced by broker.

Through other broker with person approached or introduced by plaintiff broker, see ante § 24.
Necessity that broker be procuring cause, see also ante § 18.
Questions for jury, see post § 45.

¶ 102. A theatrical broker is entitled to the commission agreed upon for securing employment for an actor who demanded a certain salary where the broker introduced the actor to a theatrical agent and tried to get contracts, and as a result thereof and without revoking the broker's authority the actor closed contracts with such agent after negotiations between themselves though for a smaller salary than the broker was authorized to secure.—Friedenwald v. Welch, 174 Mich. 399.

¶ 103. In a suit for broker's commissions for the sale of real estate, plaintiff brought the purchaser and defendant together at the instance of defendant, and the negotiations, after the introduction, continued until they ripened into a sale. Held, plaintiff was entitled to recover even though the price secured was not the price first asked by defendant.—Prindle v. Allen, 164 Mich. 553.

¶ 104. When an agent is employed by an officer of a corporation to sell its bonds and stocks and to introduce prospective customers, and is to receive his commission whether he personally closes a sale or not, he may recover for commissions for sales made to prospective customers introduced by him to the company, although the sales were not consummated until after he left the defendant's employ.—Sorensen v. Charlevoix Rock Product Co., 191 Mich. 86.

¶ 105. A real estate broker is entitled to his commission and the defendant cannot avoid his liability therefor under a written contract authorizing the broker to make a sale of defendant's land and agreeing to pay a commission therefor, where it appears that defendant himself made the sale of the property to a prospect previously secured by such broker and on substantially the same terms as were originally proposed through such brokerage.—Hubbard v. Leiter, 145 Mich. 387.

¶ 106. Where a real estate broker is employed to sell real estate within a certain time, and the time has expired without his having consummated a sale, he is not entitled to his commission, although a sale is ultimately made by the land owner to a person introduced by the broker, where there is no fraud or bad faith on the part of the owner which has prevented performance on the part of the broker.—Decker v. Klingman, 149 Mich. 96.

¶ 107. A broker is entitled to his full commission where the land owner knowing he has been negotiating with certain parties takes the matter out of his hands and then sells the same property to the same people at a reduced price.—McGovern v. Bennett, 146 Mich. 558.

¶ 108. The owner of real estate, which he has placed in the hands of agents for sale, cannot, with knowledge that the agents are negotiating with a proposed purchaser, cancel their authority, effect the sale himself, and avoid the payment of their commissions.—Heaton v. Edwards, 90 Mich. 500.

¶ 109. An agent for the sale of lands is entitled to his commission if he secures a purchaser therefor, although the principal, who completes the sale, includes therein lands which the agent had no authority to dispose of.—Ranson v. Weston, 110 Mich. 240.

¶ 110. Where a land owner who listed property with a broker to sell at a price to include the latter's commission, with knowledge that the broker has found and was negotiating with a prospective purchaser, steps in and sells to such person for an amount less than the broker's agreed compensation, the latter may recover it from the seller.—Davis-Fisher Co. v. Hall, 182 Mich. 574. (Ostrander and Bird, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 111. Where a lumber manufacturer receives an option on a quantity of logs from a log and lumber broker, and agrees to pay a certain commission if he purchases the logs, he cannot defend, in an action to recover the agreed commission, upon the ground that he purchased the logs from the owner conditionally, or upon terms different from those contained in the option, the broker not being notified of any such change and given an opportunity to sell to another or abandon the option.—McKinnon v. Gates, 102 Mich. 618.

¶ 112. Where an owner of real estate agrees to allow an agent to sell it if the latter can get $1,400 net for the owner, and the agent introduces a purchaser who declines to take the property for the sum asked, but six weeks later buys it of the owner direct for $1,300, the agent is not entitled to his commission.—Gilmore v. Bollo, 165 Mich. 633.

¶ 113. A broker is not the procuring cause of a sale of real estate where the prospective purchaser was not induced to look at the property as the result of anything the broker had said or done, but had dropped it from his mind, and would not have looked at or purchased it except for the subsequent, independent action of a relative.—Kinsey v. Barth, 192 Mich. 219.

¶ 114. A broker is not entitled to commissions on sale of pine land where he failed to find a purchaser at a price fixed by the original proposal, or at the lesser price fixed by a new proposal, but afterwards at a still lower price the owner effected a sale with one with whom he had been negotiating, both proposals having been invited by the broker who professed to have inquiries looking towards a purchase.—Antisdel v. Canfield, 119 Mich. 229.

¶ 115. Where within the time during which an agent held an option to sell land, the owner without the former's aid, effected a sale to a stranger, the agent's damages for the breach of his contract, held to be too speculative to permit a recovery.—Crawford v. Cicotte, 186 Mich. 269. (Ostrander and Bird, JJ., dissenting.)

§ 27. Fraud or misdoing affecting compensation.

Selling at cut prices as breach of agency, see also Agency, § 514.

¶ 116. A broker may recover his commissions on a sale of real estate, notwithstanding the fact that he attempted to sell to the purchaser property which he had in charge belonging to other persons.—Lemon v. Macklem, 157 Mich. 475.

¶ 117. The fact that a purchaser obtained by an agent for the sale of lands bought the lands for much less than the price asked, and immediately sold them to a third person at a considerable advance, does not of itself show that the agent in bad faith led the purchaser to understand he could buy for less than the asking price.—Harvey v. Lindsay, 117 Mich. 267.

¶ 118. Defendant Henry negotiated with one Turnbull, a real estate agent, to assist him in selling certain real estate of his to one Schmidt. Plaintiff, a real estate agent, through a friend, got defendant to fix a price. Defendant informed plaintiff that if his prospective purchaser was Schmidt he could not recognize him in the way of commissions. Plaintiff told him such was not the case, and took a contract for the land running to himself as vendee. This contract he assigned to Schmidt, who tendered the price, and defendant completed the deal. In a suit for commissions, held, defendant's act in going through with the deal did not ratify the plaintiff's deceptive conduct violative of his fiduciary relation as agent, so as to render defendant liable.—Ranney v. Henry, 160 Mich. 597.

¶ 119. Defendant Henry negotiated with one Turnbull, a real estate agent, to assist him in selling certain real estate of his to one Schmidt. Plaintiff, a real estate agent, through a friend got defendant to fix a price. Defendant informed plaintiff that if his prospective purchaser was Schmidt he could not recognize him in the way of commissions. Plaintiff told him such was not the case, and took a contract for the land running to himself as vendee. This contract he assigned to Schmidt, and the deal was completed. In a suit for commissions, held, plaintiff owed a duty of frank disclosure to defendant as his agent, and having deceived him, could not recover.—Ranney v. Henry, 160 Mich. 597.

§ 28. ——Secret interest or profit.

Burden of proving principal's knowledge, see post § 35.

Secret contrivance to cover real purchaser, see ante ¶ 119.

¶ 120. A real estate agent who acts as an intermediary between a land owner and a prospective purchaser must at least act in good faith, and cannot be allowed to attempt to extort a price from one principal not demanded or required by the other, and then be entitled to a commission as for a service. —Phinney v. Hall, 101 Mich. 451.

¶ 121. An agent for the sale of property loses his right to commission from his principal where he does not disclose the fact that a corporation in which he is interested as stockholder and director is the real purchaser, and that the nominal purchaser, who has a valuable contract with the seller dependent upon the making of the sale, is furnishing a large bonus towards the purchase.—Humphrey v. Eddy Transp. Co., 107 Mich. 163.

¶ 122. In an action for broker's commissions on the sale of real estate, the testimony tended to show that the broker asked as the lowest price for the land a sum in excess of what was authorized by the owner, that the offeree declined to accept, and made no arrangements with the broker for future negotiations, but purchased the property directly from the owner. Held, that the jury was warranted in inferring that the broker's efforts did not procure the purchaser, and were fraudulently intended to secure more than the agreed compensation. —Heenan v. Harris, 157 Mich. 187.

¶ 123. A real estate agency which leases a building to several persons, one of whom is a member of the agency firm, is entitled to its commission provided such member has not acted adversely to the interests of lessor in consummating the lease.—Kirby-Sorge-Felske Co. v. Doty, 190 Mich. 553.

¶ 124. Where the general manager of a transportation company was authorized to arrange for the sale of its property, and to agree upon the commissions to be paid to the agent for bringing about the sale, the company cannot avoid paying the commissions on the ground that the agent was himself interested in the company to which the sale was made, and that a third company was contributing a bonus towards the purchase price, if knowledge of these facts was brought home to the general manager before the sale. —Humphrey v. Eddy Transp. Co., 115 Mich. 420.

§ 29. ——Taking commissions from other party.

Right to double commission by mere middleman, see ante § 17.

Nature of broker's agency, whether sole for one party or mere go-between for both parties, see ante § 6.

¶ 125. One who acts as agent for both parties in a sale and purchase of land, concealing from them his double agency and making different representations to them about the value when both relied to some extent upon his judgment, cannot recover the agreed commission from the purchaser.—McDonald v. Maltz, 94 Mich. 172.

¶ 126. The broker who does not disclose to the opposite party that he expects a commission for effecting an exchange, and who is not a mere middleman, cannot recover commissions from him.—Pinch v. Morford, 142 Mich. 63.

¶ 127. In an action for commission on a sale made by the principal to an individual after the broker had endeavored to sell to a corporation, it was proper to show that the buyer was a heavy stockholder in the corporation to which the broker's efforts had looked as a possible purchaser, where it also appeared that the ultimate buyer was interviewed twice and another stockholder numerous times by the broker soliciting a purchase by the corporation, and that offers from the corporation had been submitted, and a promise made to pay the broker if they should sell "to them."—Brooks v. Leathers, 112 Mich. 463.

mission from the vendor for the sale of the property bars any right of recovery of compensation for platting and improving the property and endeavoring to market the same upon the ground that the broker was prevented from performing the contract by the opposition of the purchasers.—Brown v. Hurt, 198 Mich. 276. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

¶ 130. An arrangement whereby two real estate agents have authority to sell the same land, one to receive one per cent commission in case of a sale by the other, cannot be construed as giving the other the right to sue for two per cent commission on making the sale.—Lorimer v. Boylan, 98 Mich. 18.

¶ 131. Compensation for finding a person to explore and sub-lease a mine cannot be recovered where the plaintiff fails to establish a contract.—Carey v. Gleason Exploration & Mining Co., 183 Mich. 139.

¶ 132. A contract for the sale of land by a broker on commission providing that the owner will be content with a certain sum for the farm and that all received over such sum shall go to the broker and that if a good sale is made a note owed by the broker will be canceled must be construed as not providing for the deferring of payment of commissions nor for a fee contingent upon full payment by the purchaser, who agrees to pay a certain sum down by deeding property and pay the balance in annual instalments, so as to deprive the broker of his right to a commission upon the furnishing of a satisfactory purchaser at a price exceeding the minimum sum stated, although the purchaser forfeits the contract after making the cash payment and the first annual payment.—Fuday v. Gill, 195 Mich. 613.

¶ 133. One who makes a sale of lands under an agreement with the owners that, if he effects a sale at a price fixed by them, they will pay him for it, can recover the reasonable value of his services.—Montross v. Eddy, 94 Mich. 100.

¶ 134. A farmer not engaged in the real estate business, who sells a farm for a neighbor without any agreement as to compensation, is entitled to recover the fair value of his services, and not what is customarily charged in the vicinity by real estate brokers.—Morehouse v. Shepard, 183 Mich. 472.

¶ 135. In an action by a real estate agent to recover commissions for the sale of land, it was held that his recovery was properly restricted to commissions on lands where the deals were finally consummated.—Sotham v. Macomber, 180 Mich. 120.

¶ 136. Under a contract between a broker and an owner, whereby it was agreed that the commission should be $2,000 if the land sold for $75,000, he is limited in an action to recover his commission to the amount agreed upon with interest, and he cannot recover the customary five per cent where he had been wrongfully discharged and the property sold for a lesser amount by the owner.—McGovern v. Bennett, 146 Mich. 558.

§ 32. Accounting and settlement with principal.

¶ 137. Where a stockbroker notifies a customer that he is retiring from business and desires to transfer the account to a succeeding broker, and upon inquiry states he believes his successor to be honest and worth a certain amount, and a settlement is made and accepted and the account transferred, the statement of opinion as to his successor, that the facts showed to be true when made, is not a fraudulent misrepresentation that will justify impeaching the settlement.—Vanderveen v. Ellis, 172 Mich. 615.

§ 33. ——Presumptions and evidence.

¶ 138. The burden of showing the existence of the relationship of principal and agent between the owner of personal property and a commission merchant to whom goods are intrusted for sale, and such a receipt of money as will require him to account is on the principal.—Hutchins v. Vinkemulder, 187 Mich. 676.

¶ 139. When a commission merchant to whom goods are intrusted as an agent for sale voluntarily admits the receipt of the property or money, the burden of showing that he made a proper disposition of it rests upon the agent.—Hutchins v. Vinkemulder, 187 Mich. 676.

¶ 140. The presumption arising from the failure of a commission merchant to account for goods intrusted to him for sale after the lapse of a considerable length of time is overcome by proof that the commission merchant had not received any return for the goods, where there is no evidence that he sold the goods or received any money for them.—Hutchins v. Vinkemulder, 187 Mich. 676.

¶ 141. Evidence consisting of plaintiff principal's testimony as to the details of her dealings with an agent in Houghton of a Boston stock broker, held sufficient to show that in giving verbal orders to buy and sell stocks plaintiff knew that she was buying on a margin of $20 per share and that that was the customary margin for copper stocks in which she dealt, it appearing that she had deposited certain valuable securities with them as collateral which secured them in making the transactions ordered.—Douglass v. Paine, 141 Mich. 485.

¶ 142. In an action to recover commissions on sale of real estate under defendant's written authority to sell for a specified sum, agent to retain surplus as commission, a declaration setting forth the agreement, the securing of a purchaser by plaintiff in accordance with its terms, the purchase-price, and the sale by defendant without notice to plaintiff, is sufficient.—Wright v. Beach, 82 Mich. 469.

¶ 143. In an action by a real estate broker for commissions, where the declaration sets out the contract on which the right to commissions is based, the defendant may show that the contract actually entered into was different from that alleged by plaintiff under the general issue, and without setting up his claim by confession and avoidance.—Weaver v. Richards, 156 Mich. 320.

¶ 144. Goods were shipped with instructions to the consignees to sell on their judgment of the market, unless otherwise advised, but some time afterwards they were ordered to sell immediately. They did not do so, and the shippers sued for damages resulting from delay, and in the declaration averred shipment, delivery and orders to sell immediately as of the day and year aforesaid. Held, that the variance as to the time of the order was not material.—Howland v. Davis, 40 Mich. 545.

¶ 146. Under a declaration in assumpsit for services rendered in and about effecting a sale of real estate, the plaintiff cannot recover by showing an agreement by the owner to pay him his commission if the land was sold by another to a purchaser originally procured by the plaintiff.—Jones v. Pendleton, 134 Mich. 460.

¶ 147. In an action by brokers to recover commissions for the sale of real estate the burden of proof is on plaintiffs to show that they were the procuring cause of the sale.—Kinsey v. Barth, 192 Mich. 219.

¶ 148. Where by the terms of the employment of a real estate broker, his duty is to secure the best trade for his employer that he could, the employer has the right to assume that the agent acts solely in his interest until apprised to the contrary and the burden in an action for commissions is on the agent to show that his employer was so apprised.—Hannan v. Prentis, 124 Mich. 417.

¶ 149. In order for a broker to recover commissions under an option contract for the sale of real estate, authorizing sale for specified sum, agent to retain surplus as commission, where the owner made a sale of the real estate to another than the broker's proposed purchaser, the broker must show that he procured a purchaser able and willing to buy under the terms of the agreement, his notification to the owner of such purchaser before the expir tion or revocation of his authority as agent or before his knowledge of the sale by the owner and that the consummation of the broker's proposed sale failed through some fault of the owner.—Wright v. Peach, 82 Mich. 469.

¶ 150. In a suit for commissions for securing a loan the broker must show either that he completed his undertaking or that its completion was pre ented without his fault by his principal.—West v. Hudson, 171 Mich. 669.

¶ 151. Where a contract of general agency for the sale of real estate exists, and the broker is the procuring cause of the sale, it is immaterial in an action for commissions that the property was sold at a price lower than the agent was first instructed to ask.—Lerner v. Harvey, 189 Mich. 249.

¶ 152. In an action to recover a commission agreed to be p id by the ven lee of logs, defendant's testimony th t in his conversations with plaintiffs he had no idea they intended to charge for commission is inadmissible.—McKinnon v. Gates, 102 Mich. 618.

¶ 153. In a broker's action on his contract for fixed commissions earned, his subsequent conversation with the buyer, including a statement to the buyer that the sale was a made-up plan to beat pl intiff out of his commission, is inadmissible.—McDonald v. Ortman, 98 Mich. 40.

¶ 154. In a suit for real estate commissions it is error to permit defendant to testify to facts showing th t he is heavily indebted.—Crane v. Ross, 168 Mich. 623.

¶ 155. Where, in a suit to recover a commission on a sale of real estate, neither the pleadings nor plaintiff's version of the contract of employment leave the case open for any claim under the quantum meruit, it is not error to exclude testimony as to expenditures made by t.e plaintiff in advertising.—Thuner v. Kanter, 102 Mich. 59.

¶ 156. In an action by one, claiming to have been a broker, to recover for breach of a contract to sell goods through him on commission, it was competent for defendants to prove that the reason for their publishing a notice, introduced by plaintiff, in which they warned buyers that they employed no agent soliciting for them or managing their business, was that they had learned that plaintiff claimed to be their agent and business manager.—Dodge v. Reynolds, 135 Mich. 692.

¶ 157. In an action by a real estate broker to recover u on defendant's undertaking to pay plaintiff for effecting the sale of certain l ts, defendant claimed that the agreement related to the sale of sand and not of the lots. Held, that evidence that the lots belonged to defendant's wife was admissible to show the probability of the theory of the defense.—Moore v. Dalber, 92 Mich. 402.

§ 37. ——As to employment or revocation and party liable.

¶ 158. In an action for commissions for effecting a s le of defen lant's real est te, it is competent to show that the plaintiff is not a real estate dealer and never attempted a deal before, together with his relations and dealings with the defendant for the jury to consider in determining whether there was an implied contract of e ployment.—Horwitz v. Pepper, 128 Mich. 688.

¶ 159. In a suit by a real estate broker for commissions, a letter from defendant w s introduced in evidence in which defendant withdrew certain lands from the market, but authorized the plaintiff to continue in his efforts to sell the land in question. Held, that it was not error, in view of this evidence, to admit in evidence a prior letter and postscript from the plaintiff, notifying the defendant that he was trying to sell the lands to a person to whom defendant afterwards did sell a part of them.—McGovern v. Bennett, 152 Mich. 538.

¶ 160. Where, in a suit by plaintiff for commissions for the sale of re l estate, the defendant's defense is that the pl intiff's agency was c nceled before the sale was consummated, defendant m y introduce evidence, in proof of cancellation, th t h: had a better offer for the property than the one procured by the pl intiff.—Young v. Hubbard, 154 Mich. 218.

¶ 161. In an action for commissions for selling real estate, evidence that neither the defendant nor the vendee knew that the other party was paying the plaintiff a commission and the plaintiff's testimony that he negotiated the trade with the defendant in his own name and that the defendant did not know who the real vendee was tends to show that the plaintiff was not a middleman within the rule of Friar v. Smith, 120 Mich. 411.—Horwitz v. Pepper, 128 Mich. 688.

¶ 162. Where a real estate agent's interviews with a prospective purchaser who previously knew that the agent had the premises for sale, grew out of the agency, his conduct in securing the offer of purchase and in reporting it to the owner, does not show that he was acting as agent for the purchaser instead of the owner.—Lorimer v. Boylan, 98 Mich. 18.

§ 38. ——As to performance by broker.

Admissible cross-examination of party on willingness to accept bargain, see Examination of Witnesses, II.

Right of broker to show by parol true consideration for conveyance, see Evidence, V, B.

Evidence of value of property taken in exchange in determining consideration for sale, see Values.

¶ 163. In an action for commissions for procuring a tenant for the defendant, testimony of a prospective tenant, claimed to have been procured by the plaintiff, as to a conversation with the plaintiff in which the terms of the lease were mentioned, and accepted by the witness, held competent on the issue as to whether the plaintiff had procured a tenant willing to take the lease on defendant's terms.—Collin v. Kittelberger, 193 Mich. 133.

¶ 164. In an action to recover commissions for the sale of timber, a broker may testify to a conversation with an agent of an intending purchaser, in order to show the willingness of such purchaser to buy the timber, on the terms of the brokerage contract.—Obenauer v. Solomon, 151 Mich. 570.

¶ 165. In an action for commissions in the sale of real estate, a newspaper advertisement offering the property for sale, is admissible as showing what plaintiffs did in pursuance of the alleged agreement.—Decker v. Widdicombe, 137 Mich. 331.

¶ 166. In an action on a contract for showing timber lands for a commission on all lands purchased, testimony that plaintiff hired a livery team and employed men to aid him in showing the lands, is admissible as showing the history of the transaction though no recovery was claimed or could be had therefor under the bill of particulars.—Culver v. Smith, 131 Mich. 359.

¶ 167. Where, in an action to recover commissions for the sale of timber, a broker has introduced evidence of conversations tending to show the willingness of a proposed purchaser to buy, evidence of inconsistent statements made at a later time and place is inadmissible as hearsay.—Obenauer v. Solomon, 151 Mich. 570.

§ 39. ——As to failure of bargain made.

¶ 168. In an action by agents to recover commissions on a sale of real estate made by their principal, they may introduce in evidence the contract between the principal and his vendee.—Heaton v. Edwards, 90 Mich. 500.

¶ 169. In a suit by agents to recover commissions on a sale made by their principal, the principal cannot introduce evidence of after-disputes between himself and the purchaser as to the performance of the contract on the purchaser's part, especially if such disputes have been settled by litigation in favor of the purchaser.—Heaton v. Edwards, 90 Mich. 500.

¶ 170. In an action to recover commissions for the sale of land, evidence as to information obtained by defendant from certain lawyers as to the title to the land, is immaterial, unless communicated to plaintiff.—Weaver v. Richards, 150 Mich. 20.

¶ 171. In an action to recover a share of profits realized from a sale of lands, under an agreement the testimony of another agent of defendant that he was to work up timber for the purchaser from defendant and have an interest in it for such work, is immaterial.—Davis v. Gerber, 69 Mich. 246.

¶ 172. Evidence whether a purchaser would have paid more than he actually did for property is not admissible in an action by a broker against a seller for an agreed compensation, where the land had been listed for sale at a price to include the broker's commission, and the owner with knowledge that the broker was negotiating with the purchaser, stepped in and sold it for a less amount.—Davis-Fisher Co. v. Hall, 182 Mich. 574. (Ostrander and Bird, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 173. In an action for fixed commissions alleged to have been earned by effecting a sale, which the principal made over the broker's head, evidence of prior transactions between the parties and correspondence relating to other deals is incompetent.—McDonald v. Ortman, 98 Mich. 40.

§ 40. ——Of specific agreement as to compensation.

¶ 174. In a suit for commissions for selling defendant's farm, plaintiffs relied upon a special contract alleged to have been made in a conversation with defendant on a certain day. The trial court admitted evidence offered by plaintiffs to show a former agreement with plaintiffs and to prove the prices at which defendant had at various times offered his farm for sale. Plaintiffs contended that they were to receive as commission all the money received for the farm above a certain figure per acre. Held, said evidence was immaterial and its admission constituted prejudicial error.—Hoopengarner v. Stipe, 169 Mich. 307.

¶ 175. Plaintiffs were real estate brokers as well as building contractors. They made an express agreement to sell certain real estate for defendant and later made a separate agreement to erect buildings thereon at cost. On a suit for commissions they expressly relied on the said former contract. Held, the court properly refused to permit plaintiffs to ask defendant's witness as to the usual price real estate people obtained for building on account of a client, and as to whether plaintiffs spent any money to advertise defendant's property.—Lambrecht v. Stoepel Realty Co., 169 Mich. 81.

¶ 176. Evidence of the price at which the defendant had listed property with other brokers, and as to its value, is not admissible in an action by a real estate broker to recover commissions under an express contract.—Williams v. Otto, 181 Mich. 657.

§ 41. ——As to measure and amount of compensation.

Where contract is express, see ante § 40.

¶ 177. In determining the fair value of a farmer's services in selling the farm of a neighbor, the jury may consider the customary rate of commission charged in the vicinity by real estate agents.—Morehouse v. Shepard, 183 Mich. 472.

¶ 178. In a suit for commissions for obtaining a loan on property, the plaintiff is entitled to recover for the amount of the loan secured for defendant, and it is immaterial that a portion of the money secured is used by defendant to pay off a mortgage upon the property offered as security.—Roney v. Healy, 170 Mich. 46.

¶ 179. In an action by a broker for agreed commission for effecting the sale of mining property, it is error to admit letters between the broker and third persons whom he attempted to induce to buy the property but who had nothing to do with the ultimate transaction, either for the purpose of showing the amount of services rendered by the broker under the common counts or as part of the res gestae.—West v. Demmie, 128 Mich. 11.

Sufficiency as question for jury, see post §§ 43-46.

In actions on contracts generally, see Contracts, X.

¶ 180. Evidence consisting principally of the testimony of the broker held to show that he represented one of the parties and negotiated the bargain for an exchange and not that he was a mere middleman bringing them together to make their own bargain, especially where the party first consulted testified that the broker was negotiating for him because one cannot very well trade off his own property to advantage, and where confessedly another broker was employed to help the deal through and got half-commissions for doing it; hence that he was not entitled to commissions from the opposite party.—Pinch v. Morford, 142 Mich. 63.

¶ 181. A verdict in favor of a broker for his commissions is sustained by evidence that he had been employed as broker, that after a time a letter was written informing him that if sale was not made by a given Saturday all obligation "or extension of option with you" would cease, that on the day it was written the broker procured an oral offer and went by rail to present it to the principal, that it was so presented on Monday following the Saturday, that on the ensuing day the principal was prevailed on to accept, that the deal was finally closed on the terms procured; though the broker had originally been working under an option which had expired by its own terms previous to the writing of the letter, since the letter did not terminate the broker's employment before he found the purchaser.—Nolan v. Swift, 111 Mich. 56.

¶ 182. It cannot be said that there was no evidence of the employment of the broker to sell land for a wife, where it appears he had sold other lands for her and her husband and that they had at one time left the land in question to the broker to sell at a price in which he failed after which the price was raised, he finally obtaining an offer at the raised price and a deposit thereon and reporting to the wife, which sale fell through because she would not sign the deed; and where she denies that the price was ever satisfactory to her, or that she ever authorized plaintiff's employment; but where circumstances warrant the inference that she did authorize it and told the broker the price was satisfactory.—Codd v. Seitz, 94 Mich. 191.

¶ 183. Evidence held insufficient to show that a certain broker was defendant's agent in the purchase of a certain car load of fruit, the only proof of such agency being the broker's telegram to defendant "offered car," etc., and defendant's reply "can use car," etc.—E. R. Brackett & Co. v. Schiappacasse, 196 Mich. 124.

¶ 184. Plaintiff suing for commissions on sale of land makes out a prima facie case by testimony that he was instrumental in bringing about a sale, and that defendant had agreed to give him a certain per cent of the amount obtained in a sale which plaintiff should bring about.—McDonald v. Ortman, 88 Mich. 645.

¶ 186. Evidence of a conversation in which plaintiff was employed as a broker to procure a sale or exchange of property at a fixed price for a stated commission, followed by the submission of three offers culminating in no agreement and finally a fourth, which was rejected as first made, was held sufficient to show that the original agreement was for commission only on consummation of an actual sale or exchange and not upon an agreement to exchange; and a subsequent conversation amounting only to an agreement for a lump commission if the terms of the last offer were modified by the broker's procurement did not change it in this respect.—Keating v. Haley, 147 Mich. 279.

¶ 187. In an action by a broker against the purchaser of property to recover a commission which the seller had promised to pay the broker, evidence held insufficient to show that the purchaser promised to pay the commission either to the seller or broker.—Edwards v. Thoman, 187 Mich. 361.

¶ 188. In an action by a real estate broker for commissions for the sale of property evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding of the jury that an oral contract of general agency existed between the parties under which the seller retained control of the price, which he modified during negotiations, and that the plaintiff found the purchaser, brought the parties together, and was the procuring cause of the sale.—Lerner v. Harvey, 189 Mich. 249.

¶ 189. An agent's right to recover commissions on an exchange of land is prima facie established by proof that defendant agreed to pay commissions if a person having satisfactory property to exchange should be secured, and that the agent found such a person, with whom the defendant executed a contract for the exchange of the lands in question.—Whitaker v. Engle, 111 Mich. 205.

¶ 190. Under an agreement by a broker to sell a mining property for the defendant or to organize a corporation through either of which the defendant is to receive $75,000 for his interest, the plaintiff is not entitled to his commission by merely showing that the defendant finally organized a corporation in which a party introduced by the plaintiff has obtained some interest.—West v. Demme, 128 Mich. 11.

¶ 192. Where the evidence failed to disclose whether plaintiff was acting as agent or in his own interest, he cannot recover commissions for bringing about a sale of timber lands, especially where there was no contract to sell the lands on commission, and the idea of commission appeared to be thought of only after plaintiff had lost on a contract which the purchaser had given him, to do some logging on the lands.—Woods v. Palmer, 151 Mich. 30.

¶ 194. Where it was claimed that a contract for the sale of celery was entered into whereby an agent agreed to ship and sell the produce for a certain sum at the point of shipment, less a specified brokerage fee, and that if the market went down the principal should be notified so that he could trench the celery and ship it himself, and the agent did not comply with such agreement, but sold one shipment for the stated price after its rejection and incurring of additional expenses for brokerage fees paid third persons, which were charged to the principal, and other cars are sold at other places for the stated price, and others at a higher price, after having been placed in storage, and another car was sold at another place at the stated price, after having been put in storage, and the agent deducted the extra brokerage charges, and the freight and storage charges, held, in action by the principal against the broker, that the evidence was insufficient to sustain a recovery on the theory that defendant had committed a breach of the contract by selling plaintiff's celery and retaining some of the money received which belonged to the plaintiff.—Maxon v. Chaddock-Carney Sales Co., 195 Mich. 249.

¶ 195. In an action by the owner of goods against a commission merchant to whom goods were intrusted for sale, evidence held insufficient to warrant a recovery.—Hutchins v. Vinkemulder, 187 Mich. 676.

¶ 196. In an action by a real estate broker for commissions in which the defendant admits that the plaintiff was instrumental in securing an arrangement for the sale of a certain parcel of land, but disputes the extent and value of his services, it is error to allow the jury to find a verdict of no cause of action.—Scribner v. Hazeltine, 79 Mich. 370.

¶ 197. Where, in an action brought upon a contract whereby plaintiff if he sold defendant's land for more than $5,000 was to receive the excess, it appeared that the land did so sell, and that a mortgage was taken for the purchase-price, held that the testimony that plaintiff was to receive his commission before the price was paid was not so conclusive as to make the case one for the court.—Marx v. Otto, 117 Mich. 510.

¶ 198. In a suit for a commission for the sale of real estate, where the testimony is conflicting as to whether or not the plaintiff was authorized by defendant vendor to sell the house, whether he presented the proposition to the buyer, and whether he was actively employed on the case at the time of the sale, the question as to the plaintiff's right to a commission is properly left to the jury.—Wood v. Smith, 162 Mich. 334.

¶ 199. In an action by a real estate broker for commissions where he had brought to the defendant owner a proposed purchaser ready and willing, and the defendant had then effected the sale, excluding the plaintiff from the transaction, there is no question of good faith to submit to the jury.—Heaton v. Edwards, 90 Mich. 500.

¶ 200. In an action by a real estate agent for commissions, a verdict for the defendant was properly directed, where plaintiff who in looking over an atlas with a third party, observed defendant's land marked thereon, and thereupon the two called on defendant, and thereafter plaintiff carried on numerous communications between the parties, and defendant repeatedly called at plaintiff's office and house, and where plaintiff drew the papers at defendant's request, and had made no arrangement for pay, and in fact received none from the purchaser.—Downing v. Buck, 135 Mich. 636.

¶ 202. Under conflicting evidence the question whether a broker's contract for the sale of real estate was ratified by his principal's dealings with the purchaser. is a question for the jury.—Blakeslee v. Peabody, 180 Mich. 408.

¶ 203. Whether the defendant was notified that the plaintiff had secured a purchaser ready, able and willing to purchase land on the defendant's terms, when in dispute, is a question for the jury.—Blakeslee v. Peabody, 180 Mich. 408.

¶ 204. Where defendant testified and plaintiff denied, in an action to recover an agreed commission for effecting a sale of defendant's premises, that at the time defendant signed the agreement for such sale he stated to plaintiff that if it required his wife's signature to the deed he could not give it, held that a question of fact was presented for the jury and the court erred in directing a verdict for the plaintiff.—Cain v. Masurette, 196 Mich. 7.

¶ 205. In an action by a real estate agency, which leased a building to several persons, one of whom was a member of the agency firm, for its commission, held that it was a question for the jury whether such member, as the representative of the agency, waived the right to the commission from lessor in consideration of a reduction in the rent.—Kirby-Sorge-Felske Co. v. Doty, 190 Mich. 553.

§ 44. ——As to terms and existence of broker's employment.

¶ 206. In an action by a broker to obtain commissions for the sale of real and personal property, where there is a conflict as to the original agreement and what was done under it there are proper questions of fact which must be decided by the jury.—Reade v. Haak, 147 Mich. 42.

¶ 207. In an action for commissions on the purchase of certain timber the question what were the terms of the contract, and whether it had been modified by subsequent conduct and correspondence is properly for the jury where the evidence is conflicting.—Holmes v. Foss, 131 Mich. 487.

¶ 208. In an action by a broker for commission on the sale of mining property, testimony by the plaintiff that he was to dispose of the property so as to get $75,000 for the defendant, conbined with statements that he was to organize a corporation to put the property on the market raises a question for the jury as to the real agreement between the parties, there being no written contract in evidence.—West v. Demme, 128 Mich. 11.

¶ 209. In an action by a broker on an oral contract for commissions for the sale of real estate, where the evidence was conflicting, held that the question as to whether or not plaintiff had the exclusive sale of defendant's property was a question for the jury.—McGavock v. Ducharme, 192 Mich. 98.

¶ 210. Where a real estate agent claimed that certain conversations with the owner of land constituted a contract whereby he was to receive commissions upon its sale, and the language employed was susceptible of such construction, it was proper to submit the testimony to the jury for them to determine whether or not contract relations were in fact established.—Brooks v. Leathers, 112 Mich. 463.

¶ 211. In an action against a corporation to recover commissions under a contract for the sale of bonds and stock made with defendant's officers and in which the evidence was conflicting as to what the contract was, held that the nature of the contract was a question for the jury.—Sorensen v. Charlevoix Rock Product Co., 191 Mich. 86.

¶ 212. Where the recovery of commissions on a sale of a chattel are sought under a count on a special contract as well as under the common counts, both counts held properly submitted to the jury, where the existence of the special agreement was in dispute.—Case v. Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., 186 Mich. 81.

¶ 213. In an action for the balance due on produce where the plaintiff testifies that the defendant guaranteed to make money for him over and above a given price which had been offered for the goods, and the defendant testified that he never guaranteed any profit, that he merely offered to sell the goods for what he could get in the market, the question of whether or not there was a guaranty is for the jury.—Clintsman v. Alfred J. Brown Seed Co., 127 Mich. 280.

¶ 214. If the evidence is conflicting as to whether a real estate broker's commission was to be paid when an agreement for the exchange of properties was made or when "the deal went through," a question for the jury was presented.—Wolverine Farms Co. v. De Young, 182 Mich. 200.

§ 45. ——As to procurement or failure of bargain.

Instructions, see post § 49.

¶ 215. Where, in a suit to recover a commission on a sale of real estate, the pleadings limit the issue to the question whether plaintiff did in fact procure a purchaser, either at the price stated in the declaration or at a price satisfactory to the defendant, and the undisputed testimony shows that plaintiff did not bring the purchaser and defendant together, and that the purchaser was not a customer of plaintiff, and did not acquire his knowledge that the property was for sale from him, directly or indirectly, a verdict is properly directed in defendant's favor.—Thuner v. Kanter, 102 Mich. 59.

¶ 216. Where it appeared that plaintiff real estate firm had interested a prospective buyer in the sale of defendant's property, that the buyer subsequently purchased other property, and that the buyer's wife later purchased the defendant's property, the question as to whether plaintiffs were the procuring cause of the sale was properly left to the jury.—Parker v. Davis, 178 Mich. 93.

¶ 217. The testimony of a real estate agent, in an action for commissions, that he had several conversations relative to the purchase of the land with the officers of a corporation in which the person to whom the property was finally sold was a stockholder, that on two occasions the conversations were with the subsequent purchaser, and that he communicated the same to the owner of the property, who shortly afterwards himself effected the sale, raises a question for the jury as to whether the agent's efforts were the moving cause in the transaction, even though the purchaser fails to recall the conversations, or that he was influenced by plaintiff.—Brooks v. Leathers, 112 Mich. 463.

¶ 220. The question whether plaintiff was the procuring cause of the sale on account of which he seeks to recover a commission, which he claimed defendant agreed to pay him if he found a purchaser, was held to have been a question of fact for the jury where they were fully instructed that they could not find for the plaintiff if they found defendant's version of the contract to be true.—Kelso v. Woodruff, 88 Mich. 299.

¶ 221. In an action for recovery of broker's commissions for effecting an exchange of property it was proper to submit to the jury whether the opposite party cleared up his title in a "reasonable time" after a bargain was signed, where the bargain was signed on May 7th and title was perfected on June 20th following and an offer to perform was then made, but the principal had withdrawn on June 14th.—Keating v. Haley, 147 Mich. 279.

¶ 222. It is for the jury to determine what is "a reasonable time," under the circumstances, within which a broker may bring about negotiations with a proposed purchaser so as to satisfy the land owner's acceptance of an offer "if the sale is made right away."—Lorimer v. Boylan, 98 Mich. 18.

¶ 223. In an action by real estate brokers for commissions alleged to have been earned under an agreement providing that a stipulated commission should be paid if property was sold directly or indirectly by the brokers, but that if sold directly by the owner without any aid by the brokers the latter should be allowed only a certain sum for expenses, and such agency was terminable upon 30 days' notice, and the brokers, before the giving of such notice, produced a prospective buyer, who did in fact purchase the premises of the owner after the expiration of the period limited by such notice, held that it was a question for the jury whether or not plaintiffs indirectly sold the farm and whether defendant in good faith withdrew the property from sale and canceled the agency.—Warren v. Vandervelde, 193 Mich. 164.

¶ 224. A verdict for defendant is properly directed in an action by one broker against another for commission for the sale of real estate where the evidence shows that the written contract required a lease to be made satisfactory to the principal before a commission was payable and no lease was made and the prospective lessee was not willing to accept a lease on terms satisfactory to the principal.—Fleming v. James S. Holden Co., 200 Mich. 519.

§ 46. ——As to bad faith of broker.

See also ante ¶ 199.
Right to compensation as affected by fraud or misdoing, see ante §§ 27-29.

¶ 225. Whether an agent to sell land was guilty of bad faith towards his principal in leading a purchaser to understand the land could be secured for less than the asking price, held, to have been properly submitted to the jury on evidence that the prospective buyer offered it to others for a less price.—Harvey v. Lindsay, 117 Mich. 267.

¶ 226. Plaintiff testified that he listed his property for sale with defendant, a real estate broker, who agreed to handle it for him without an exclusive contract. Defendant testified that he told plaintiff he would consider the proposition of handling it this way. Defendant then sent his employee to secure an option on the property for four hundred dollars and defendant then immediately sold the same to a third person for five hundred dollars. Held, it was a question of fact for the jury whether defendant was plaintiff's agent so as to be bound to disclose to him all facts affecting his interest.—Walling v. Poulsen, 160 Mich. 392.

¶ 227. In an action by a real estate agency, which leased a building to several persons, one of whom was a member of the agency firm, for its commission, held that it was a question for the jury whether such member acted adversely to interests of lessor so as to bar plaintiff from recovering the commission.—Kirby-Sorge-Felske Co. v. Doty, 190 Mich. 553.

¶ 229. In an action against a corporation to recover commissions for the sale of bonds and stock under a contract made with defendant's officers, plaintiff claiming that he was employed to sell bonds and stock of the defendant and to introduce prospective customers to the defendant, and that he was to be paid his commissions whether he personally closed any particular sale or not, an instruction that if the jury found that plaintiff was engaged as claimed by him, and that as a result of his labor bonds and stock were sold, whether those bonds and stock were out of the treasury or belonged to someone else, if the sale of them resulted from his having reported them to a superior, and the superior officer having taken advantage of his work, sold a different piece of property from what plaintiff was trying to sell, plaintiff would nevertheless be entitled to his commission, held proper.—Sorensen v. Charlevoix Rock Product Co., 191 Mich. 86.

¶ 230. In an action against a corporation to recover commissions for the sale of bonds and stock under a contract made with defendant's officers, and in which the evidence was conflicting as to the terms of the contract, plaintiff claiming that he was entitled to commission when he procured a purchaser, whether he personally closed the sale or not, held that a requested instruction that plaintiff would not be entitled to any commission for any sales of stock made to any person or persons after he left the employment of the company was properly refused.—Sorensen v. Charlevoix Rock Product Co., 191 Mich. 86.

¶ 231. An instruction that tender of performance by the opposite party to defendant, the principal of plaintiff broker, was in a reasonable time on June 20th in view of the signing of a "duplicate" contract by the principal to make the exchange on June 13th or 14th, was held properly refused on a record which did not contain such contract or show that it ever became binding by delivery to the opposite party.—Keating v. Haley, 147 Mich. 279.

¶ 232. In an action against commission merchants on the common counts in assumpsit and for goods sold and delivered, an instruction that the mere possession or receipt by defendants of goods under consignment made them prima facie liable for the value of the goods, held erroneous.—Hutchins v. Vinkemulder, 187 Mich. 676.

§ 48. ——As to employment of broker.

¶ 234. In a suit by a real estate agent to recover commissions where the result turned upon the sole question whether or not the property was listed with plaintiff for sale, the following remarks, among others, were made by the court to the jury after they had announced that they were not likely to agree: "And the single question in this case, which should be solved readily, did the plaintiff by his subagent procure a customer for this property, and did they deal; and if so, he is entitled to his commission. If not, not guilty, or for the defendant. It is the simplest case ever presented to a jury." Held, that this statement of the issue by the court was error, being equivalent to the direction of a verdict for the plaintiff.—Ebert v. Wilcox, 155 Mich. 69.

§ 49. ——As to controlling cause of sale.

See also ante ¶¶ 100, 228.

¶ 235. In an action by real estate brokers for commissions for the sale of real estate an instruction that the plaintiff, in order to recover, must show by a fair preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiff was the procuring cause of the sale held correct.—Kinsey v. Barth, 192 Mich. 219.

¶ 236. In an action for compensation for services in a land sale, a request to charge that plaintiff could not recover unless the information by him given to the vendee was the controlling cause of the purchase, is substantially covered by a charge that the question is whether the solicitations and representations made by plaintiff in regard to the land determined the vendee to purchase or not. Any one who determines the action of the purchaser secures the purchase.—Ellsmore v. Gamble, 62 Mich. 543.

¶ 237. Where, in a suit for commissions on the sale of land, the testimony is conflicting as to plaintiff's having any real agency in bringing vendor and purchaser into relations of dealing, it is not error to instruct the jury that plaintiff cannot recover unless he procured a customer ready and willing to enter into a contract on the vendor's terms, whether those that were originally fixed, or such as defendant found acceptable.—Scribner v. Hazeltine, 79 Mich. 370.

¶ 238. In an action by brokers to recover commissions for the sale of real estate an instruction that if the jury was satisfied from a fair preponderance of the evidence that the purchaser abandoned all idea of looking up the property that plaintiffs' representative had called his attention to, and he was led to examine the property through other and independent means, and he finally purchased it without any effort on the part of the plaintiffs, and did not buy it as the result of plaintiffs' calling his attention thereto, then the plaintiffs could not recover, held erroneous as the burden of proof was on plaintiffs to show that the sale was procured by them.—Kinsey v. Barth, 192 Mich. 219.

¶ 239. In an action by brokers to recover commissions for the sale of real estate, in which the issue was whether plaintiffs' representative was the procuring cause of the sale, an instruction to the effect that the purchaser's testimony as to the cause of the purchase should be disregarded, and that a broker has earned his commission by being the first to call the attention of the purchaser to the property held erroneous.—Kinsey v. Barth, 192 Mich. 219.

¶ 240. Plaintiff sued defendant for a real estate commission. Plaintiff testified that he sent the purchaser to the defendant, who negotiated the sale with him. Defendant testified that in a conversation with the plaintiff, after the sale, the plaintiff stated he did not know the purchaser. Held, that an instruction by the court that the plaintiff's testimony was undisputed was reversible error, since defendant's testimony tended to rebut it.—Barendsen v. Wilder, 158 Mich. 50.

¶ 241. In an action for a portion of commission for the sale of land alleged to have been procured by plaintiff, under an agreement with defendant, a real estate dealer, that they would divide the commissions on all sales procured by the plaintiff, the court directed the jury that the efforts of the plaintiff must be the procuring cause of the sale and then argued the case to the jury so as to destroy the effect of the instruction. Held, not error when the charge as an entirety was not misleading though parts thereof, if separated from the context, might have been.—Ketchell v. Keene, 171 Mich. 108.

§ 50. ——As to value of services.

¶ 243. In a suit for commissions for the sale of real estate, defendant's counsel in open court admitted defendant was liable for either $200 or $1,400. The court instructed the jury that defendant would in any case be liable for a reasonable commission, and that in such case its verdict should be $200. Defendant's said admission did not include any statements with respect to the matter of reasonable commission. Held, said instruction was not prejudicial.—Hoopengarner v. Stipe, 169 Mich. 307.

§ 51. Actions between brokers.

Actions on contracts generally, see Contracts, X.

¶ 244. In an action by one real estate broker against another on an alleged oral agreement for the sharing of commissions if plaintiff secured a purchaser for property which defendant had for sale, to recover one-half of the commissions received, defendant claiming no agreement existed, held that the charge as given fairly presented to the jury the conflicting theories of the parties and the issues involved.—Minds v. Keyes, 189 Mich. 629.

¶ 245. An instruction held not prejudicial to the defendant in an action for the recovery of compensation for the sale of land by the plaintiff under an agreement with the defendant, with whom the land was listed by the owner for sale.—Debo v. Gamble, 186 Mich. 583.

¶ 246. In an action by a third person to recover compensation for selling land under an agreement with the defendant, with whom it was listed by the owner for sale, the refusal to give an instruction requested by the defendant, held not prejudicial when considered with the instructions given.—Debo v. Gamble, 186 Mich. 583.

¶ 247. In an action by a third person to recover compensation for selling land under an agreement with the defendant, with whom it was listed by the owner for sale, it is competent for the defendant to be examined by the plaintiff as to whether the latter received compensation from the owner for making the sale.—Debo v Gamble, 186 Mich. 583.

¶ 248. In an action by one real estate broker against another, on an alleged oral agreement for the sharing of commissions if plaintiff secured a purchaser for the property for which defendant had the sale, to recover one-half of commissions received, held that as the evidence was conflicting as to whether such an agreement existed and as to whether plaintiff was the procuring cause of the sale, the questions were properly left to the jury.—Minds v. Keyes, 189 Mich. 629.

In a railroad contract for an embankment to be thrown up from ditches alongside, a provision as to "cuttings on the line of the road," was held not to refer to such ditches, but to cuttings necessary to reduce the natural surface to the road level.—Grand Rapids & B. C. R. Co. v. Van Deusen, 29 Mich. 431.

¶ 9. The ordinary meaning of the term "grading" a street includes excavation and filling so as to make the surface conform to the grade line. Where, however, the contract which was inartificially worded provided that the grading should be done for $1.25 per linear rod, and immediately thereafter stated that the excavating should be done for twenty-six cents and the filling for twenty-five cents per cubic yard, held, that the grading to be done by the linear rod was intended to embrace all work of a preliminary character which the condition of the former street surface required to prepare it for excavating and filling, such as removal of obstructions, sidewalks, etc.—Davies v. Milwaukee Bridge & Iron Works, 87 Mich. 591, affirming on rehearing 86 Mich. 199.

II. PERFORMANCE AND BREACH; RESCISSION AND ABANDONMENT.

§ 4. In general; substantial performance.

Owner's act or request causing deviation from contract, see post §§ 8, 17.
Provisions as to time and delay, price, and payment, see post III.
By architects, see post § 45.
General law as to performance or breach of contracts, see Contracts, VII.
Damages for breach or defective performance, see Damages.

¶ 11. A building contractor is bound by the specifications of his contract unless they are waived, and the other party to the contract cannot be forced to accept work that does not conform thereto, even though recoupment is allowed for deficiencies.—Martus v. Houck, 39 Mich. 431.

§ 5. Performance to satisfaction.

¶ 12. A provision in a building contract that the work shall be done to the satisfaction of the board of public works of the contracting city does not give such board arbitrary power to reject the work if it is done in accordance with and in substantial fulfillment of the contract.—Schliess v. City of Grand Rapids, 131 Mich. 52.

¶ 13. The unsatisfactoriness and insufficiency of roofs on houses to be constructed "to the entire satisfaction of the owner," who reserved power to reject materials and workmanship not according to specifications, and whose contract specified shingles of the quality furnished and laid, is not a ground for refusing acceptance, where it appears that the faultiness of the roofs is not due to the workmanship but to the poor quality of the materials specified, and that they were as well laid as roofs could be out of that material.—Gier v. Daiber, 148 Mich. 190.

§ 6. Acceptance of performance.

Waiver of defects, see also post § 7.
Acceptance as waiver of delay, see post § 23.

¶ 14. A building which is under construction is not accepted by the owner when he is forced to occupy it before it is completed if it is not completed for acceptance when it is so occupied.—Japes v. Harmon, 176 Mich. 1.

¶ 15. The owner of a building defectively constructed, who is compelled to move into it from necessity, does not thereby accept the building so as to be liable for final payments.—Frohlich v. Klein, 160 Mich. 142.

¶ 16. When one contracts with another to build or to do some part of the work in constructing buildings upon realty belonging to the owner the mere taking possession after the other has left the premises cannot be construed as an unequivocal acceptance; such an act and all the surrounding circumstances may be taken into consideration in determining whether there is an implied waiver of any conditions precedent.—Gier v. Daiber, 148 Mich. 190.

¶ 17. An owner of land who contracts for the erection of a dwelling house has a right to rely upon his contract, and can avoid liability upon the unperformed contract by refusing to accept the building, but he must decide within a reasonable time what he intends to do, and to keep the question open for a year and a month is not a reasonable time. During that time he has no right to recover for the rental value or for any deterioration in the building.—Eaton v. Gladwell, 121 Mich. 444.

§ 7. Waiver of defects.

Acceptance of performance, see ante § 6.

¶ 18. The owner of a building does not waive a substantial failure to comply with a contract for its erection, by remaining silent when asked by the contractor to tell him if there is anything not in accordance with the contract in order that he may fix it—especially where the defects are not such as can be readily seen and are not called to his attention.—Eaton v. Gladwell, 108 Mich. 678.

¶ 19. Minor defects in material and workmanship, not of a character evincive of any purpose to defraud and which might have been overlooked, and might have been remedied if attention had been called to them, will not be ground for refusing acceptance after the owner has been invited to point out further defects in addition to some that had been pointed out and remedied, and none was pointed out at that time.—Gier v. Daiber, 148 Mich. 190.

¶ 20. The owner, through his architect, may not observe work by the contractor going on from time to time and then complain when the work is done that it is not satisfactory.—Kunze v. Jones, 200 Mich. 453.

¶ 21. A city is estopped to set up that a contract for the construction of a wall was improperly performed where its inspectors and architect were present during the progress of the work and made weekly reports thereon to the board of public works upon which estimates were based and paid, and no objection to the manner of doing the work was made at any time.—Schliess v. City of Grand Rapids, 131 Mich. 52.

§ 8. Defective work required by owner.

As extra work, see post § 34.

¶ 22. Complainant, a building contractor, entered into a written contract with defendant to build a hotel according to plans and specifications prepared by an architect. Upon bill by complainant to foreclose lien for balance, defendant asked for damages for inferior construction due to defective plastering. Held, that inasmuch as defendant was not content to have the plastering done according to the contract, but insisted upon an entirely different contract with the plasterer, no allowance should be made to defendant.—Scheible v. Klenk, 171 Mich. 1.

¶ 23. Provisions in a city contract for sewer work, making the contractor "liable for defects in the material he has furnished or in his work," and making him responsible for repairs "by reason of faulty material or workmanship" did not apply to defective work performed at the express direction of the city engineer who was made the final arbiter.—Lamson v. City of Marshall, 133 Mich. 250.

§ 9. Reconstruction and reparation.

¶ 24. In an action on a city sewer contract, where the city engineer had refused to give a certificate and had directed the relaying of the sewer, it was repugnant to both equitable and legal principles to compel the contractors to again excavate and relay such sewer because the engineer had selected an improper method of laying it.—Lamson v. City of Marshall, 133 Mich. 250.

¶ 25. Under a subcontractor's contract which provided that "The contractors shall cover, protect, and secure the work from injury, any damage happening thereto shall be repaired, replaced or made good by such contractors," and that inspection and certificate by the architects "shall not release the contractor from any obligation to perform the work in a good and workmanlike manner, and in case of any default or defects being found at any time either in workmanship or materials, the same, with all damages due thereto, shall be repaired, replaced or made good by the contractors at their own cost and expense," a subcontractor who had, in accordance with specifications, placed pipes within four inches of the outside wall, is not bound to replace them in another place where, after his work was completed and accepted, the pipes were damaged by frost due to failure of other contractors to supply steam to be turned into them as intended, and the architect thereupon ordered new pipes to be put in in another location, and where they are so replaced he may charge therefor as extras.—Creswell v. Robertson, 139 Mich. 416.

§ 10. Certificate of performance and conclusiveness on the parties.

Refusal or waiver of certificate, see post §§ 12, 13.

Certificate to sanction extra work or changes, see post § 36.

Conclusiveness and presumptions as to estimates and measurements, see post §§ 38, 39.

¶ 26. A building contract with a school district provided that in case of discharge of the architects, the school board itself should act in their stead. Held, upon such discharge the plaintiff contractor was relieved of the necessity of producing the architects' final estimate.—Germain v. Union School Dist. City of Stanton, 158 Mich. 214.

¶ 27. Where a contract for the construction of a school building provides that the work shall be executed "agreeably to such directions as may be given from time to time by the architect or his assistant" (the local superintendent appointed by the district), "and to his full and entire satisfaction, without reference thereon to any other person"; that all claims for alterations or extras be adjusted "solely by the superintendent," and that payment be made for the full completion of the building on the certificate of the architect or superintendent, it was held that whatever passed under the inspection of the superintendent as the work progressed, and was in good faith approved by him, expressly or by implication, was not open to objection on the part of the district afterwards, and that the certificate of the architect was not a condition precedent to the right of the contractor to recover for the work so approved. —Wildey v. Paw Paw & Antwerp Fractional School Dist. No. 1, 25 Mich. 419.

¶ 28. When so declared by contracting parties, the decision of an engineer or arbitrator as to the sufficiency of the performance of a contract may be final and conclusive so as to preclude an appeal to the courts, except where he acts fraudulently or in bad faith.—Algate v. City of Lansing, 180 Mich. 484.

¶ 29. Where a building contract makes the determination of the architect conclusive as to what is required of the contractor, the architect's decision is also conclusive upon the owner.—Young v. Stein, 152 Mich. 310.

¶ 30. Where a building contract provides that the architect, as agent of the owner, shall certify as to the performance of the contract upon which payment is to become due, another clause specifying that the house shall be acceptable to the owner and the architect, does not enable the owner to withhold payment after the architect has approved the work, but the owner is bound by the certificate of the architect.—Young v. Stein, 152 Mich. 310.

¶ 31. Where a building contract provides that the certificate of the architect shall not relieve the contractor from doing the work in a good and workmanlike manner, the owner, despite the architect's approval, is entitled to show, in a suit for the contract price by the contractor, that there was faulty workmanship, and it is a question for the jury whether the owner is estopped to claim damages by his acceptance of the work. —Young v. Stein, 152 Mich. 310.

¶ 32. The terms of a contract for the construction of a sewer held not to make the decision of the inspector as to whether materials used complied with the contract, final and conclusive so as to preclude an appeal to the court.—Algate v. City of Lansing, 180 Mich. 484.

¶ 33. A building contract provided that the architect's decision as to the fulfillment of the contract should be final. The architect gave his final certificate before the building was completed, upon the promise of the contractor to finish certain parts of the work. Held, this certificate was not conclusive on the owner so as to make him liable for final payment.—Frohlich v. Klein, 160 Mich. 142.

§ 11. ——Impeachment of certificate.

¶ 34. A finding that the decision of the architects against the right of the contractor to extra compensation was fraudulent, cannot be based upon the mere fact that they drew the plans and specifications, and were to receive from the owner as their compensation a certain percentage of the total cost of the building.—Kelly v. Public Schools of Muskegon, 110 Mich. 529.

¶ 35. Where a plaintiff contractor and a defendant owner have made an architect the final judge as to accounts between them, a sufficient fraud to set aside the architect's decision is not established by the fact that the architect has not found to be due plaintiff as much as he claims, and the fact that a jury has agreed with the plaintiff's contention.—Fisher v. Burroughs Adding Machine Co., 166 Mich. 306.

§ 12. ——Refusal to grant certificate.

¶ 36. A building contract held not to justify the refusal of an architect to furnish the contractor with a certificate of completion, on the ground of his liability for stipulated damages resulting from failure to complete the structure within the time limit.—Maurer v. School Dist. No. 1, 186 Mich. 223.

§ 13. ——Waiver of certificate.

¶ 37. Where payments are made to a contractor from time to time during the construction of a building, without the production of an architect's certificate, which the contract required, until demand for final payment was made, when the architect refused to give a final certificate, held that there had been a waiver of such requirement.—Maurer v. School Dist. No. 1, 186 Mich. 223.

¶ 38. In an action on a city sewer contract, where the engineer had refused a certificate and directed the relaying of the sewer, but where the city knew of the method adopted by the contractor with the consent of the city engineer, and failed to object but on the contrary continued to pay monthly estimates, the contractor was entitled to recover without the engineer's certificate.—Lamson v. City of Marshall, 133 Mich. 250.

§ 14. Furnishing plans and estimates.

¶ 39. The refusal of an inspector to furnish an estimate of work done on a sewer by a contractor in compliance with the terms of his contract, constitutes a breach thereof, where such refusal was because of the use of improper materials in another portion of the work.—Algate v. City of Lansing, 180 Mich. 484.

§ 15. Furnishing materials and supplies.

Use of materials and tools in completing work, see post § 29.

¶ 40. One who, having contracted to erect a building, sublets part of the work by contract expressly providing that the subcontractor is to furnish no material, and that the work shall be done without delay, is bound to see that material is supplied as needed, and his neglect to do so renders him liable to the subcontractor for the loss of time occasioned thereby, notwithstanding the fact that, as between the contractor and the owner, the latter was to furnish all material, of which fact the subcontractor had knowledge.—Perine v. Standfield, 107 Mich. 553.

¶ 41. A contract whereby railroad contractors sublet a portion of the work, to be completed to the satisfaction of the engineers at a time specified, reserving the right to end the contract and retain the sums withheld from the monthly estimates, and to pay the laborers directly, payment to be made when the work is completed, provided the railroad company had then paid them, and which provided that until the work was finished no money should be paid the subcontractor except for labor actually performed and materials furnished on said work, and that all moneys received upon estimates as the work progressed should be used to pay for such labor and materials, and that the subcontractor should stand, in respect to such work, as disbursing agent for his contractors, and be liable, as for a breach of trust, for any misapplication of such moneys, was held not to authorize such subcontractor to pledge the credit of his contractors for supplies furnished to him by third persons.—Wells v. Martin, 32 Mich. 478.

§ 16. Protection from elements or other danger.

See also post ¶ 49.

¶ 42. A contractor building a foundation wall for a city in accordance with the plans and specifications furnished by it, and doing the work in the manner and at the time directed by the city, is not an insurer of the work and is not responsible for defects due to freezing.—Schliess v. City of Grand Rapids, 131 Mich. 52.

¶ 43. Where a construction contract does not require a contractor to heat a building erected in cold weather, he is not answerable for defects in the plastering due to the absence of heat.—Johnson v. O'Neill, 181 Mich. 326.

¶ 44. The owner of a building under construction in cold weather and not the contractor must, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, furnish necessary heat to protect it.—Johnson v. O'Neill, 181 Mich. 326.

¶ 45. It is the duty of the owner of a building to dry it out, especially where the building specifications cover such question, and the owner is consequently liable for the expense of drying out the building.—Malcomson-Houghten Co. v. Gregorian Bldg. Co., 191 Mich. 678; Wadham v. Gregorian Bldg. Co., Id.

¶ 46. Where the heating specifications of a written contract for building a church provide that the pipes underground must be deep enough to prevent freezing and must be covered with magnesia and felt, the court should rule as a matter of law, that said provision does not require the contractor to put asbestos on pipes which are under the church but not under the ground.—Wenzel v. Kleruj, 168 Mich. 92.

¶ 47. A provision in a contract for the construction of a sewer, requiring the contractor, in all cases where blasting is necessary, to cover the blast with brush or timber sufficiently to prevent injury to persons or property, is designed to prevent injury from fragments which might otherwise be thrown from the trench, and does not cover a case where one is injured by a horse which was frightened by the explosion.—Mitchell v. Prange, 110 Mich. 78.

Extra work, see post V.

¶ 48. Where an engineer starts a tunnel-contractor's foreman at what he erroneously believes is the correct point, and, as a result, it is necessary to construct a longer tunnel than that covered by the contract, such act of the engineer does not constitute a breach of the contract.—Township School Dist. of Wakefield v. MacRae, 198 Mich. 603.

§ 18. Earth work; digging and filling contracts.

Mode of measurement, see post §§ 38, 39.

¶ 49. Where a city contracted with one whose lands adjoined its limits to enlarge and straighten a ditch on his premises so that it would be a sufficient outlet for city drainage, and so to do the work that the ditch would carry off all water without overflowing or saturating the adjoining premises, it was held the contract could not be construed to bind the city to make provision for extraordinary and unexpected floods, or to put the proprietor in any better condition than he would have been with the ditch as it was before, with the extra city flowage excluded.—City of Coldwater v. Tucker, 36 Mich. 474.

¶ 50. A provision in a railroad construction contract that borrowed earth for embankments shall be paid for at embankment prices, does not preclude a recovery for material which sank below the surface.—Brucker v. Manistee & G. R. R. Co., 166 Mich. 330.

¶ 51. Where a contract between adjacent owners to build a box drain bound each to build one end, and required the lower proprietor to keep his end of the drain open, such lower proprietor was liable on this contract if his neglect to open an outlet on his land below the proposed drain, to carry off the water, made it impossible to begin work on the drain itself.—Britten v. Dunning, 55 Mich. 158.

§ 19. Termination and abandonment.

Privileges to take over and complete work, see post IV.

Rights under contracts generally, see Contracts, VII, D; and see also Rescission.

¶ 52. A stipulation in a railroad construction contract that the company may terminate the contract when in its opinion the work is not progressing favorably or the contractor is not duly complying with the provisions of the contract, is binding upon the contractor, unless the action of the arbiter is successfully assailed for fraud or gross error implying bad faith.—Brucker v. Manistee & G. R. R. Co., 166 Mich. 330.

¶ 53. The fact that there is a dispute between a tunnel contractor and a school board and its engineer as to whether certain work should be done is no excuse for the failure of the contractor to go ahead and complete the work under the terms of the contract as claimed by him where such work would merely mean an extension of the tunnel.—Township School Dist. of Wakefield v. MacRae, 198 Mich. 603.

III. TIME AND DELAY AND PAYMENT.

§ 20. Time provisions generally.

In contracts generally, see Contracts, VI, D, VII, C.

Liquidated damages clauses, see Damages, VI.

¶ 54. Where a grading contract provided that the contractors should "proceed with such diligence and with such force of laborers as the executive committee of said company may direct to perform the work," etc., it was held that this provision was subordinate to one directly following it requiring the work to be completed by a day named, and was intended to enable the company to compel completion by the day specified.—Grand Rapids & B. C. R. Co. v. Van Deusen, 29 Mich. 431.

¶ 55. A., for whom B. was building a house under a contract to finish it by Sept. 15, 1885, accepted B.'s draft payable on that date to C., who was furnishing B. lumber for the house, and for whose lumber bill, to a certain extent, A. had agreed to become responsible, the acceptance being qualified thus: "It is understood that the dwelling shall be completed before this draft is p id." Quære, whether the fixing of Sept. 15 as the day of payment, qualified by the condition, would not make the completion by that date essential to any recovery.—Ferguson v. Davis, 65 Mich. 677.

¶ 56. On a contract to furnish "elevator fronts" for a building in process of construction, a stipulation in the contract that the seller "agrees to execute this contract with all diligence and to have all the fronts ready to put in place when the stairs are being put in—they do not furnish the stairs," the meaning is that the time limit was not later than when the stairs were ready to put in, and if there at that time it was sufficient, and it cannot be construed to obligate the seller "to deliver the inclosures when the stairs were ready to put in at all events, and to deliver them at an earlier date if by the exercise of all diligence he could do so."—Powell v. Champion Iron Co., 144 Mich. 540.

§ 21. Delay in performance.

Delay as breach in general, see Contracts, VII.

¶ 57. A contractor is not liable for a penalty under a building contract for failure to complete a building within the period of eleven months where he is hampered during the first five months of the period because of the lack of a formal contract and because he has no definite source for money supplies, and he is further hindered because of changes in the work.—Malcomson-Houghten Co. v. Gregorian Bldg. Co., 191 Mich. 678; Wadham v. Gregorian Bldg. Co., Id.

§ 22. Excuses for delay.

In contracts generally, see Contracts, VII, C.

¶ 58. A sewer contractor who sublets a part of the work for which he is to furnish the necessary material cannot escape liability for delay because of the failure of another subcontractor to deliver material and because of the rejection by the sewer inspector of a part of the material delivered.—Boston v. Henderson, 92 Mich. 606.

¶ 59. Complainant, a building contractor, entered into a written contract with defendant to build a hotel according to plans and specifications prepared by an architect. Upon bill by complainant to foreclose lien for balance, defendant asked for liquidated damages for failure to complete on time. Held, that inasmuch as the delays in the completion of the building were caused by the owner and the architect, complainant was not responsible for them.—Scheible v. Klenk, 171 Mich. 1.

§ 23. Waiver of time limit and delay.

See also generally Contracts, VII, C.

¶ 60. Where an owner who had contracted for the erection of five houses, to be completed by October 1, agreed September 17 to a modification of the contract to three houses under circumstances indicating that he contemplated that the buildings might not be completed until the following spring, and acquiesced in the continuation of work until late in December, he waived the right to insist that time was of the essence of the contract.—Barnard v. McLeod, 114 Mich. 73.

¶ 61. Where a paving contract with a city provided for stipulated damages for each day's delay in completing the work and that it should be paid before the work was accepted by the city, the fact that the work was accepted without any claim for such damages is a waiver thereof.—Central Bitulithic Paving Co. v. City of Mt. Clemens, 143 Mich. 259.

¶ 62. The right of a city to insist on the payment of stipulated damages for delay was not waived by its permitting the contractor to proceed with the work after the time provided for completion, and by receiving and paying estimates for the work.—Lamson v. City of Marshall, 133 Mich. 250.

¶ 63. Where a property owner was given an option by a contract to permit a contractor to complete a second story of a building, and the former did not exercise his option until a week before the expiration of the time limited for the completion of the structure, held, that such conduct amounted to an abandonment of the time limit so as to excuse the other party to the contract.—Maurer v. School Dist. No. 1, 186 Mich. 223.

§ 24. Extension of time.

See also ante § 23.

¶ 64. The time for the completion of a city sewer contract was not extended by the action of the council in recommending that the contractor's application for an extension of time be laid on the table until the completion of the contract.—Lamson v. City of Marshall, 133 Mich. 250.

§ 25. Price, advances and payment.

Rights of principal and subcontractors, see ante § 3.
Clauses for withholding payment, see post § 27.
Extra work, see post V.
Certificate for amount payable, see post § 41.
Agreement on amount payable, see post § 42.
Compensation of architect, see post § 46.

¶ 65. Where a contract to grade a street specifies the price of excavation and removal of earth a distance of five hundred feet, and provides that for every foot over five hundred the contractor is to receive the same price pro rata, the contractor cannot be confined to the reasonable worth of such removal for a distance over five hundred feet.—Davies v. City of East Saginaw, 66 Mich. 37.

¶ 66. Evidence of a custom among contractors and builders furnishing labor to be charged for by the day to charge for each man working an advance over the price paid him by the contractor is admissible in interpreting the contract, where it appears that the men were general employees of the contractors, and that their labor was worth the price charged therefor.—McDonnell v. Ford, 87 Mich. 198.

¶ 67. A contract for the construction of a driveway of a specified width, and of "about" a designated length, for a given price per square foot, "payment to be a good and sufficient note, at 60 days, upon completion of work," does not make the giving of the note a condition precedent to the right to demand a performance of the work.—Armstrong v. Andrews, 109 Mich. 537.

¶ 68. Failure to pay monthly, as agreed, on a contract for grading a proposed railroad, would not, of itself, and in the absence of any showing that any delay was authorized by the company, entitle the contractors to recover extra compensation for the labor performed on account of the delay occasioned by such default in payment, and the consequent increased cost of the work.—Grand Rapids & B. C. R. Co. v. Van Deusen, 29 Mich. 431.

§ 26. Damages and penalty clauses.

See also ante ¶¶ 57, 62.
Liquidated damages clauses as measures of damages or as penalty, see Damages, VI.

¶ 69. In an action by the owner of a building against the contractor and the corporate surety on a bond to recover excess payments made to the contractor because of the failure of the contractor to satisfy liens and perform the work according to the contract, necessitating the cancellation of the contract and the completion of the work by the owner, held, that a clause in the contract for damages at the rate of a certain sum per day to be paid if the work was not completed at a specified date, should be read with another provision allowing material alterations.—Doyle v. Faust, 187 Mich. 108.

§ 27. Clauses for withholding money.

¶ 70. In letting a contract for laying a patent pavement, the city of Detroit stipulated that it might withhold a certain fixed sum per square yard to protect itself from claims for royalty, and the bids were to include that sum. The city assessed and collected a paving tax amounting to the entire contract price including the royalty, which it had made a separate contract to pay, but it afterwards appeared that the patent was void. Held, that the contractors were not concerned in the city's liability for royalty, and were not entitled to receive the sum withheld to pay it.—City of Detroit v. Robinson, 42 Mich. 198.

¶ 71. Where one member of a firm of paving contractors makes an individual contract to pave a street, the fact that the firm as a firm has already made an agreement by which they are to receive a certain royalty upon the kind of pavement used, does not make any difference with the construction of the individual contract.—City of Detroit v. Robinson, 42 Mich. 198.

¶ 72. Under a contract to do the carpenter work on a building for a specified sum, payments to be made from time to time as the work progressed, reserving 10% until 10 days after the work is completed, a contractor may recover for work done though before its completion it is damaged by the fall of the roof caused by improper designs and careless supervision by the agents of the owner.—Teukie v. Moore, 131 Mich. 427.

IV. COMPLETION AFTER BREACH OR ABANDONMENT.

§ 28. Notice and election to complete.

Right of assignees for security to assume performance, see also Assignments, ¶ 89.

¶ 73. A railway contractor made a subcontract for building a section of road, and stipulated therein that if the work should not be carried on with sufficient force and energy the chief engineer of the road might, on giving written notice to the subcontractor, declare the subcontract forfeited, or might take possession of the work and carry it on at the subcontractor's expense and for his benefit. Held, that as the chief engineer was a stranger to the agreement he could not be compelled to give the notice, and that a written notice from the contractor to the subcontractor was sufficient where the engineer had already orally notified both that the work was not advancing satisfactorily.—Hendrie v. Canadian Bank of Commerce, 49 Mich. 401.

¶ 74. Defendant accepted an order in favor of plaintiffs, drawn on him by contractors for sinking a salt well, and payable when a certain depth was reached, subject, however, to the conditions of the contract. The contractors being unable to complete the contract, defendant assumed its performance, after which the contractors had nothing to do with the job except to oversee it, and defendant furnished everything, and paid the men. Held, that defendant did not, by such conditional acceptance, obligate himself to notify plaintiffs of any breach of the contract by the contractors, and if he was compelled, as the only means of securing the completion of the work, to take upon himself the burden of paying the men and for the materials, he had a right to deduct these payments from the contract price, whether he gave such notice or not, and without reference to whether the transaction was called an "abandonment" of the contract or not.—Jenks v. Wells, 90 Mich. 515.

§ 29. Use of materials and tools.

¶ 75. Where a contract for railroad construction provided that if the work did not go on fast enough the chief engineer of the road could take charge of it and carry it on at the contractor's expense and for his benefit, it seems that he would be entitled to take the teams and tools of the contractor for the purpose, especially if there was not time enough to get others. Whether the contractor would have a right to so mortgage them as to prevent this, quære.—Hendrie v. Canadian Bank of Commerce, 49 Mich. 401.

V. EXTRA WORK OR EXPENSE, ADDITIONS AND CHANGES.

§ 30. In general; what is extra work or materials.

Particular causes for necessity of extra work, see post §§ 31-34.
Extra expenses, see post § 35.
Presumption as to gratuitousness of inclusion in contract, see also Implied Contracts, II.

¶ 76. Where a contract between a contractor and a subcontractor for the grading of a road-bed gave the engineer of the railroad the right to change the line at discretion, the contractor would not be liable for an additional cost of overhaul unless changes had been made fraudulently by the contractor's procurement or collusion.—Bush v. Brooks, 70 Mich. 446.

¶ 77. In an action for extra services furnished under a contract under which plaintiff undertook to move a beet sugar factory to a new location and to pay certain enumerated expenses in connection therewith, the claims sued on were held not to be within the terms of the contract.—Hapke v. Davidson, 180 Mich. 138.

¶ 78. The exhibition to a contractor, before making a bid for sewer excavation work, of original blue prints prepared by a city engineer, does not constitute a warranty that the exact amount of excavation there delineated would be done in the actual carrying on of the work, where the contractor is to be paid for whatever excavation is done in each particular class at price named in such class, and the contract itself contemplates that there may be changes in the plans and work done.—Schneider v. City of Ann Arbor, 195 Mich. 599.

¶ 79. Where the contractors who were about to erect a building, and the owner of the lot on which it was to be placed, jointly bound themselves for all brick delivered for the building, and nothing indicates that no change in plans was contemplated, their liability extended to brick delivered for additions to the first plan of the building though the party delivering was not notified of any change in the plan.—Goldner v. Finn, 67 Mich. 340.

¶ 80. A contract by a railway company to "pave" its track, held not to cover the excavation necessary to prepare for the paving. —Fort Street & E. R. Co. v. Schneider, 15 Mich. 74.

¶ 81. In a contract to grade and pave a street the contractor agreed to furnish and lay the stone curb at a certain price per lineal foot. To properly set the curbstones it was necessary to excavate a trench to a specified depth. Held, that such work was included in the bid for furnishing and laying the curbstones, and could not be recovered for as excavation under other provisions of the contract.—Davies v. City of East Saginaw, 66 Mich. 37.

¶ 82. Under a contract to construct a sewer which provided that no tunneling should be done without permission or unless the plan stated that it was to be a "tunneled sewer," and that all loss or damage from unforeseen difficulties or obstructions should be borne by the contractor, the latter cannot recover extra compensation because the ground was found to be such that tunneling was impossible, though the plan had printed thereon "May be tunneled," since this was a mere permission and not a representation that it could be tunneled.—Gartner v. City of Detroit, 131 Mich. 21.

¶ 83. Plaintiff agreed to erect for defendant a mausoleum for $22,000, with a foundation at a depth of ten feet. Neither party at the time of entering the contract knew of the condition of the soil under the surface. Plaintiff, after digging ten feet, found quicksand, and had to go to a depth of twenty feet to secure a firm foundation. Held, that no new promise having been made by defendant to pay for the extra work during the course of its performance, plaintiff could not recover for same.—Harrison Granite Co. v. Stephens, 160 Mich. 51.

§ 33. ——Needless or improper work.

¶ 84. Under a contract to grade a street the contractor was to receive a certain price per cubic yard for filling. He filled in so that the slope of the embankment extended outside of the street lines, and upon private property. Held, that he could not recover for such filling outside of the street lines.—Davies v. City of East Saginaw, 66 Mich. 37.

¶ 85. Under a contract to construct a sewer which provided that no tunneling should be done without permission or unless the plan stated that it was to be a "tunneled sewer," and that all loss or damage from unforeseen difficulties or obstructions should be borne by the contractor, but that he should be paid for extra work resulting from changes or additions made at the direction of the city, the contractor cannot recover extra compensation because the ground was found to be such that tunneling was impossible, though the plan had printed thereon "May be tunneled," since the city made no change in the plan nor did it dictate the mode of construction.—Gartner v. City of Detroit, 131 Mich. 21.

§ 34. ——Work made necessary by owner.

¶ 86. Failure to pay monthly, as agreed, on a contract for grading a proposed railroad, would not of itself, and in the absence of any showing that any delay was authorized by the company, entitle the contractors to recover extra compensation for the labor performed on account of the delay occasioned by such default in payment, and the consequent increased cost of the work.—Grand Rapids & B. C. R. Co. v. Van Deusen, 29 Mich. 431.

¶ 87. A sewer excavation contract by a city held not breached by it, so as to authorize a recovery by the contractor for an extra amount of excavation and refilling by gravel necessitated by seepage of water into trenches dug by him, by its delay of 20 or 30 minutes in laying the pipe in the trenches.—Schneider v. City of Ann Arbor, 195 Mich. 599.

§ 35. Extra expenses.

Caused by delay in payments, see ante ¶ 68.

¶ 88. Where a plaintiff contractor upon the demand of an architect has given to defendant owner a surety bond, he cannot in the settlement of the account recover the premium paid by him on such bond on the ground that his contract with defendant did not call for said bond.—Fisher v. Burroughs Adding Machine Co., 166 Mich. 396.

§ 36. Provisions as to sanction or certification.

Agreement to change as implying extension of time, see ante ¶ 60; and see also Contracts, VII, C.

¶ 90. A contractor for the erection of a lighthouse sub-let part of the work under a contract which provided that the work should be performed under the direction and to the satisfaction of the government engineer or his agent, that alterations should be made in the work as required by the contractor, and that the value of extra work should be fixed by the engineer, or some competent person appointed by him. The engineer named in the contract was at no time present, but the contractor instructed the subcontractor to do whatever the government inspector, appointed by the engineer, wished him to do. The subcontractor performed additional work under the direction of such inspector, but the latter, on application, refused to make any valuation thereof. Held, that upon such refusal the subcontractor was entitled to maintain an action for the extras so furnished.—Moran v. Schmitt, 109 Mich. 282.

¶ 91. Where the supervising architect of a building was given authority to order extra work and was referred to in the contracts as the agent of the owner, he had authority to arrange that a necessary scaffold be built by one of the contractors, though under the several contracts each was required to build his own scaffolds, where this was done to expedite the building which had been delayed, and he had power to bind the owner to pay therefor, the other contractors agreeing to a deduction of their share from the amounts to be paid to them.—Teakle v. Moore, 131 Mich. 427.

¶ 92. In an action for materials and labor in plastering, plaintiff may show that after he began work the specifications attached to the original contract were produced, and that he was told by defendant to do the work according to them, and he should have his pay, and that pursuant thereto he did three-coat plastering work instead of two, as he had at first agreed to do.—Evans v. Montgomery, 95 Mich. 497.

¶ 93. Where a contract for sewer excavation work with a city provides that a written order by the board of public works for extra work must be obtained, there can be no recovery for extra work and material except by compliance with such provisions.—Schneider v. City of Ann Arbor, 195 Mich. 599.

¶ 94. There is no waiver of the provisions of a contract for sewer excavation work requiring a written order by the board of public works for the doing of extra work before a claim for such work shall be allowed where, when the contractor was directed to do the work involved, he asked for a written order from the board on the ground that it was an extra, and the city engineer insisted that it was within the specifications.—Schneider v. City of Ann Arbor, 195 Mich. 599.

VI. ESTIMATES, MEASUREMENTS AND DISPUTES; ARBITRATION AND REFERENCE.

§ 37. Scope of superintendent's or arbitrator's authority.

Effect of unauthorized estimate, see post § 40.

¶ 95. Contractors doing city sewer work were bound to obey the orders made in good faith by the city engineer, whether they were advantageous or detrimental to their interests, and they were not exempt from obedience because they believed such orders to be unwise.—Lamson v. City of Marshall, 133 Mich. 250.

¶ 96. A building contract providing for the determination of any questions arising between the parties as to the meaning of the plans and specifications, by an architect or superintendent, is not broad enough to convey authority to decide a disputed question of the method of measurement of brick used in walls.—Walker v. Syms, 118 Mich. 183.

§ 38. Estimates and measurements and their conclusiveness.

Price provisions depending on quantity of work, see ante § 25.
Sinkage as included, see also ante ¶ 50.
Unauthorized estimates, see post § 40.
Certificate for amount payable, see post § 41.

¶ 97. A custom as to the method of measuring brick furnished and laid in walls will govern where a building contract is silent as to such method.—Walker v. Syms, 118 Mich. 183.

¶ 98. A contract for grading and preparing for ties the bed of a railroad held to contemplate that the road bed should be an embankment thrown up from ditches on either side; and where the term "cuttings on the line of the road" was not to refer to those ditches, but to the cuttings necessary where the natural surface of the ground was above the road level, and that all earth thrown into embankments, whether from ditches or cuttings, should be measured in the embankment and not as excavation according to the space it occupied before removal, but that all the earth thrown into spoil banks should be measured as excavation; a ruling below that the contractors were to be allowed for all shrinkage of the earth arising from its being thrown into embankments, and measuring less there than where it was taken from, held erroneous. —Grand Rapids & B. C. R. Co. v. Van Deusen, 29 Mich. 431.

¶ 99. Where a great fire swept over the line of a proposed railroad after it had been surveyed, but before the contract for grading was made, and burned away the soil so that more earth was needed for fills and embankments than was shown by the engineer's profile and table of cuts and fills made before the fire, it was held not error to permit a jury to take this fact into account in determining the amount of work done under the contract.—Grand Rapids & B. C. R. Co. v. Van Deusen, 29 Mich. 431.

¶ 100. A contractor for city sewer work had no right to be present at a conference between the city engineer and his assistant, when they determined how they would classify the material excavated by the contractor, where the contract made the engineer the final arbiter in the matter of such classification.—Lamson v. City of Marshall, 133 Mich. 250.

¶ 101. The provisions of a sewer excavation contract providing that all estimates, measurements and determinations of quantity shall be made by the city engineer and that his estimates and measurements shall be final and conclusive between the parties are binding in the absence of fraud or bad faith.—Schneider v. City of Ann Arbor, 195 Mich. 599.

¶ 102. A municipality cannot avail itself of the advantage of having a supervising architect, with powers to decide on every detail as it may arise, without taking the consequences of his making an erroneous decision.—Lamson v. City of Marshall, 133 Mich. 250.

§ 39. ——Presumption of good faith.

Impeachment of certificate of performance, see ante § 11.
Conclusiveness of estimate or measurement, see ante § 38.

¶ 103. The rule applicable to a provision in a city sewer contract making the engineer's estimate as to whether excavated stones or boulders were to be classified as rock or earth final, was that the estimate was binding if honestly made, and not binding if it did not accord with honest judgment, and the burden to prove dishonesty was upon the party attacking the estimate. —Lamson v. City of Marshall, 133 Mich. 250.

¶ 104. In an action by a contractor on a city sewer contract, where the contract made the engineer's estimate as to the classification of excavations final, and there was dispute as to whether the engineer's estimate was his honest judgment, testimony that the engineer declined to make an estimate on the ground that "it might scare the city fathers," saying that he would "wait until we got scattered around on the outside trenches, and then they wouldn't know where we were, or what the estimate was for" together with the fact that rock was not anticipated, justified the inference that the estimate in question was not the honest judgment of the engineer.—Lamson v. City of Marshall, 133 Mich. 250.

¶ 105. In an action by a contractor against a city to recover for extra work done and material furnished on a sewer excavation contract, held that the burden of proof was upon plaintiff to show fraud or bad faith on the part of the engineer in making his estimates and computations.—Schneider v. City of Ann Arbor, 195 Mich. 599.

§ 40. Unauthorized estimates.

¶ 106. An estimate as to the amount due upon a building contract made by an architect who is not authorized by the contract to make estimates is not binding upon the party for whom the building is being erected.—Schuler v. Eckert, 90 Mich. 165.

§ 41. Certificates for amount payable.

Certificate of performance, see ante §§ 10-13.

¶ 107. An advisory letter recommending payment to contractor is not an architect's certificate.—Doyle v. Faust, 187 Mich. 108.

§ 42. Agreement by parties on amount.

¶ 108. Where a plaintiff contractor and defendant owner have agreed as to the balance due plaintiff, and there is no evidence of fraud on the part of the architect in refusing to approve parts of plaintiff's claim, the trial court properly directs a verdict for defendant in a suit for a sum in excess of the amount agreed upon, based on a claim of mistake on the agreed sum. (Bird, J., dissenting.)—Fisher v. Burroughs Adding Machine Co., 166 Mich. 396.

¶ 109. The fact that a plaintiff contractor and a defendant owner have agreed that a certain sum is due plaintiff does not constitute a waiver by defendant of the agreement making the architect the final arbitrator between the parties, where the sum agreed to be paid by plaintiff consisted of items previously approved by the architect.—Fisher v. Burroughs Adding Machine Co., 166 Mich. 396.

§ 43. Provisions for arbitration of disputes.

Dispute as ground for abandonment of work, see ante § 19.

Arbitration in common form, and arbitrations not provided for by contract but submitted by independent agreement, see Arbitration.

Arbitration distinguished from umpirage, see Arbitration, § 1.

Construction of terms providing for arbitration, see also Arbitration, § 4.

Construction of agreement for arbitration in contract, revocability, see also Arbitration, ¶ 24.

Validity of judgment on statutory arbitration, see Arbitration, ¶ 69.

¶ 110. A provision in a building contract that, if any apparent discrepancy should be found to exist between the plans, working drawings, and specifications, the decision as to the fair construction and the true intent and meaning thereof should be made by the architects, whose decision should be binding, is reasonable, and binds both parties; especially where the plans and specifications, an examination of which would have revealed apparent discrepancies, were accessible to the parties before the contract was made.—Kelly v. Public Schools of Muskegon, 110 Mich. 529.

¶ 111. A dispute arose between the parties to a contract for the erection of a building as to the damage caused by a failure to construct the cellar according to the specifications. The architect professed to be satisfied, and issued his final certificate as to the amount due. The owner demanded a reference to arbitrators, and named one who should act in his behalf. The contractor, contending that the architect was the agent of the owner under the terms of the contract, and that his decision was final, refused to appoint an arbitrator, and brought suit for the amount certified by the architect. Held, that the action was premature, and could not be maintained.—Weggner v. Greenstine, 114 Mich. 310.

¶ 112. Where a contract provides that if either party to a contract for building dissents from the architect's valuation of work added or omitted such valuation shall be referred to three arbitrators, an action before such reference is premature.—Weggner v. Greenstine, 114 Mich. 310.

VII. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF ARCHITECTS AND SUPERINTENDENTS.

§ 44. In general; employment and selection.

¶ 113. Under the ordinance of the City of Grand Rapids, § 85, providing that any person who shall be engaged in the planning or supervision of the erection, enlargement or alteration of buildings for others and be constructed by other persons than himself shall be regarded an architect, a contractor and builder who submits a proposition whereby he is to oversee the construction, if the contract is awarded to another, is an architect.—Wedgewood v. Jorgens, 190 Mich. 620.

¶ 114. An invitation to architects to submit designs to a board of trustees of a museum for a building, the submitted designs to be submitted to and passed on by a "competent board of experts," and stating that the examining board will not be bound to make any award if none of the designs be deemed worthy, does not make the function of the board of experts that of arbitrators, where they were not named, no number of them was specified, and they were appointed entirely by the trustees as advisers to them.—Donaldson v. Detroit Museum of Art, 72 Mich. 32.

¶ 115. Reasonableness of time in submitting to experts a design for a building in competition with other architects is immaterial, where the particular design when submitted was considered and rejected.—Donaldson v. Detroit Museum of Art, 72 Mich. 32.

§ 45. Duties and liabilities.

As estimator or arbiter of dispute, or as agent to measure work, see ante § 37.
Estimates and measurements and their conclusiveness, see ante §§ 38-40.
Certifying performance, see ante §§ 10-13.
Duty to furnish plans, see also ante § 14.
Certifying necessity for or agreement to extra work or change, see ante § 36.
Authority of superintendents and the like as agents, see Agency, II, and especially § 34.

¶ 116. An architect who has the ordinary skill and knowledge of his profession, and who, in the exercise thereof, uses ordinary skill and care, is not liable to his employer for damages resulting from an error of judgment in drafting plans.—Chapel v. Clark 117 Mich. 638.

¶ 117. The responsibility of an architect does not differ from that of a lawyer or physician, and he is not a warrantor of the plans and specifications and he does all that is required by the law, when he possesses the requisite skill and knowledge, if he uses his best judgment in the exercise of such knowledge.—Bayne v. Everham, 197 Mich. 181.

¶ 118. A property owner cannot recover damages from an architect for acts amounting to dereliction on the latter's part which were consented to by or were the result of the owner's negligence.—Johnson v. O'Neill, 181 Mich. 326.

§ 46. Compensation.

Persons entitled to mechanics' liens, see Mechanics' Liens, II.
Implication against promise to pay contractor for superintending his own work, see Implied Contracts, II.

¶ 119. An architect may recover for his services where he has substantially performed his contract, and the defendant has received a benefit therefrom.—Johnson v. O'Neill, 181 Mich. 326.

¶ 120. An architect may recover for making material alterations at his client's request in plans after the letting of a contract for a building.—Johnson v. O'Neill, 181 Mich. 326.

¶ 121. A usage among architects to charge for preliminary sketches and estimates of cost on the basis of a percentage on such estimates cannot bind the customer if unknown to him and not assented to.—Scott v. Maier, 56 Mich. 554.

¶ 122. An architect who submitted a design, rejected by a majority of the experts chosen by the corporation which invited the design in competition, cannot recover in assumpsit for the value of his services on a showing that the advice of the experts was not followed but that the trustees of the corporation chose a design themselves, where the invitation merely promised that designs would be passed on by the experts selected by the trustees and prizes awarded for those three selected, the first choice to carry employment as architect for the building, and where the invitation was merely to invite competitive designs, and did not promise to select any.—Donaldson v. Detroit Museum of Art, 72 Mich. 32.

VIII. BONDS AND INDEMNIFICATION.

§ 47. In general; interpretation of bond.

Clauses for withholding payments, see ante § 27.
Premium on bond as extra expense, see ante ¶ 88.
Bond of public contractor for protection of materialmen and subcontractors, see Public Contracts, VII.
General right of subrogation, see Subrogation; Suretyship.

¶ 123. Where a bond signed by a building contractor and a surety company refers to the contract it must be read with the contract and specifications.—Doyle v. Faust, 187 Mich. 108.

¶ 124. A building contractor's indemnity bond limited in terms to material claims which "are valid liens against his property" does not extend to one which is defective.—Herpolsheimer v. Hansell-Elcock Co., 141 Mich. 367.

¶ 125. A building contractor's bond expressly providing that "the surety shall not be liable under this bond to any one except the owner," but also providing that the owner in estimating his damages under the bond may include the claims of mechanics and materialmen, is a private obligation giving no rights to a materialman on which it can invoke the aid of equity as a subrogee.—Herpolsheimer v. Hansell-Elcock Co., 141 Mich. 367.

§ 48. Actions and defenses.

On bonds generally, see Bonds.
Intervention of parties, see Parties.

¶ 126. In a suit on a building contractor's bond to recover the price of materials furnished by a third party for which the owner of the building had become liable, and against which liability the bond indemnified him, defendants may show, under a plea of the general issue, that plaintiff has in his hands money due under the contract as pleaded to the contractor sufficient to satisfy the demand.—Marquette Opera House Building Co. v. Wilson, 109 Mich. 228.

¶ 127. Under the general issue to a bond of indemnity to a building owner to hold him harmless against liens and amounts he should be compelled to pay, defendants cannot show that the owner has in control and might apply to a material-claim money owing the contractor for extras, the contract requiring an architect's estimate for such extras which does not appear to have been made so as to earn the money under the contract and the bond being collateral to the contract; such defense on the bond is equivalent to a plea of breach of the principal contract in that no architect's estimate was exacted and must be specially noticed under the general issue.—Marquette Opera House Building Co. v. Wilson, 109 Mich. 223.

IX. LIENS AND REMEDIES.

§ 49. Liens in general.

See generally Mechanics' Liens.
Necessity of discharging liens or furnishing statement before action on contract, see post §§ 51-53.
Common law liens, see Liens.

§ 50. Actions and procedure.

[Note. The general practice and procedure in actions on contracts is treated in Contracts, X. For convenience and in order to have the benefit of a complete collection of the cases on that subject, including pleading, evidence, instruction, jury questions, etc., in one place, all matter relating to actions on building contracts has been there treated excepting only the matters indicated in the sections here following.]
Actions on bond, see ante § 48.
Damages for breach, and pleading, evidence and instructions on damages, see Damages.
See also generally Pleading; Evidence; Instructions; Trial; Verdicts; Judgments; etc.
Dismissal of suit including claim for extra work, see Discontinuance, III.

§ 51. Right to sue on the contract; prerequisites.

Prematurity of action without resort to arbitration, see ante § 43.
Discharge of outstanding liens as condition precedent to action, see post §§ 52, 53.
Authority of attorney of contractor to cause notice from contractor of names of laborers and subcontractors, see Attorneys, ¶ 63.

¶ 128. When, in respect to the construction of a building the owner and a person engaged to do the plastering work have deliberately entered into a written agreement in which the certificate of the architects is made a condition precedent to a right of action, such condition must be performed, or its requirement waived.—Hanley v. Walker, 79 Mich. 607.

¶ 129. Even though no lien has been effected an action cannot be brought against the owner of land by a contractor who has built a house on such land and has furnished work and material for others, unless the statement required by the statute as to the amounts due to subcontractors, laborers, etc., has been furnished to the owner; nor can the contractor's assignee bring such action; but the neglect to serve this statement is not fatal in all cases and may be waived or overlooked where the absence of other liens is conceded or obvious.—Barnard v. McLeod, 114 Mich. 73.

¶ 130. A suit by a contractor to recover for constructing a large factory building cannot be prevented because a statement of subcontractors, laborers and materialmen is not furnished as required by Pub. Acts 1891, No. 179, § 4, it appearing that the plaintiff is not attempting to assert a lien, and that none of the laborers, subcontractors or materialmen are in good condition to assert a lien or to subject the defendant to litigation, because of the expiration of the time for such proceedings.—Walker v. Syms, 118 Mich. 183.

¶ 131. In assumpsit for the work and labor done and materials furnished on a building, where an ordinary judgment is sought and no lien is claimed, it is immaterial that no sworn statement of the amount due laborers and materialmen was furnished, especially where the time when a lien could attach had long passed when the case was tried.—Morton v. Eaton, 141 Mich. 444.

§ 52. ——Liens outstanding.

Necessity of furnishing statement of amounts due, see ante § 51.

¶ 132. The assignee of the balance due on a building contractor's claim, was entitled to maintain an action at law although when such action was commenced there were liens of record; it appearing that the time for filing liens had expired and that all the liens of those which had been so filed had also been assigned to plaintiff.—Cady v. Fair Plain Literary Ass'n, 135 Mich. 295.

¶ 133. The discharge of existing liens against premises was not a prerequisite to the commencement of suit by the assignee of the contractor's claim, where the time for filing liens had expired and plaintiff had become the owner of the liens which had been filed.—Cady v. Fair Plain Literary Ass'n, 135 Mich. 295.

§ 53. ——Waiver and estoppel to assert lien as defense.

¶ 134. The existence of claims for materials against contractors for a city sewer, at the time of his commencement of suit against the city, was not a ground for defense where prior to the suit, and after plaintiffs claimed to have completed their contract, they had received written notice from the engineer that he would decline to accept the work until certain repairs had been made, and where no reference was made in the notice to such claims although their existence and condition were known to the engineer, and where the city was protected against such claims by an indemnity bond.—Lamson v. City of Marshall, 133 Mich. 250.

§ 54. Action on quantum meruit.

By architects for value of services, see ante § 46.

Common counts against principal contractor assuming subcontractor's debt, see Assumpsit, § 24.

Common assumpsit for services outside of contract or after modification of it, see also Assumpsit, §§ 36, 37.

General rules as to implication of contract, see Implied Contracts.

¶ 135. The value not exceeding the contract price and less the damages for improper performance may be recovered on a quantum meruit, where the defendant has taken possession of a building which cannot be made to comply with the contract unless by entire demolition and which is worth less than the one contracted for.—Eaton v. Gladwell, 121 Mich. 444.

¶ 136. An instruction, in an action by a contractor on a quantum meruit for a dwelling house, that no right of action accrued until the defendant took possession of the building as it was, the failure to complete being the fault of the plaintiffs, and that the defendant was not bound to take possession until the building was completed according to contract, is properly modified by stating that the defendant was either bound to take the building, when it became apparent that the plaintiffs were not going to complete it according to the terms of the contract, or to abandon it entirely to the plaintiffs, and to have the structure removed, if he desired the use of the land.—Eaton v. Gladwell, 121 Mich. 444.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

TREATS of mutual associations for co-operative saving and loaning for the principal object of enabling members to purchase and pay for real property. It excludes Fraternal Beneficiary Associations, which see, and saving banks (see Banking), and the general law of Corporations (see Corporations).

Loans and mortgages and repayment, see post III.
General law of corporations, see Corporations.
Exemption of association from general tax laws, see Taxes, III.
Incorporation and regulation in general, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 9995-10023.

¶ 1. Laws 1887, Act No. 50, providing for the incorporation and regulation of these associations is valid and not class legislation.—People's Building & Loan Ass'n v. Billing, 104 Mich. 186.

¶ 2. The object of the statute providing for the incorporation of co-operative savings associations, How. St., chap. 119, (Laws of 1877, No. 206), is not that such associations shall be investment companies for the profit of capitalists, but to encourage habits of frugality among the laboring and industrial classes by affording them the opportunity of purchasing a certain number of shares of stock in such association and of paying therefor in regular instalments, and out of the earnings of such associations; and providing for the sale to the corporation at any time by any member, of his shares of stock, upon an equitable basis of discount.—Michigan Bldg. & Sav. Ass'n v. McDevitt, 77 Mich. 1.

§ 2. Regulations and by-laws.

By-laws as part of contract of member, see post § 6.
As to premiums, see post § 11.
Of corporations generally, see Corporations, X.

¶ 3. A by-law of a building and loan association fixing a minimum premium, could not be said to have damaged the borrowers in question who paid a larger premium, where the loans were made after competitive bidding, and where the loans made up to the time such borrowers' loans were effected, had been made by competitive bidding and at a per cent considerably above the minimum fixed by the rules.—Dailey v. Saginaw Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 133 Mich. 403.

§ 3. General powers; ultra vires.

Of corporations generally, see Corporations, XI-XIV.

¶ 4. Co-operative savings associations organized under How. St., chap. 119 (Laws of 1877, No. 206), by whatever name they adopt, are creatures of the statute, and the rights, duties and obligations of members are such as the statute prescribes. Such associations have very few of the common-law powers of corporations, and very little, or none, of the characteristics of partnerships.—Michigan Bldg. & Sav. Ass'n v. McDevitt, 77 Mich. 1.

¶ 5. The withdrawal of stock from a building and loan association incorporated under Comp. L. 1897, chapter 206, under a charter permitting a withdrawal upon the existence of certain conditions, cannot be ratified by the association, where the conditions prescribed by the charter have not been complied with, and where the right of withdrawal in any event was suspended because of the insolvency of the association.—Aldrich v. Gray, 147 Fed. 453.

¶ 6. The defense of ultra vires by a foreign building and loan association unless very clearly established will not be tolerated to defeat recovery in an action for the return of monthly payments made by a share holder under a privilege granted to him under the printed literature furnished to him with his certificate wherein the purchaser was informed in substance that he might rely upon such printed literature.—Peterson v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Ass'n, 124 Mich. 573.

¶ 7. A stockholder in a building and loan association cannot set up irregularities in the conduct of the business of the association or that the contract was ultra vires as a defense to a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage given by him to secure a loan from the association.—Menominee Loan & Bldg. Ass'n v. Lovell, 131 Mich. 449.

Fraud of officers on borrowers, see post § 14.
On winding up, see post §§ 15, 16.
General law of stock and stockholders, see Corporations, XXIV.
Exemption of stock in lieu of homestead, see Exemptions, II.

¶ 9. Where a building association induces the purchase of stock by a person who relies upon printed statements giving the right to withdraw after a stated period the instalments paid in, such statements were part of the contract and the defendant was bound thereby, though the conditions on the back of the certificate state that the articles of the associations, by-laws, terms and conditions, together with the application, are to be construed together as the contract, and they do not contain the withdrawal privilege as claimed, but the back of the certificate also stated that "the association assumes no other obligation than contained in its printed literature."—Peterson v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Ass'n, 124 Mich. 573.

¶ 10. Although it was necessary for the applicant to become a stockholder in the corporation and to agree to become bound by its by-laws and charter, one who, to secure a loan from a mutual building and loan association, subscribes for stock therein, and in good faith without being shown the by-laws takes the loan relying upon the representation of the association's secretary that the association would and did construe its by-laws as the secretary then construed them, in regard to time and basis of payment, is entitled, after seventeen quarterly payments, to have the contract construed in the light by the by-laws as they were represented to him.—Sawyer v. Menominee Loan & Bldg. Ass'n, 103 Mich. 228.

§ 7. Withdrawal, or calling in and retirement.

Foreclosure of shares pledged to association for loan, see post § 13.
Insolvency as suspending right, see post § 15.
Suit to recover withdrawal from insolvent association, see post ¶ 53.

¶ 11. A member of a co-operative savings association organized under How. St., chap. 119 (Laws of 1887, No. 206), continues a member of such association until the corporation has run its course, although he has sold his shares to such corporation, and as such member is liable for the periodic dues and fines, and contribution in case of loss.—Michigan Bldg. & Sav. Ass'n v. McDevitt, 77 Mich. 1.

¶ 12. Recovery of the amount due as a withdrawal stockholder cannot be defeated on the ground that the stock has not been transferred to plaintiff on the books of the association, where he was a member when the shares came to him, and where he has been treated throughout by the association as the owner of the shares.—Denison v. Alpena Loan & Bldg. Ass'n, 117 Mich. 98.

¶ 13. An association on changing its plans by ceasing to auction its loans for premiums bid and abandoning the issuance of stock in series, cannot, as against one who has taken a loan at a premium and paid his dues and other charges, return to the borrowers the premiums paid by them, differing in percentage; and thereby deprive him of the participation of profits made under the old system, according to which his payments had been computed, while compelling him to continue paying on the face of his loan from which the premium had been deducted.—Myers v. Alpena Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 117 Mich. 389.

¶ 14. When shares of a member of a co-operative savings association organized under How. St., chap. 119 (Laws of 1887, No. 206), are sold to the corporation at a certain discount, they thereby become liquidated; that is, the amount the seller consents to receive as his share in the final distribution becomes fixed and certain, being the amount of his shares at par value, less the discount offered in the sale. This amount he receives at once, and the shares sold are ipso facto extinguished for all purposes, except for computing "profits and losses," in the apportionment of each member's pro rata share.—Michigan Bldg. & Sav. Ass'n v. McDevitt, 77 Mich. 1.

¶ 15. How. St., § 3981f, excepting from the right to withdraw stock "held in pledge for security," does not prohibit a withdrawal merely because instalments upon the stock remain unpaid; but a stockholder who has borrowed from the corporation and pledged his stock as security cannot withdraw until he has redeemed his stock by paying the loan or unconditionally tendering payment.—Denison v. Alpena Loan & Bldg. Ass'n, 117 Mich. 98.

¶ 16. Recovery for the amount due a withdrawal stockholder cannot be denied on the ground of want of funds where it is shown that the association has on hand more than three times the sum claimed by plaintiff.—Denison v. Alpena Loan & Bldg. Ass'n, 117 Mich. 98.

¶ 17. In an action to recover the amount due plaintiff as a withdrawal stockholder the question whether he can be held personally liable for funds embezzled by the secretary while he, plaintiff, was a member of the auditing committee of the association, cannot be litigated.—Denison v. Alpena Loan & Bldg. Ass'n, 117 Mich. 98.

III. LOANS, SECURITY AND REPAYMENT.

§ 8. Validity and construction of contract.

By-laws as part of contract with construction given by parties, see ante ¶ 10.
Fraud in the contract, see post § 14.
Rescission of contract, duty of promptness, see Rescission, III.

¶ 18. Money paid in advance by a co-operative savings association to a member in full of his shares is not a loan, although so called in the by-laws of such association, but is a sale to the corporation of such shares under the statute; subject to the payment by the seller of the regular periodic dues and such additional periodic sums, not exceeding the rate of 7 per cent. per annum on the nominal amount of the shares, as may be prescribed by the by-laws, and security for the payment of these periodic sums must be taken upon unincumbered real estate.—Michigan Building & Savings Ass'n v. McDevitt, 77 Mich. 1.

¶ 19. A contract of a building and loan association with one of its members, providing for a loan of money to the member who bids for the loan and pays a premium, is not unconscionable, it being in the ordinary form of contracts made by building and loan associations, which are supposed to afford benefits to the poorer classes of society, and such associations are frequently given advantages over other corporations, such as immunity from taxation and usury laws.—Phelps v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 121 Mich. 343.

§ 9. ——Loans by foreign associations.

Effect of payments made within Michigan, see ante ¶ 8.
Place of contract for purpose of determining what law governs, see Conflict of Laws, II.

¶ 20. A contract made by a building and loan association which had already substantially ceased to do business within the state by a failure to comply with Pub. Acts 1895, Act No. 269, was void, and no action could be maintained upon such contract (Comp. L. 1897, § 10467).—Hoskins v. Rochester Savings & Loan Ass'n, 133 Mich. 505.

¶ 21. Where a note and mortgage was executed by residents of this state to a savings, loan and building association, organized under the laws of a foreign state, through its local representative, on property located here, and the payments were to be made to such local agent, although the local board was not expressly provided for in the articles of association of the building and loan company, nevertheless the contract is a Michigan contract and governed by our laws.—Cobe v. Summers, 143 Mich. 117.

§ 10. Awarding loans; bidding.

Premiums and computation of same, and rules as to minimum receivable, see post § 11.
Sale of shares as distinguished from loan, see ante ¶ 18.
Validity of bid for premiums payable by instalments at fixed per cent, see post ¶ 29.
Evidence as to competition in bidding, see post ¶ 31.

§ 11. Rate of interest and premiums.

Effect of by-laws fixing minimum, see also ante § 2.

Deduction of premiums on early repayment, see post § 12.
Computation of premium instalments to accrue on foreclosure, see post ¶ 42.
General law of usury, see Usury.

¶ 22. The contention that the premium should have been computed upon the amount of money received, and not on the face of the loan, is untenable, where the borrower understands in advance that the latter mode of computation is to be followed, and accepts the money and executes the securities after the premium has been so computed, and the amount thereof deducted from the face of the loan.—People's Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Billing, 104 Mich. 186.

¶ 23. The receipt or retention by the association of a premium out of the loan is not a bank discount in excess of the powers of the corporation under Laws 1887, Act No. 50, § 8, which provides that "the board of directors shall hold such stated meetings as may be provided by the by-laws, at which the money in the treasury, if more than the amount fixed by the by-laws as the full value of a share, shall be offered for loan in open meeting, and the stockholder who shall bid the highest premium for the preference or priority of loan shall be entitled to receive a loan of not more than the amount fixed by the by-laws as the full value of a share of stock (less the premium bid) for each share of stock held by said stockholder."—People's Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Billing, 104 Mich. 186.

¶ 24. A rule of an association requiring a bid of twenty per cent minimum premium for money violates How. St., § 3981h, which provides that the money to be loaned shall be offered for loan in open meeting, and that the stockholders who shall bid the highest premium for the preference or priority of loan shall be entitled to receive a loan for the amount stated in the by-laws.—Myers v. Alpena Loan & Bldg. Ass'n, 117 Mich. 389.

¶ 25. To entitle a building and loan association to charge more than the rate of interest fixed by the general law of the state, it must comply strictly with the statute whereunder it is organized.—Myers v. Alpena Loan & Bldg. Ass'n, 117 Mich. 389.

¶ 26. A contract with a member of a building and loan association providing for the purchase of stock payable monthly, and a loan of money made to a member at six per cent interest, there being a bid for the loan, and the total amount loaned including the premium paid for the loan, is not usurious.—Phelps v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 121 Mich. 343.

¶ 27. Where a mortgage to a New York building and loan association, upon lands in Michigan, would be usurious under Comp. L. 1897, § 4856, relating to usury, it is not saved by the provisions of the Building and Loan Association Act, Comp. L. 1897, § 7584, providing that neither premium, fines nor interest on premiums accruing under the act shall be deemed usurious, as that act relates only to corporations organized in Michigan thereunder.—National Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Burch, 124 Mich. 57.

¶ 28. Comp. L. 1897, § 7584, governing building and loan associations and providing that premiums, fines or interest on premiums shall not be considered as making the contracts usurious, does not permit the interest rate on a loan to be in excess of that limited by statute and if it is so fixed the contract is usurious.—Estey v. Capitol Inv. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 131 Mich. 502.

¶ 29. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 7581, governing building and loan associations and providing that premiums bid on loans may be paid in one lump sum or in instalments, the premium need not be bid in a specific sum but may be in the form of a stated per cent to be paid on the loan.—Estey v. Capitol Inv. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 131 Mich. 502.

¶ 30. A contract with a building and loan association for a loan, is not usurious though the borrower bid the loan at 25%, where the bid was voluntary and the evidence failed to show that the association would not consider bids at a lower rate.—Menominee Loan & Bldg. Ass'n v. Lovell, 131 Mich. 449.

¶ 31. Testimony by a borrower that prior to a meeting of a building and loan association he was informed by the secretary that bids under 26½% would not be accepted and that he bid 26½% with no competitors, and evidence of the minutes of the meeting showing no competition is sufficient though contradicted by defendant association, to show a violation of the law requiring competitive bidding.—Stoddard v. Saginaw Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 138 Mich. 73.

¶ 32. A Minnesota contract between a building and loan association and one of its members is not usurious under the Minnesota statutes providing that premiums for loans made by an association shall not be considered or treated as interest.—Phelps v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 121 Mich. 343.

¶ 33. A contract whereby a person subscribes for shares in a building and loan association, agreeing to pay for the same monthly, also paying a membership fee, and borrowing money, paying a large premium for the privilege of obtaining the loan, the entire amount bearing interest at 6 per cent, is not usurious, on the ground that the stock subscription and loan are one transaction, even though the laws of the foreign state where the contract is made are not proven.—Russell v. Pierce, 121 Mich. 208.

¶ 34. A contract, whereby a note and mortgage were given by residents of Michigan on property in this state to secure a loan to a building and loan company organized in another state in which more than the legal rate of interest was provided, and where there is no record in the proceedings of the company that the by-laws requiring the making of competitive bids which shall be opened at specified times and notice when they are opened sent to the applicant, have been complied with, is usurious where it is shown that the parties have paid more than the legal (6%) rate of interest on the loan.—Cobe v. Summers, 143 Mich. 117.

¶ 35. Building and loan associations are not entitled to the benefits and immunities conferred upon them by statute without complying with the provisions of such statutes; and where therefore a borrower was led to believe that in order to procure a loan he must bid a premium, which was done by the secretary on his behalf, knowing there was more money to loan than there were applicants therefor, and where the competitive bidding was not in fact competitive as required by the statute, a loan made in excess of the legal rate of interest will be deemed usurious.—Bechtel v. Saginaw Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 143 Mich. 599.

¶ 36. A building and loan association mortgage which bears interest at the highest legal rate is not usurious because of the fact that it provides that the borrower shall pay any tax assessed upon the mortgage, such provision, in view of Comp. Laws 1915, § 10011, which exempts such mortgages from taxation, being mere surplusage.—Flax v. Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n of Bay County, 198 Mich. 676.

§ 12. Dues and application of payments; deductions.

Necessity of payment in order to withdraw stock pledged to association, see ante ¶ 15.

Payments and deductions made as recognition of method of computing premiums, see ante ¶ 22.

Among members on winding up, see post § 16.

On foreclosure by receiver, see also post ¶¶ 50, 51.

¶ 37. Under the statute (Laws 1887, Act No. 50, § 10), which provides that in the event of the repayment of a loan by a borrower before the expiration of the eighth year after the organization of the association, or the date of issue of the series of stock in association on which the loan may have been made, there shall be refunded to such borrower one-eighth of the premium paid for every year of the said eight years then unexpired, a borrower has no right to a deduction on account of premium paid, except in case of a voluntary payment of his debt before maturity.—People's Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Billing, 104 Mich. 186.

¶ 38. Where the contract for a loan from a building and loan association is usurious, all sums paid thereon whether as principal or as interest should be applied on the principal debt and recovery had only for the balance, since Comp. L. 1897, §§ 4857, 4858, provide that the debtor shall not be compelled to pay interest and that the interest shall be void.—Estey v. Capitol Inv. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 131 Mich. 502.

§ 13. Mortgages and foreclosure.

In general, see Mortgages; Foreclosure of Mortgages.

Defense of ultra vires, see ante § 3.

Exemptions of mortgages from taxation, see Taxes, XIV.

¶ 39. The fact that, on making a loan, the joint obligation of the member to whom the loan is made, and another, who is not a member, is taken, or that the loan is secured by a mortgage executed by a third person, will not open the defense of ultra vires, under Laws 1887, Act No. 50, § 8, which provides that "no loan shall be made by said corporation except to its own members, nor in any sum in excess of the amount of stock held by such members borrowing."—People's Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Billing, 104 Mich. 186.

¶ 40. The bond given by a member of a building and loan association, on taking a loan from the association, provided that, in case of default in its conditions, the shares of stock held by the member, which were transferred as collateral to the bond, might be declared forfeited to the association as for non-payment of dues, and should thereupon revert to the association as forfeited stock, and the withdrawal value thereof, at the option of the association, might be applied to the satisfaction of the indebtedness secured by the bond. Held, that no formal foreclosure is necessary for the purpose of making such application; that it is contemplated that the payments on the stock, together with its earnings, shall remain in the hands of the association, and be applied, without foreclosure, to the reduction of the claim—at least, at the option of the association.—People's Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Billing, 104 Mich. 186.

¶ 41. A defendant in a suit by a building and loan association to foreclose a mortgage cannot defend on the ground that he is not in default where all stockholders, including the defendant, acquiesced in a plan of liquidation and the defendant stopped payments on his stock; defendant was bound to make his election when he learned of the plan of liquidation.—Home Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Mason, 127 Mich. 676.

¶ 42. Where an association had abandoned the premium system of making loans, substituting a flat rate of 8 per cent, and against the right of a borrowing member had readjusted outstanding loans by returning premiums and charging 8 per cent on the loans but crediting only 6 per cent on dues paid in, it was proper on computing the balance due on the mortgage to take 8 per cent monthly on the exact amount received by him, adding it to the principal, then deducting the monthly payment to establish a new principal on which the next month's interest should be computed, and so on.—Myers v. Alpena Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 117 Mich. 389.

¶ 43. A bill to foreclose a mortgage by a building and loan association showing that the stock of the association could not be paid in full, is sufficient to show insolvency of the association as under its plan of association the stock could not be matured.—Home Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Mason, 127 Mich. 676.

¶ 44. In a suit to foreclose a building and loan association mortgage against a stockholder, where the association is not financially able to mature its stock, it is proper to treat it as a suit for an accounting and to decree that the defendant pay the amount of the loan plus interest less the sums paid by the defendant as interest and premium but not allowing payments on stock to reduce the mortgage debt.—Home Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Mason, 127 Mich. 676.

¶ 45. There is no more necessity for an accounting on the foreclosure of a building and loan mortgage than in any other case where money is borrowed and partial payments made from time to time.—Flax v. Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n of Bay County, 198 Mich. 676.

§ 14. Fraud upon members.

Withdrawal or retirement of issue as inequity to borrowers, see ante ¶ 13.
Unconscionableness of contract, see ante ¶ 19.
Right to preference in insolvency, see post ¶ 52.

¶ 46. The borrower of a building and loan association is not on an equal plane with the officers of the association so as to make representations by them as to the amount of interest required and the advantages of making a loan with them, mere statements of opinion and not affecting the validity of the transaction.—Stoddard v. Saginaw Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 138 Mich. 73.

¶ 47. A lawyer who becomes a member of a building and loan association, and obtains stock in such association, and who, before giving a mortgage, receives applications and other papers describing the scheme of business and terms of borrowing money, is chargeable with notice that amounts paid for monthly dues are payments upon the stock, especially when the notice given upon his application for loan expressly states that the borrower is to pay interest on the loan and make his monthly payments on the stock; and accordingly he cannot rely on representations to the contrary.—Phelps v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 121 Mich. 343.

¶ 48. Fraudulent representations by an officer of a building and loan association in inducing a loan are made out by testimony by the borrower that he was importuned to borrow the money upon the promise that it would cost not more than 7%, contradicted by testimony of the association but supported in part by a printed advertising circular and evidence that the bidding on the loan was not competitive and that a certain minimum price for the loan was fixed by the directors.—Stoddard v. Saginaw Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 138 Mich. 73.

IV. INSOLVENCY AND WINDING UP.

Liquidation by agreement as putting loans in default, see ante ¶ 41.
Agreement to protect impaired assets as offensive to public policy, see Contracts, IV, B.
Of corporations generally, see Corporations, XXIII.

¶ 49. Where the charter of a building and loan association organized under Comp. L. 1897, chapter 206, provides that any stockholder wishing to withdraw from the corporation shall have the power to do so upon giving 30 days' notice in writing and subject to certain other conditions, any right of withdrawal is suspended by the insolvency of the association.—Aldrich v. Gray, 147 F. 453.

§ 16. Application of assets; preferences.

Of payments by borrowers on loans and premiums, see ante § 12.

¶ 50. Payments made by a member of a building and loan association, such as a payment of dues on stock, interest, or premiums, will not be applied on the mortgage debt, to work an extinguishment of the mortgage, when foreclosure is sought by a receiver of the insolvent association.—Russell v. Pierce, 121 Mich. 208.

¶ 51. A member of a building and loan association is not entitled to have amounts paid as stock dues applied to the payment of a mortgage, when the association becomes insolvent, as such application would operate to make the member a preferred creditor, to the disadvantage and injury of other stockholders.—Phelps v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 121 Mich. 843.

¶ 52. A stockholder in a building and loan association who claims to have been defrauded by a contract entered into, has no right of preference over other stockholders, when the association becomes insolvent.—Phelps v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 121 Mich. 843.

§ 17. Actions and suits.

By or against corporations in general, see Corporations, XIX.

¶ 53. The receiver of an insolvent association is the proper party complainant to a suit against a stockholder to recover the value of stock illegally withdrawn while the association was insolvent and contrary to the charter of the association.—Aldrich v. Gray, 147 F. 453.

§ 18. Of foreign associations.

¶ 54. The requirements of the General Building Association Act as amended in 1895, relating to preference given to local creditors and stockholders of a foreign association as to state assets upon the revocation of its authority to do business in the state and the appointment of a receiver, are complied with, so far as valid, where the whole corporation is being wound up in the state of its incorporation by the collection of local assets by a local receiver and the direction to him to turn the same over to the foreign assignee, less the cost of collection, on the latter's giving a sufficient bond to secure the local stockholders their pro rata of the total assets.—Maynard v. Granite State Provident Ass'n, 92 Fed. 435.

The proprietor of a grain elevator is not liable for injuries to a customer occasioned by the giving way of a railing about an elevated platform, even though he had knowledge of its defective condition, where the customer, at the time of the accident, was, without invitation, leaning against it for support, a use for which it was not designed and for which because of recent weakening it was not fitted.—Kinney v. Omsted, 113 Mich. 96.

¶ 4. Under the principle that an occupier of premises is required to use reasonable care to protect one doing business with him on those premises by his invitation against unusual danger which he knows or ought to know about, such occupier is responsible for defects not known to him, if due diligence on his part would have discovered and remedied them.—McIntyre v. Pfaudler Vacuum Fermentation Co., 133 Mich. 552.

¶ 5. In an action for personal injuries to a driver caused by the giving away of a platform scale under a load of steel being hauled by a teaming company, the duty of inspection of a platform scale is imposed upon either the defendant owner of the scale or the party using it and employing the teaming company where the relationship of the two defendants is not clear by the evidence.—McIntyre v. Detroit Safe Co., 129 Mich. 385.

¶ 6. Where merchants invite their customers to walk over their floors in front of their counters for the purpose of examining their goods and making purchases, such customers have a right to rely upon the safety of the floors.—Brown v. Stevens, 136 Mich. 311.

¶ 7. The owner of a building owes no common law duty to trespassers to maintain guards about an elevator shaft.—Flanagan v. Sanders, 138 Mich. 253.

¶ 8. Section 714 of the Detroit charter (1893), requiring elevator shafts to be protected by substantial railing and automatic trap doors, does not impose a duty so as to create a liability for injuries to trespassers caused by the absence of appliances mentioned.—Flanagan v. Sanders, 138 Mich. 253.

¶ 9. A customer who, without invitation or permission, attempts to enter a freight elevator located in the back part of a store, and designed for freight and the use of employees only, and who is injured by falling down the shaft, cannot recover for his injuries against the proprietor.—Bennett v. Butterfield, 112 Mich. 96.

¶ 10. The owner of a freight elevator who permits or invites another person to ride thereon does not guarantee that it is equipped with the most approved appliances in use on passenger elevators, and is not liable for an injury caused by the fall of the elevator if he has provided appliances in common use in freight elevators, and has exercised reasonable care in inspecting, repairing, and managing it.—Hall v. Murdock, 114 Mich. 233.

¶ 10a. The mere fact that an operator of a freight elevator, after the loading of beer from a brewery wagon by employees of a brewery company, receives instructions to go ahead from the superior of two employees of the brewery company, who is a passenger and has nothing to do with the operation of the elevator, does not relieve him from the duty of exercising care in starting the elevator so as not to injure the other employee who attempts to get on the elevator.—Sikora v. Fellowcraft Club, 195 Mich. 49.

¶ 11. The mere fact that the occupants of a business block occasionally ride upon a freight elevator, which has nothing in its construction or appearance to indicate that it was intended for the conveyance of passengers, does not impose upon the proprietor the duty to equip it with safety appliances with the same care that would be required in the case of a passenger elevator.—Hall v. Murdock, 114 Mich. 233.

¶ 12. The proprietor of a freight elevator, who ought to have known of a defect in the cable rendering it dangerous for use, is not relieved from liability for an injury to one whom he invited to ride, by the mere fact that he also was riding at the time of the injury, and exercised the same care for the passenger's safety that he did for his own.—Hall v. Murdock, 114 Mich. 233.

¶ 13. Shopkeepers are entitled to keep and use a trap door in the floor of their shop, subject to the duty on their part to guard it properly so as to avoid injury to those (other than employees about the premises or persons having notice of the existence of such door) who may lawfully, upon their express or implied invitation, and upon their business, enter the part of the shop where it is located.—Pelton v. Schmidt, 104 Mich. 345.

¶ 14. To leave unguarded a hatchway-opening in the floor of a store, such hatchway being near a door freely used by the public, and there being no one stationed at the opening to give warning, is negligence.—Engel v. Smith, 82 Mich. 1.

¶ 15. Under ordinary circumstances an open door and a stationary elevator constitute an invitation to all persons desiring to do so to enter or leave at will.—Roulo v. Minot, 132 Mich. 317.

¶ 15a. The pushing or jostling of the conductor of a passenger elevator by a third person, causing the elevator to drop and injure a passenger, does not constitute negligence either of the conductor or of the owner of the building.—Elsey v. J. L. Hudson Co., 189 Mich. 135.

¶ 16. The owner of a factory building in which plaintiff workman's master was doing work under a contract owes no duty to such workman to keep a hatchway or shaft through a floor of the building guarded, where the workman's duties do not call him near it and where his presence there was due to his following his foreman for instructions, and the foreman had no duties that called him there.—Hutchinson v. Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Co., 141 Mich. 346.

¶ 17. The projection of the brass nose pieces which fastened the rubber strips on the stairs of a hotel from one-sixteenth to three-eighths of an inch above the edge of such strips, cannot be said as matter of law not to be an actionable defect, in an action for injuries from a fall caused by tripping on such projections.—Braman v. Stewart, 145 Mich. 548.

¶ 18. Defendant theatre owner gave permission to plaintiff and other musicians to occupy gratis the balcony in front of said theatre for the purpose of giving public evening concerts. The balcony was reached by means of the gallery entrance and stairs. After the concert was over plaintiff descended the steps and, while attempting to cross to the side where the railing was, lost his balance, fell and was injured. The sole negligence charged was the failure of defendant properly to light said stairs. Held, under the circumstances, defendant owed no duty to light same.—Gleich v. Detroit Free Press, 169 Mich. 247.

Liability for injuries to passengers and persons other than employees through negligent maintenance or operation of elevators, see note. 5 N. C. C. A. 505-523; 9 N. C. C. A. 76-84.

Liability of owner of building for injuries to pedestrians on highway, see Highways, XII, D.

¶ 19. A construction company which is engaged in construction work in a power plant is not liable to an employee, who is a mere licensee on the premises during the dinner hour, for injuries sustained by such employee during the dinner hour due to a fall caused by a defective ladder on the premises while such employee was ascending such ladder to get upon a boiler to eat his dinner, unless the construction company is so far in control of the plant that its possession may be considered as a joint one with that of the operating company.—Boner v. Eastern Michigan Power Co., 193 Mich. 629.

¶ 20. The operator of a power plant which has no notice or knowledge of a defect in a ladder on the premises during the course of construction work by a construction company is not liable for injuries to a mere licensee and employee of such construction company due to a fall because of such defective ladder, where such ladder had been purchased of a reputable manufacturer and placed in position by the owner of the premises from whom the operating company had obtained possession.—Boner v. Eastern Michigan Power Co., 193 Mich. 629.

¶ 22. One injured by the falling of a building in process of construction may join in one action for damages the parties interested in the land by contract or lease, the owners of the fee, the agents supervising the erection, the architects, and the contractors.—McBride v. Scott, 125 Mich. 517.

§ 7. Contributory negligence.

Evidence, instructions and jury questions as to, see post §§ 10-14.

¶ 22a. One, who by arrangement with the owners of a planing mill has the right to carry on his own work therein and who knows the manner in which their business is carried on, cannot recover for an accidental injury resulting from being hit by timber thrown from an upper story by the owner's servant in the course of his work.—Allen v. Johnston, 76 Mich. 31.

¶ 23. A teamster who, having delivered goods at the back door of defendant's store, goes, without an express or implied invitation, towards a desk in the middle of the store to get a receipt, and falls through a trap door into the cellar, cannot recover for the consequent injury.—Pelton v. Schmidt, 97 Mich. 231.

¶ 24. An applicant for work on the first floor of a manufacturing establishment who is directed by the watchman to the place where a light is burning in the toolroom where he expects to find the foreman, and, while going unattended towards the light and looking ahead falls into an unguarded pit occasioned by the preparation of a foundation for a heavy and unusual type of press, is not guilty of negligence, as a matter of law.—Faulkner v. Parish Mfg. Co., 201 Mich. 182.

¶ 25. Where an employee of the defendant in delivering plaster at a building in course of construction, piled five tons thereof in one place, and the great weight caused an accident, his employer is not relieved from liability by reason of the fact that the contractor did not discover and remove the danger between the time of delivery and the occurrence of the accident.—Schneider v. C. H. Little Co., 184 Mich. 315.

¶ 26. Persons who stray about other people's factories at their own will must look out for their own safety, since there are always places in such premises which, whether generally safe or not, are liable to be unsafe at times for any one who is not acquainted with them.—Bedell v. Berkey, 76 Mich. 435.

§ 8. ——In respect of elevators, stairways and openings.

Jury questions and instructions, see post §§ 12-14.

¶ 27. One who in broad daylight heedlessly steps under a descending elevator is guilty of contributory negligence.—Hutchins v. Priestley Exp. Wagon & Sleigh Co., 61 Mich. 252.

¶ 28. No one has any right to endanger himself, or to disturb other people's arrangements, by moving around in the dark in a strange room, into which he has entered of his own accord and without direction, and if hurt by falling into an opening while so doing, he is himself responsible for his own misfortune.—Bedell v. Berkey, 76 Mich. 435.

¶ 29. Plaintiff could not recover for injuries from falling down an unguarded elevator shaft in defendant's factory, where he entered such premises in the day time by an entrance with which he was not familiar, to deliver a machine, and did not first seek instructions from defendant as to where such delivery should be made, and where there was sufficient light in the room to reveal the larger objects therein; since a stranger coming on business or otherwise, has no right to choose for himself his means of ingress and egress, and to determine where bulky articles shall be unloaded, or to unload them without inquiry and notice.—Bedell v. Berkey, 76 Mich. 435.

¶ 30. A customer with defective hearing and eyesight and of impaired intellect, who was directed to the rear part of the store in question for the purchase he intended making, and in doing so fell into an opening left by an open trap door around which others were standing, was not guilty of contributory negligence even though he might have seen the opening had he looked, and warning was given to him in an ordinary voice that the trapdoor was open and to look out, as under the circumstances and in view of plaintiff's disabilities it was the duty of the storekeepers to do something more than to tell him in an ordinary tone of voice to look out for the trap door.—Brown v. Stevens, 136 Mich. 311.

¶ 31. Plaintiff on a visit to defendants tenement flat borrowed a key to a closet, and without inquiry as to where the closet was located, erroneously assumed he would find one on the fourth floor, in the same relative position as one which he had previously used on the lower floor. He opened the door and fell through a shaft to the basement, receiving injuries. Held, he was guilty of contributory negligence barring a recovery. —Steger v. Immen, 157 Mich. 494.

¶ 32. Plaintiff in shopping in defendant's store was invited by a clerk to the back part of the store, and in passing beyond the end of a counter fell down a stairway. The evidence showed that there was plenty of light; that the stairway was in plain sight; and that the accident was due to plaintiff's inattention. Held, plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.—Larned v. Vanderlinde, 165 Mich. 464.

¶ 33. Plaintiff musician, in ascending the gallery stairs of defendant's theatre for the purpose of reaching the balcony in front of some to assist in giving a public evening concert, noticed that said stairs were not lighted and also noted their construction and the position of the rail. He was affected with a disease of the eyes making it difficult for them to adjust themselves readily to sudden changes of light. On going downstairs after the concert, he lost his balance, fell and was injured. Held, he was precluded from recovery on the ground of contributory negligence in failing to ask for more light, or for assistance, and in failing to take hold of the handrail in starting down said stairs.—Gleich v. Detroit Free Press, 169 Mich. 247.

¶ 34. Where the plaintiff, a teamster, sent to get a load of hops, was injured by falling into an elevator shaft in a warehouse owned by defendant, while loading bales of hops onto his wagon as lowered by the elevator from an upper story, held, that no negligence could be imputed to the defendant or its servants, where the injury resulted from the negligence of the plaintiff or his companion, or both, or from pure accident, and a verdict should have been directed for the defendant.—Moll v. Riverside Storage and Cartage Co., 82 Mich. 389.

¶ 35. Defendants were proprietors of a five-story building, and had provided, as a conveyance by which persons could reach the upper floors, a passenger elevator, which started from the street floor, while a freight elevator ran from the basement to the upper floors. Plaintiff, who was an agent for the sale of lubricating oil, being desirous of seeing the defendants' engineer, went from the street floor, via a stairway, to the basement, and, upon finding that the engineer was upon the fifth floor, without any invitation so to do, took passage on the freight elevator, and was injured. Held, that the invitation from defendants to take the passenger elevator was express; that the situation negatived any possible inference of an invitation to take the freight elevator; and that the trial court did not err in directing a verdict for defendants.—Amerine v. Porteous, 105 Mich. 347.

§ 9. Pleading duty and negligence.

Joinder of parties for injury by falling of a building during construction, see ante ¶ 22.

General law of procedure and evidence, see topics like Evidence; Pleading; etc.

¶ 37. In an action for personal injuries sustained in a falling building, where, while the declaration does not show very clearly the respective shares owned by the defendants, it does show that they owned the premises and proposed to erect a building thereon and then in detail describes what was done and with what result, it will be sustained on demurrer.—McBride v. Scott, 125 Mich. 517.

¶ 38. In an action for personal injuries a declaration which is not clear or well drawn will be sustained on demurrer urging that plaintiff is alleged to be dead, where it cannot be read without reaching the conclusion that what the pleader meant was that, when the roof and walls of a building fell in, many were killed, some were wounded including the plaintiff, who at that time and from the same cause received the injuries thereafter described.—McBride v. Scott, 125 Mich. 517.

§ 10. Evidence as to negligence and duty.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

Conclusion or fact as to whether one had any apprehensions of danger, see Evidence, VI, A.

¶ 39. In an action for injuries received from falling through an unguarded trapdoor in the floor of defendant's store, a part of which store was used as a postoffice, evidence that the people were in the habit of waiting about the trap door for their mail, and of the extent to which the part of the store opposite the postoffice was used by the public, was admissible on the issue of negligence.—Engel v. Smith, 82 Mich. 1.

¶ 40. In an action for negligence by one lawfully upon the premises where the injury complained of resulted from the negligence of defendant's employees in not properly guarding an open trap door which they were using, it is not error to exclude testimony showing instructions from defendants so to guard it.—Engel v. Smith, 82 Mich. 1.

¶ 41. In an action by a tenant against a landlord for personal injury alleged to have been caused by a defective stairway, it is not error to admit testimony of successive witnesses as to the condition of the stairway from the time of the accident to 10 or 12 days thereafter, the stairway being one but little used.—Arndt v. Bourke, 120 Mich. 268.

¶ 42. In an action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while on defendant's premises and weighing a load consigned to the defendant, on certain scales which were used in common by defendant and another company, the question of the ownership of the scales was immaterial, as defendant owed plaintiff the obligation which an occupier of premises owes to one doing business with him on those premises by his invitation, to prevent damage from unusual danger of which he knows or ought to know.—McIntyre v. Pfaudler Vacuum Fermentation Co., 133 Mich. 552.

¶ 42a. In an action against the tenant of a building having sole charge of a freight elevator operated by its own employee, subject only to the occasional use by tenants of lower floors, for the death of an employee of a brewery company engaged in delivering beer to the tenant and due to the alleged negligence of the elevator man in starting the elevator before decedent was safely upon it, and in which the issue was whether the decedent was rightfully upon the elevator when injured, or whether he had been directed to stay with the team by the one in charge of the delivery, held that evidence of such superior as to telling the operator to "let it go," after the superior was inside and after the operator had heard the superior direct decedent to stay with the team was admissible as bearing upon the negligence of the operator.—Sikora v. Fellowcraft Club, 189 Mich. 235.

§ 11. ——Sufficiency of evidence.

¶ 43. In an action against the owner of a building, the contractor and a materialman, to recover damages for the death of a carpenter due to the collapse of the portion of a reinforced concrete garage upon which deceased was employed, evidence held to show that the second floor was not constructed according to the plans and specifications.—Payne v. Everham, 197 Mich. 181.

¶ 44. In an action by a carpenter against the owner of a new building to recover damages for personal injuries due to the falling of a scaffold because of the absence of a bolt in a beam in the steel framework, which was constructed by an independent contractor, and on which the platform was put preparatory to erecting the cupola on top of the building, evidence held sufficient to go to the jury on the question whether a foreman in charge of the carpenters had direct notice of the defect in the steel work so as to bind defendant.—Porth v. Cadillac Motor Car Co., 198 Mich. 501.

¶ 45. In an action for personal injuries, testimony that the plaintiff, a business visitor, stepped into an open elevator shaft when the defendant opened the gate and called "elevator" is sufficient to go to the jury on the question of negligence and contributory negligence.—Burgess v. Stowe, 134 Mich. 204.

¶ 46. A general verdict for plaintiff in an action for injuries received from an elevator in defendant's store, and a special finding that the elevator came to a stop at the second floor and was started again by some person other than plaintiff, to plaintiff's injury, are supported by the evidence, where it is shown that one of defendant's clerks, intending to send plaintiff to third floor, put him upon such elevator and told him to get off where it stopped, that it stopped at the second floor, that plaintiff thereupon started to leave the elevator, that it started again and injured plaintiff as alleged; and where the whole record disclosed that the elevator could not start automatically from a position of rest but required human intervention to put it in operation.—Moerman v. Clark-Rutka-Weaver Co., 145 Mich. 540.

¶ 47. There is sufficient evidence for submitting the case to the jury, in an action for injuries received from a fall caused by defective stairs of defendant's hotel, where there is evidence that such defect existed, and where the proprietor of such hotel and her servant testified that they used such stairs many times daily and that if there had been such defect they would have noticed it.—Braman v. Stewart, 145 Mich. 548.

§ 12. Questions of law and fact as to negligence.

Duty of owner of building to guard openings near walk, see also Negligence, II, C.

¶ 48. In an action for an injury received from falling through a trap door in defendant's shop, plaintiff, who was a truckman delivering goods for his employer to defendants, testified he had been instructed by defendants to deliver goods at the back door of the shop, and that it had been his custom to pass through the shop to get his receipts. Held, that if defendants permitted this practice to grow up without protest, so that it became the usual course of dealing, plaintiff was justified in supposing that it was expected that he should so enter the shop, and, as the testimony was conflicting on this branch of the case, the question was properly left to the jury.—Pelton v. Schmidt, 104 Mich. 345.

¶ 49. In an action by one who was injured by the falling of an elevator, due to the breaking of the cable, evidence that the cable was considerably worn when purchased for use in the elevator in question, that it had been in use there for two years, and that the proprietor had made statements to the effect that the cable was worn out, and that he would have to get a new one, was sufficient to go to the jury on the question of the proprietor's negligence.—Hall v. Murdock, 114 Mich. 233.

¶ 50. Where a woman sued jointly with her husband by a person injured by the falling of a freight elevator on premises of which she was owner claimed that she was not liable because her husband, the owner of a life interest in the premises, put in the elevator and controlled the property, and where, when called as a witness for plaintiff, she testified that after the property was conveyed to her her husband was to have charge of the business and collect the rents, but was not to have the rents, and where, further, when cross-examined by her own counsel, she testified she was mistaken in giving such testimony, and that the rents belonged to her husband, held, that in view of her contradictory statements the question of her liability was properly submitted to the jury.—Hall v. Murdock, 114 Mich. 233.

¶ 51. A directed verdict for the defendant is erroneous where the evidence shows that the plaintiff's intestate, a business visitor, fell through an unprotected elevator shaft and was killed, there being evidence to show that the passageway was poorly lighted and that the deceased was 63 years old and wore glasses and notwithstanding testimony of several witnesses that the open shaft could be plainly seen.—McCrum v. Weil & Co., 125 Mich. 297.

¶ 52. Plaintiff entered an elevator which had two doors, and asked to be let off at a certain office, which was in fact on the 12th floor though plaintiff did not know where it was. Upon reaching the ninth floor the elevator stopped and the doors were opened to let on another passenger. Not seeing the other passenger, plaintiff decided that it was his floor and started out when the elevator started up and the operator started to close the door. Plaintiff was caught in the door and before the elevator could be stopped, was crushed against the overhead framework. Held that the questions of negligence and of contributory negligence were for the jury.—Roulo v. Minot, 132 Mich. 317.

¶ 53. In an action by an employee of an owner of a moving van against a warehouse owner to recover for personal injuries sustained by falling into an aperture between an elevator platform and the floor in the building while assisting his employer in removing a box from the platform preparatory to carrying it to the van, where it appeared that a rule had been laid down by the warehouse foreman that outsiders should not be permitted to come into the warehouse, that one of the defendant's checkers was in charge of the movement of the goods, in the absence of other employees at lunch at noontime, when the accident occurred, that plaintiff and his employer were invited on the premises to assist in the removal of the goods, and that plaintiff and his employer did not know of such rule, held that it was a question for the jury whether defendant's checker had the apparent authority which he exercised so as not to constitute plaintiff a trespasser.—Haines v. Leonard Warehouses, 199 Mich. 580.

¶ 54. Whether it was negligence for an employee of the defendant in delivering bags of plaster at a building in course of erection, to pile five tons of plaster in one place after being warned not to do so, and which caused an injury to a person employed on the building, is a question for the jury.—Schneider v. C. H. Little Co., 184 Mich. 315.

¶ 55. The question of the negligence of the defendant bank is for the jury, where a two-year-old child who accompanied its mother on a business trip to a bank, was injured by the fall of a large unsecured sign resting on the inside ledge of a window, which another child pulled over as he stood on tip-toes with his hands on the top of the sign, endeavoring to look over it.—Harris v. Royal Oak Sav. Bank, 187 Mich. 407.

¶ 56. In an action for personal injuries to a driver caused by the giving away of a platform scale under a load of steel being hauled by a teaming company, on conflicting evidence as to the condition of the timbers of the scale-pit, and the date and extent of repairs, the question of negligence of the defendant in not making inspection is erroneously taken from the jury.—McIntyre v. Detroit Safe Co., 129 Mich. 385.

¶ 57. In an action for personal injuries to a driver caused by the giving away of a platform scale under a load of steel being hauled by a teaming company, the question of whether or not the scales were overloaded or improperly loaded is for the jury, where the load was testified to have been within capacity if rightly loaded and placed on the scale, which was disputed.—McIntyre v. Detroit Safe Co., 129 Mich. 385.

¶ 58. The question of negligence was properly left to the jury in an action for personal injuries sustained by a traveler on a sidewalk as the result of glass falling from a building, where there was testimony that there was a broken window 50 or 60 feet from the ground in such building which stood back a few feet from the street, that a window or pane of glass was heard to rattle and that triangular pieces of glass were seen to fall to the sidewalk immediately before the accident to plaintiff.—Detzur v. B. Stroh Brewing Co., 119 Mich. 282.

¶ 59. In an action against the owner of a building, the contractor, and a materialman to recover damages for the negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate by the collapse, while under construction, of a portion of the floor of a reinforced concrete garage upon which deceased was employed as carpenter in making and setting up forms and shoring, used in connection with concrete work, held, on conflicting evidence that it was a question for the jury whether the design of the concrete beams furnished by the materialman were insufficient, and the floor likely to collapse.—Bayne v. Everham, 197 Mich. 181.

¶ 59a. In an action against the tenant of a building having sole charge of a freight elevator operated by its own employee for the death of an employee of a brewery company engaged with his superior in delivering beer to the tenant, due to the starting of the elevator before deceased was safely upon it, and in which the evidence was conflicting as to whether or not deceased had been told by his superior to stay with the team, and it appeared that the operator and the superior had their backs turned to the door of the elevator when it started and that the operator started the elevator upon the superior telling him to go ahead, held that it was a question for the jury whether defendant was guilty of negligence.—Sikora v. Fellowcraft Club, 195 Mich. 49.

¶ 59b. In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained as a result of an elevator starting before a passenger got off, held that the question of negligence of defendant was properly left to the jury.—Rogers v. Ford, 188 Mich. 62.

§ 13. ——As to contributory negligence.

¶ 60. Plaintiff was injured by falling through an unguarded hatchway in the floor of defendant's store, having entered the store through a door near the hatchway without stopping to see whether the hatchway was open or not. He knew of the location of the hatchway and that it was customary to use it at the time the accident happened; but it was also customary to keep the door locked when the hatchway was open. Held, that the question of his contributory negligence was for the jury.—Engel v. Smith, 82 Mich. 1.

¶ 61. Where a truckman was injured by falling through a plainly visible trap door in the floor of defendant's shop, his testimony that he did not know of the existence of the door, and that he did not look in the direction of the opening, upon which he came suddenly as he came around a pile of goods, made the question of his contributory negligence one for the jury.—Pelton v. Schmidt, 104 Mich. 345.

¶ 62. In an action against builders, for personal injuries sustained by the foreman of an independent contractor through the fall of an elevator, evidence that it was intended as a freight elevator, that a notice was posted warning all persons not to ride on it and that the defendants repeatedly warned persons who used it, is sufficient to justify a directed verdict for the defendant; no waiver is shown by the fact that some of the men used it without remark by the defendant, that the defendant himself rode on it and that it was sometimes necessary for a man to ride with the materials being hoisted.—Ball v. Hauser, 129 Mich. 397.

¶ 63. Plaintiff was employed by a third person to install an electric motor for the lessee of the building of which defendant was lessor. In performing this work plaintiff used the elevator several times and knew that it was not equipped with an automatic gate, and that the fact of the gate being open did not necessarily indicate the elevator was standing at the opening. The shaft was dark and plaintiff stepped through the open gate into the same and was injured. The elevator floor had been covered with white powder, making it appear very light, and plaintiff mistook a light coming up the elevator shaft for the elevator floor. Held, plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law; the question was for the jury.—Barfoot v. White Star Line, 170 Mich. 349.

¶ 64. Where plaintiff's intestate fell through an elevator, which had not been provided with an automatic gate, as required by statute, and one witness testified that decedent had worked there three or four days, held, this fact would not necessarily charge him with knowledge of the lack of such gate, and that the question of his contributory negligence was properly left to the jury.—Noack v. Williams, Davis, Brooks & Hinchman Sons, 175 Mich. 15.

¶ 65. Whether a person exercised a proper degree of care in stepping into an elevator which, by reason of being stopped lower than the floor, caused her to fall, held a question for the jury.—Blair v. Seitner Dry Goods Co., 184 Mich. 304.

¶ 65a. In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained as a result of an elevator starting before a passenger got off, held that the question of contributory negligence was properly submitted to the jury.—Rogers v. Ford, 188 Mich. 62.

¶ 65b. In an action against the tenant of a building having sole charge of a freight elevator operated by its own employee for the death of an employee of a brewery company engaged with his superior in delivering beer to the tenant, due to the starting of the elevator before deceased was safely upon it and in which the evidence was conflicting as to whether or not deceased had been told by his superior, who was on the elevator with the operator, to stay with the team, held that the contributory negligence of deceased was a question for the jury.—Sikora v. Fellowcraft Club, 195 Mich. 49.

¶ 66. In an action by an employee of the owner of a moving van against a warehouse keeper to recover damages for personal injuries received as the result of stepping into an aperture 5½ inches in width between an elevator platform in the building and the floor while assisting his employer in removing a box from the platform, evidence held to present a question for the jury whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in not seeing the aperture.—Haines v. Leonard Warehouses, 199 Mich. 580.

¶ 67. In an action by a tile setter against one selling and delivering plaster to a plaster contractor for damages for personal injuries sustained as the result of the collapse of the porch on which plaintiff was working for the tile contractor due to placing heavy bags of plaster upon a bay window sill and on the floor inside the building, where the evidence was clear that plaintiff had no knowledge with reference to the strength of the structure, held that the contributory negligence of plaintiff was a question for the jury.—Schneider v. C. H. Little Co., 200 Mich. 361.

¶ 68. In an action against the owner of a reinforced concrete building, the contractor, and a materialman furnishing material and plans for the concrete work, for the death of a carpenter due to the collapse of a portion of the floor of the building which plaintiff's decendent and others were attempting to shore up to prevent it from falling, held that the questions of assumption of risk and of contributory negligence were for the jury.—Payne v. Everham, 197 Mich. 181.

§ 14. Instructions as to negligence.

General law of instructions, see Instructions.

¶ 69. In an action for injuries from the falling of an elevator, an instruction permitting the jury to find that defendant's maintenance of the elevator was negligent otherwise than in respect to the particular appliances claimed to have been defective was erroneous.—Hall v. Murdock, 114 Mich. 233.

¶ 70. An instruction in an action for personal injuries sustained in an elevator, which unqualifiedly stated that the owner of the elevator was required by law to test the strength of its cable from time to time, and afterwards left it to the jury to determine whether tests of strength should have been made, but failed to point out a rule by which such necessity could be determined, was erroneous.—Hall v. Murdock, 119 Mich. 389.

¶ 71. In an action for personal injuries sustained by the giving way of the platform timber while plaintiff was weighing a load on certain scales, an instruction stating that if the jury found that if ordinary experience ought to have advised a reasonably prudent man that sticks of timber of the character in question would not remain sound for a period a little more than four years, the negligence of the defendant was established, constituted reversible error, where all the testimony in the case tended to prove that such timber would last at least five years.—McIntyre v. Pfaudler Vacuum Fermentation Co., 133 Mich. 552.

¶ 72. In an action for personal injuries caused by falling down an elevator shaft, it is not erroneous to refuse to instruct that it was not negligence for the defendant, who was with the plaintiff, to raise the gate and call "elevator" in a loud tone to warn anyone using the elevator on the floor above.—Burgess v. Stowe, 134 Mich. 204.

¶ 73. In an action for personal injury caused by the plaintiff stepping into an elevator shaft on the supposed invitation of the defendant, when he opened the gate and called "elevator" to the floors above, it is not error to refuse to instruct that the plaintiff could not recover if he could have seen that the elevator was not there.—Burgess v. Stowe, 134 Mich. 204.

¶ 74. In an action for personal injury caused by plaintiff stepping into an elevator shaft when the defendant opened the gate and called "elevator," it is not error to refuse an instruction that the plaintiff cannot recover on account of defective elevator or lack of special skill in defendant where the court made it clear that the plaintiff could not recover unless he received his injury by acting on the supposed invitation of the defendant.—Burgess v. Stowe, 134 Mich. 204.

¶ 75. In an action for personal injuries caused by the plaintiffs falling down an elevator shaft, in the belief that he had received an invitation to enter the elevator when the defendant opened the gate and called "elevator" to the floors above, it is error to instruct that the defendant was "bound to exercise the highest degree of care and diligence of a cautious person, so far as human care and foresight can go."—Burgess v. Stowe, 134 Mich. 204.

¶ 76. It was immaterial whether the failure to send an attendant with, or giving warning to, plaintiff was the proximate cause of an injury received from a fall from an elevator in defendant's store, where the evidence warranted the jury in attributing negligence to the defendant, in that plaintiff was put upon the elevator by defendant's clerk (intending to send him to the third floor), who told him to get off when the elevator stopped, and that the elevator stopped at the second floor and that plaintiff attempted to leave the elevator and that the elevator, started again by some person other than plaintiff, caught and injured plaintiff as alleged; and instructions of the court upon such point, if erroneous, were harmless.—Moerman v. Clark-Rutka-Weaver Co., 145 Mich. 540.

¶ 77. Refusal to charge the jury that defendant owner of a building containing a passenger elevator was not a common carrier with the liabilities of such is not erroneous where the charge as given was favorable to defendant in that the degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would have bestowed under the circumstances was given as the measure of defendant's duty.—Pascieszny v. Boydell Bros. White Lead & Color Co., 146 Mich. 223.

¶ 78. In a suit by a customer against a storekeeper for personal injuries arising from her falling down a stairway, the court properly instructs that it is not negligence to omit to bar or warn a customer against a stairway where it is in plain sight and out of the place where customers are expected or asked to go.—Larned v. Vanderlinde, 165 Mich. 464.

¶ 79. In a suit against a storekeeper for injuries to a customer arising from her falling down a stairway, the court properly refuses a requested instruction that plaintiff cannot be guilty of contributory negligence, even though she might have seen the opening had she looked, since the situation is one where plaintiff has the right to assume that the floor of the store is perfectly safe.—Larned v. Vanderlinde, 165 Mich. 464.

¶ 80. In a suit by a customer against a storekeeper for personal injuries arising from her falling down a stairway, the court properly instructs that plaintiff is contributorily negligent if she allows such a flight of stairs to escape her notice from no other reason than mere inattention to her surroundings.—Larned v. Vanderlinde, 165 Mich. 464.

¶ 81. In a suit against the owner of a store for injuries to plaintiff arising from her falling down a stairway, the court properly refused to charge that it was the duty of defendant to guard the stairway by a railing or bar, or warn plaintiff by actual notice, and that if the jury should find that the defendant did neither, and the stairway was located where a person trading might step into it unawares, they should render a verdict for the plaintiff, inasmuch as such charge imposes no duty of care on the plaintiff.—Larned v. Vanderlinde, 165 Mich. 464.

¶ 82. In a suit by a customer against a storekeeper for personal injuries arising out of her falling down a stairway, where the plaintiff testifies that her eyesight was good, it is proper for the court to instruct the jury that the plaintiff herself admitted such good eyesight despite the fact that it was shown that she told defendant a week after the accident that the light blurred her eyes when she went into the store.—Larned v. Vanderlinde, 165 Mich. 464.

¶ 83. In an action against the tenant of a building having sole charge of a freight elevator operated by its own employee for the death of an employee of a brewery company engaged in delivering beer to the tenant due to the alleged negligence of the elevator operator in starting the elevator before decedent was safely upon it, and in which the issue was whether decedent was rightfully upon the elevator or whether he had been directed by his superior who was also on the elevator to stay with the team, held that an instruction on the degree of care required of the operator of the elevator and on the care required of deceased to make observations before entering the elevator was erroneous where it required testimony that deceased was told to remain with the horse.—Sikora v. Fellowcraft Club, 189 Mich. 235.

¶ 84. In an action for personal injuries sustained by the giving way of the platform timber while plaintiff was weighing a load on the scales in question, the question whether the load was too heavy or improperly distributed, was a question for the jury.—McIntyre v. Pfaudler Vacuum Fermentation Co., 133 Mich. 552.

¶ 85. In an action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff through the giving way of platform timber while he was weighing a load on certain scales, where the age of the timber was in dispute, the question as to whether proper diligence on the part of the defendant should have led to an examination of the timber and discovery of the defect, was properly submitted to the jury.—McIntyre v. Pfaudler Vacuum Fermentation Co., 133 Mich. 552.

¶ 86. In an action against the owner of a reinforced concrete building, the contractor and a materialman furnishing material and plans for the concrete work, for the death of a carpenter due to the collapse of a portion of a floor of the building, an instruction that it was the duty of the materialman to use due care to furnish reasonably safe and accurate designs, plans and specifications and describe in detail the necessary and proper sizes and dimensions of the beams, panels and columns used in the construction of the building so that they would hold the required weight and to specify proper steel bars and rods to be used in anchorage, held to be incorrect.—Bayne v. Everham, 197 Mich. 181.

¶ 86b. In an action against the tenant of a building having sole charge of a freight elevator operated by its own employee, for the death of an employee of a brewery company engaged in delivering beer to the tenant, due to the alleged negligence of the elevator operator in starting the elevator before decedent was safely upon it, and in which the issue was whether decedent was rightfully upon the elevator, or whether he had been directed by his superior to stay with the team, held that an instruction that decedent, owing to the fact that the door was open and at a standstill, had a right to assume that he could enter the elevator safely and that, under the circumstances, decedent was not charged with the duty of stopping to look, listen, and make a special examination, was erroneous as placing too little responsibility upon decedent.—Sikora v. Fellowcraft Club, 189 Mich. 235.

Character of use of land allowable, see post §§ 17-19.
Restrictions not found in all deeds in vicinity, see post § 20.
Acquiescence in restriction, see post § 20.
How released, see post §§ 22-24.
Regulations of summer resort associations, see Associations, § 3.
Mutual restrictions as consideration for restrictive covenants, see Contracts, V, A.

¶ 87. So long as the vendor of a city lot owns other lands upon the street, conditions in his contract and deed in regard to house-line and building restrictions are of substantial benefit to him and their observance will be compelled.—Abraham v. Stewart, 83 Mich. 7.

¶ 88. It is of no consequence that a building restriction for which there is valuable consideration moving to and from the signers and binding on assignees is created by an instrument independent of the deed conveying title.—Erichsen v. Tapert, 172 Mich. 457.

¶ 89. Restrictions in deeds will be construed strictly against the grantors and those claiming to enforce them, and all doubts resolved in favor of the free use of the property.—Casterton v. Plotkin, 188 Mich. 333.

§ 16. ——Running with the land.

¶ 90. A restrictive building covenant as to the character of the structure which may be erected on a city lot and its distance from the street, runs with the land.—Zoller v. Goldberg, 183 Mich. 197.

¶ 91. A building restriction in a deed to land, inserted for the benefit of the land retained by the grantor, may be enforced by subsequent purchasers inter se.—Hartwig v. Grace Hospital, 198 Mich. 725.

¶ 92. The character of a building restriction in a deed to land held to be evidence of the fact that such restriction was intended for the benefit of subsequent purchasers, especially when the quantity of the land affected and its general location are considered.—Hartwig v. Grace Hospital, 198 Mich. 725.

§ 17. ——Covenants for private dwellings.

Dwellings at stated distance back from lot line, see post § 18.
Private dwellings of stated value, see post § 19.
Effect of change in neighborhood, see post § 22.
Laches, estoppel and waiver, see post §§ 23, 24.

¶ 93. A building restriction confining structures erected to dwelling houses for single families prohibits the erection of a four-family flat.—Misch v. Lehman, 178 Mich. 225.

¶ 94. A restriction in a deed that nothing but a two-story dwelling house shall be erected on a lot, prohibited the erection of a photograph gallery or studio.—Frink v. Hughes, 133 Mich. 63.

¶ 95. Erection of a two-story building designed for two dwellings, one to occupy each floor, may be enjoined where the deed to the lot contains a condition against occupying the premises except "for one dwelling house to each lot."—Harris v. Rorabeck, 137 Mich. 292.

¶ 96. A restriction of the use of lots for residence purposes exclusive of business uses, if one existed, is not incompatible with erection of double houses, where several double houses had been built on the plat without objection and which a complainant does not regard as objectionable, or with the erection of a house to be occupied by one family on each floor.—James v. Irvine, 141 Mich. 376.

¶ 97. A building restriction in a deed prohibiting the erection on the front of a city lot of any building except a dwelling a certain distance back from the street line, extends to and covers the whole lot so as to prevent the erection of a building for business purposes on the rear portion thereof.—Zoller v. Goldberg, 183 Mich. 197.

¶ 98. The grantee of land on which a dwelling house is standing at the time of the making of his deed violates the restrictive covenant in such deed against the erection of anything but a residence and buildings pertaining thereto by using the dwelling house as a hospital.—Hartwig v. Grace Hospital, 198 Mich. 725.

¶ 99. The deed to the lot of defendant contained a restriction from erecting any building other than "any dwelling house of less than $2,000.00." Twenty-one lots of the subdivision, containing seventy lots, had been sold subject to the restricting clause, and all the buildings erected conformed with the restriction as construed by complainants. Held, that the plan was to have one residence for one family only upon each lot, and the erection of a two-family residence would be enjoined.—Kingston v. Busch, 176 Mich. 566.

¶ 100. Where a building restriction provides that only single dwellings and buildings appurtenant thereto can be erected on certain lots, the erection of flat buildings or stores cannot be justified as a necessary appurtenance.—Erichsen v. Tapert, 172 Mich. 457.

¶ 101. Where single dwellings and buildings appurtenant thereto only are allowed by a contract restricting the buildings on certain lots, whether a store building on the rear of one of the lots would be less objectionable than a barn constructed without protest, has no bearing on the question of the right to enjoin the construction of the store.—Erichsen v. Tapert, 172 Mich. 457.

¶ 101a. It cannot be said that the construction of a store or flat building on the back of a residence lot contrary to a contract restricting the character of buildings on certain lots would not be injurious to two adjoining lots where the rear end thereof would abut on one of the adjoining lots for nearly half its length and would be within fifty feet of the other lot.—Erichsen v. Tapert, 172 Mich. 457.

¶ 102. A house for hospital nurses is not a residence within the meaning of a building restriction in a deed to land.—Hartwig v. Grace Hospital, 198 Mich. 725.

§ 18. ——Covenants as to building lines.

¶ 103. A condition that "no building other than dwelling houses shall be built within 25 feet of any street line," is not unreasonable.—Stewart v. Stark, 181 Mich. 408.

¶ 104. A store building cannot be erected within 25 feet of a street line under a restriction that no buildings other than dwelling houses may be built within such limit.—Stewart v. Stark, 181 Mich. 408.

¶ 105. A restrictive covenant that "no building other than dwelling houses shall be built within 25 feet of any street line" within a subdivision, applies to and prevents the construction of all kinds of buildings within the prohibited distance.—Stewart v. Stark, 181 Mich. 408.

§ 19. ——Covenants as to value.

¶ 106. Where a deed of a lot provides that it shall be used for residence purposes only and that no residence shall be erected thereon of less than a certain value, so long as the restrictions are complied with no objection can be made to a building because it is unsightly or offensive to aesthetic taste, nor because its erection may have a tendency to render adjacent property less valuable.—Maine v. Mulliken, 176 Mich. 444. (Kuhn and Moore, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 107. A building restriction in deeds against the erection on lots in a plat of any building costing less that a stated sum and against any but single dwellings for one family on one lot, would be valid.—James v. Irvine, 141 Mich. 376.

§ 20. Persons bound by restrictions.

Who may sue to redress violation, see post § 26.
Estoppel of grantee to land to invoke the statute of frauds, see Frauds, Statute of, III, B.

¶ 108. Lot owners in a plat who have by acquiescence placed a construction on building restrictions relative to the kind of houses to be allowed are bound by it.—James v. Irvine, 141 Mich. 376.

¶ 109. A grantor may restrict the use which a purchaser under contract may make of a lot in a subdivision regardless of whether other lots previously sold were sold with such restriction.—Sherrard v. Murphy, 193 Mich. 352.

¶ 110. The fact that a building restriction expressly provides that it is for the purpose of maintaining a street as a desirable residence street and that a contract signed by some of the lot owners so providing is so executed as to entitle it to record, clearly demonstrates that it was intended to be binding on signers and their successors in title.—Erichsen v. Tapert, 172 Mich. 457. (Ostrander and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 111. An agreement restricting the character of buildings to be erected on certain lots is binding on those who hold title from one who signed the agreement where it specifies, "In consideration of the mutual covenants herein contained (we) do hereby agree to and with each other and for our and each of our heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, as follows."—Erichsen v. Tapert, 172 Mich. 457. (Ostrander and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 112. A contract restricting the character of buildings to be erected on a certain subdivision where the parties are described as "owners of one or more lots in Chandler Ave.," is binding on those who execute it where there is nothing therein to indicate that all must sign to make it operative and the testimony shows that the owners knew that it would probably be impossible to get all to sign.—Erichsen v. Tapert, 172 Mich. 457. (Ostrander and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 113. The rule of restrictions resting in parol as to certain lots in a subdivision under a general plan developed and consistently maintained cannot be applied to previously acquired titles not so restricted, held by nonparticipants and their grantees who are strangers to the plan with antedating rights.—Casterton v. Plotkin, 188 Mich. 333.

¶ 114. On a bill to enforce a building restriction it was shown that defendant was the owner of a subdivision, part of which was originally subject to the restriction imposed upon the plat. Defendant's grantor who was the owner of the remainder of the property at the time of the formation of the subdivision did not join in the restriction but later purchased the portion subject to the restriction, one of the considerations of the transfer being his agreement set out in the deed that the entire tract should be subject to the restriction. Held, that defendant was bound thereby although his grantor did not sign the deed imposing the restriction.—Hartz v. Kales Realty Co., 178 Mich. 560.

¶ 115. Where a valid contract restricting the character of buildings on part of the lots in a subdivision is entered into binding on "heirs, executors, administrators and assigns," violation thereof may be prevented by injunction by and against the grantees of the signers.—Erichsen v. Tapert, 172 Mich. 457.

§ 21. ——Necessity of notice.

Evidence to establish notice, see post § 27.
Possession or appearances as notice of restrictions, see Notice and Record of Title, I, B.

¶ 116. A purchaser of land is not guilty of the violation of building restrictions where he has no knowledge of restrictions not mentioned in the deed which are claimed to have been known and observed by other lot owners in the vicinity before the purchase of the lot.—Detroit Cavalry v. Ranney, 193 Mich. 472.

§ 22. Effect of change of circumstances on covenants.

Laches and estoppel and waiver, see post §§ 23, 24.
Evidence relating to change of circumstances, see post § 27.

¶ 117. While no building restrictions were contained in the recorded plat of a residential subdivision, all contracts of sale and deeds of lots contained covenants that the property should be used for residential purposes only. A lot owner proposed to erect a store and invoked the doctrine that it would be inequitable to enforce the restriction when conditions had changed, and that lots would sell for more with the restrictions removed. There had been some change in the condition, but the locality as a whole remained a suburban, residential village. Held, that at the present time the building restrictions should be enforced.—Moore v. Curry, 176 Mich. 456.

¶ 118. Where the character of a neighborhood is such that equity will enforce a restriction as to the kind of buildings erected, it is proper to grant permission to subsequently move for a modification of the injunction in anticipation of possible changes in the character of such neighborhood.—Misch v. Lehman, 178 Mich. 225.

¶ 119. Where the entire portion of a block fronting on a certain street was subject to restrictive covenants against use for other than residence purposes, there is no change in the character of the neighborhood through the encroachment of business rendering enforcement of the covenants inequitable, where both sides of the street up to and including the property in question are residential in character, some of the residences being very costly, and to permit the erection of store buildings would be an injury to residence owners, although the part of the block not subject to the restrictions has become business in character.—Andre v. Donovan, 198 Mich. 256.

§ 23. Waiver of restriction and estoppel.

To what restrictions estoppel extends, see post § 24.

Evidence relating to waiver or estoppel of restriction, see post § 27.

¶ 120. A restriction in a deed restricting construction to dwellings was enforced upon the application of a lot owner as against his neighbor, although some of the lands in the plat had passed out of the original grantor by conveyances not containing the restrictive clause, but where there had been no substantial departure from the original scheme as to the entire plat.—Frink v. Hughes, 133 Mich. 63.

¶ 121. Equity will enjoin the violation of a condition in a deed that no saloon should be erected on the premises conveyed, where the grantor purchased such property with a view to protecting other property in the neighborhood from depreciation in value by the proximity of a saloon, although, before the execution of the deed, he had conveyed adjoining property without such restriction, and had also leased other premises in that locality for the purposes of a saloon.—Reilly v. Otto, 108 Mich. 330.

¶ 122. Delay in bringing an action to enjoin the violation of a restrictive covenant will not raise an estoppel, where the defendant has been put to no extra expense by reason of the delay, and will be put to no more annoyance and expense than if suit had been sooner begun.—Longton v. Stedman, 182 Mich. 405.

¶ 123. Long acquiescence in the violation of a building restriction in a deed to land will defeat the right to enjoin such violation when only by the making of expensive changes in the structure on the land could the restriction be complied with.—Hartwig v. Grace Hospital, 198 Mich. 725.

¶ 124. The previous construction of a double house in a certain subdivision without protest from complainant if in violation of restrictive covenants as to dwellings therein does not constitute waiver of the restrictions by him where such house is over 1,400 feet from complainant's home, and in another block approaching a business district separated by a street 60 feet wide and near a car line.—Schadt v. Brill, 173 Mich. 647.

¶ 125. That there may have been some violations of a restriction that none but dwelling houses may be erected in a subdivision within 25 feet of any street line, does not justify a subsequent violation of such restriction, where there has been no radical change in the environments and character of the neighborhood as a residential district.—Stewart v. Stark, 181 Mich. 408.

¶ 126. That a building has been erected on one lot of a plat in violation of building restrictions will not estop the property owners from enjoining a similar breach by another party, where such single breach has not resulted in a subversion of the original scheme of development.—Misch v. Lehman, 178 Mich. 225.

¶ 127. On a bill to enjoin the violation of a restrictive covenant in a land contract for and deed to a lot in a residence subdivision that all buildings erected on such lot should face a certain street and that no building should cost less than a certain sum, by the erection of a building of lesser value facing a river which bordered on the back of the lot, held that as the restriction was still of value, considering the number of lots still owned in the subdivision, although it had been violated prior to the making of such land contract in many instances, relief should be granted.—Sherrard v. Murphy, 193 Mich. 352.

¶ 128. Restrictive covenants in a deed against the use of the land for other than residence purposes were not waived by permitting a barn on a portion of the premises to be used for a time as a garage and repair shop and a house to be used for a rooming house without objection being offered by other property owners or their predecessors in title.—Andre v. Donovan, 198 Mich. 256.

¶ 129. There was no abandonment of mutual covenants in a deed of one-half of all the portion of a block fronting on a certain street restricting the use of the premises conveyed "only for residence purposes" by subsequent deeds of each of the owners of a portion of the land of each, the two strips sold adjoining, where, although the covenants were not in all respects similar, they were essentially similar, it being asserted in each deed that the property conveyed was to be used "only for residence purposes."—Andre v. Donovan, 198 Mich. 256.

¶ 130. A single or occasional breach of the original plan of a subdivision in some distant part of the plat or under circumstances such as not to injuriously affect a party's property, or where there is no radical or material change in the general conditions or surroundings, will not estop such party from asserting his rights under a restrictive covenant in his deed to an adjacent owner against such owner whose breach of such covenant threatens to materially diminish the value and desirability of such party's property.—Davison v. Taylor, 196 Mich. 605.

¶ 131. Deeds without restrictive covenants as to the premises conveyed executed prior to the date of a deed containing such covenants would not work an estoppel against the enforcement of the latter covenants.—Davison v. Taylor, 196 Mich. 605.

§ 24. ——Extent of estoppel.

¶ 132. A grantee of a lot in a residence subdivision may, in an action by the owners of remaining unsold lots to enjoin the violation of a restrictive clause in the deed and land contract, urge as estoppel only such acts or omissions on the part of the plaintiffs affecting the restrictive clause as have occured since the making of a land contract between the plaintiffs and another person which was, by assignment, the basis for his title.—Sherrard v. Murphy, 193 Mich. 352.

¶ 133. In a suit to enforce a restrictive covenant in a deed designed to maintain the street whereon the premises conveyed were located as a single residence street, where plaintiff had consented to defendants so remodeling their residence as to make it a two-family flat and had consented to other similar flats on the street, held that if plaintiff was estopped by such consent the estoppel could go no farther than the consent and defendants could claim no further benefit than a continuance of their residence as remodeled.—Davison v. Taylor, 196 Mich. 605.

¶ 134. It does not follow from the fact the grantor in a deed containing restrictive covenants, by permitting the grantee to expend money in departing in one respect from such restriction by remodeling the house on the premises into a two-family flat and using it as such for a number of years may be estopped from claiming the grantee cannot continue such use, that the grantee may use the premises without restrictions of any kind.—Davison v. Taylor, 196 Mich. 605.

§ 25. Remedies and defenses for breach of restriction.

See also ante ¶ 121.

General practice on injunctions, see Injunctions.

¶ 135. The violation of building restrictions will be enjoined.—Stewart v. Stark, 181 Mich. 408.

¶ 136. The enforcement in a court of equity of restrictive covenants contained in a deed on the sale of land is not a matter of absolute right, and is governed by the same general rules which control equitable relief by specific performance.—Davison v. Taylor, 196 Mich. 605.

¶ 137. Equity will compel the removal of a structure erected in violation of a restriction in a deed from a common grantor, prohibiting the erection of any building within five feet of a joint right of way between two city lots.—Longton v. Stedman, 182 Mich. 405.

§ 26. ——Who may sue.

Persons bound by restrictions, see ante § 20.

¶ 138. The owners of property in whose interest a building restriction was imposed are proper parties to its enforcement.—Hartz v. Kales Realty Co., 178 Mich. 560.

¶ 139. A deed with a building restriction or covenant is not available to the owner of another lot in the same plat, also subject to restriction, where neither the plat nor any of several deeds preceding the one in which the restriction appeared contained any restrictions whatever, and where only one deed among 98 in the plat had a covenant binding the grantor to exact similar restrictions from other grantees in the plat.—James v. Irvine, 141 Mich. 376.

¶ 140. A restriction in deeds to lots that they shall be used only for one dwelling house to each lot, is for the benefit, not of the grantor alone, but for every owner of property and resident on the street which was intended to be benefited thereby.—Harris v. Rorabeck, 137 Mich. 202.

¶ 141. The erection of a four-family flat or establishment of a business place on a lot adjoining plaintiff's premises on which she had erected for her personal use a house worth $12,000, held to so materially affect the desirability of her premises as a home and decrease its value as to give her a peculiarly personal interest in the enforcement of a restrictive covenant in her deed to the owner of such adjoining lot designed to maintain such lot for single-residence purposes, in a suit to enforce such covenant against such owner.—Davison v. Taylor, 196 Mich. 605.

¶ 142. That the complainant has not suffered any injury from the violation of a covenant prohibiting the erection of any building within five feet of a common right of way between adjoining lots, does not prevent the enforcement of such a restriction in equity.—Longton v. Stedman, 182 Mich. 405.

§ 27. ——Evidence.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

¶ 143. The intention to restrict buildings in a certain subdivision to single dwelling houses and their appurtenances is sufficiently shown, and the erection therein of a double house with one entrance may be enjoined; where the restrictions provide that no building other than a dwelling house with its appurtenances shall be erected and that such dwelling must cost at least $5,000.00, and the testimony shows that the platters intended and advertised to make the subdivision an exclusive residential section occupied by attractive private homes, and the restrictions were generally understood in private application as permitting only single dwellings and were strictly observed with the exception of one double house near a car line.—Schadt v. Brill, 173 Mich. 647.

¶ 144. On a bill to enjoin the owner of land on the north side of a residence street, the lots on the south side of which were subject to residence building restrictions, from building an apartment building, evidence held insufficient to establish that defendant had any notice of the fact that his lot or the other lots on the north side of the street were restricted to residence purposes, as a part of a general plan for the street.—Williams v. Lawson, 188 Mich. 88.

¶ 145. In an action by the owner of a lot in a residence subdivision purchased subject to building restrictions against the first purchaser under contract of a lot out of the then undeveloped and unrestricted subdivision to enjoin the threatened violation of alleged building restrictions, evidence held insufficient to show any conduct upon the part of the first purchaser after taking possession under his contract to constitute an estoppel to claim freedom from such restrictions.—Lambrecht v. Gramlich, 187 Mich. 251.

¶ 146. In a suit to enforce a restrictive covenant in a deed providing that no building should be kept, operated or maintained upon the premises conveyed, except the necessary buildings for single-residence purposes, evidence held to show no such deviation from the original plan of plaintiff in platting the subdivision and selling other premises therein on the same street as to estop her from insisting upon compliance with the covenant sued on.—Davison v. Taylor, 196 Mich. 605.

¶ 147. In a suit to enforce a restrictive covenant in a deed, designed to maintain the street whereon the premises conveyed were located as a residential street, the evidence held to show business had not so far entered the street as to deprive it of its residential character or release defendants from the covenant sued on.—Davison v. Taylor, 196 Mich. 605.

CALENDAR.

TREATS of the calendar of civil causes for trial or hearing in courts of record.

Analysis.

§ 1. In general; time, term and state of cause.
§ 2. Notice for trial or hearing.
§ 3. ——Time and mode of service.
§ 4. ——Persons to be served.
§ 5. ——Proof of notice.
§ 6. Motion to strike or other objections.
§ 7. Advancement or transfer of cause.
§ 8. Calling cases for trial.

Calendar on appeal, see Appeal, § 134.
Criminal docket, see Indictment, IX, A.

§ 1. In general; time, term and state of cause.

Advancing order of trial, see post § 7.
When to be placed on calendar, see Jud. Act, Chap. XVIII, § 1; Comp. L. 1915.
Making up calendar in circuit courts, see 1916 C. C. Rule 40.

¶ 1. When the time has expired for answering the amendments to a bill the case can be noticed for hearing.—Munch v. Shabel, 37 Mich. 166.

¶ 2. Chancery Rule 64 allows cases not ready for hearing in time to be noticed for the first day of term to be noticed for a subsequent day, and placed at the foot of the calendar; this does not apply to cases in which the witnesses are to be examined in open court; these must be noticed for the first day in term in accordance with the other provisions of the rule.—People ex rel. Dunn v. Detroit Superior Court Judge, 29 Mich. 228.

¶ 3. Where proofs are taken in the regular way, by deposition, the case cannot be noticed for hearing until they are closed.—Goodrich v. Goodrich, 66 Mich. 522.

¶ 4. If the cause is not in readiness as to one defendant, but is as to another, the latter cannot notice it for hearing, but may, if complainant does not proceed with the case, move to dismiss it for want of prosecution.—Graham v. Elmore, H. 265.

¶ 5. Issues of law may be placed on the docket and heard by the court at any time, even though there is an issue of fact in the same case.—Miles v. Seitz, How. N. P. 57.

¶ 6. It is within the discretion of the circuit judge to fix the time for hearing a petition in an ancillary matter.—Barker v. Wayne Circut Judge, 117 Mich. 325.

§ 2. Notice for trial or hearing.

Objections to notice or service, see post § 6.

¶ 7. R. S. § 1846, p. 463, § 4 (How. St., § 7551), requiring written notice of trial of issues in the circuit court, was not repealed by the act of April 3, 1848, entitled "An act to regulate and define the jurisdiction of the circuit and county courts."—Storey v. Child, 2 Mich. 107.

¶ 8. Under the statute (How. St., § 7551), requiring "written notice of trial" to be served, a notice in proper form, subscribed "Attorneys for Plaintiff," without giving their names, is insufficient, although personally served by one of the attorneys for plaintiff upon one of defendant's attorneys.—Hathaway v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 117 Mich. 323.

¶ 9. A notice of hearing for any time after the opening of term, but specifying no day, is irregular, and would not authorize an ex parte hearing; but the irregularity can be waived.—Munch v. Shabel, 37 Mich. 166.

§ 3. ——Time and mode of service.

General mode of serving notices, on person or by mail, see Notices.

¶ 10. At least fourteen full days must elapse between the day of service of notice of trial and the first day of the next term. —Arnold v. Nye, 23 Mich. 286, 293.

¶ 11. Parties stand on the same footing, under the rules for serving notice of trial, as attorneys, if they employ no attorneys.—People ex rel. Greenwood School District v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 41 Mich. 549.

¶ 12. Service of notice of trial by mail is sufficient if made on an attorney or on a party who appears in person in an appeal case at the circuit.—People ex rel. Greenwood School District v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 41 Mich. 549.

¶ 13. Under Circuit Court Rule 28, sub. (e) relating to service of notice of trial by an attorney on the adverse attorney no attempt need be made to make personal service, before service by mailing may be resorted to, though thereunder the specified time of service may be curtailed by part or all of a day.—Palmer-Stevenson Const. Co. v. Mason Circuit Judge, 176 Mich. 326.

¶ 14. A judgment in an action against several defendants wherein only a joint judgment is permissible cannot, unless the right to notice of trial is waived, be rendered without giving such notice to a defendant who is not served, but who appears and files and serves a plea of the general issue.—Penfold v. Slyfield, 110 Mich. 343.

¶ 15. Service of notice of trial upon an attorney who has appeared for all of the defendants, and pleaded the general issue, is good as against all, in the absence of any order of substitution, although in the meantime two of the defendants have appeared by another attorney, and filed a like plea.—Landyskowski v. Lark, 108 Mich. 500.

¶ 16. Notice of trial of an appeal from an order dissolving a circuit court writ of attachment is properly served upon the attorneys of record in the attachment suit who appeared and defended for the appellant in the dissolution proceeding, and one of whom made the affidavit for appeal in which he stated that he was one of the attorneys for the appellant in that proceeding and that he made the affidavit for him.—Roskopp v. Macomb Circuit Judge, 97 Mich. 628.

§ 5. ——Proof of notice.

¶ 17. Where a notice of trial is required to be posted "in some conspicuous place" in a certain office, the affidavit should state that it was put in a conspicuous place, and should mention the place.—People ex rel. Barrett v. Bacon, 18 Mich. 247.

¶ 18. A judgment rendered on issue joined without notice of trial or appearance at the trial should be set aside on motion. And if no proof of notice appears on the files the defendant is entitled to have judgment set aside unless the plaintiff proves notice. —People ex rel. Barrett v. Bacon, 18 Mich. 247.

§ 6. Motion to strike or other objections.

¶ 19. Cases not properly on the docket of the circuit court for trial should be brought to the court's attention on the first day of the term, and objection is not to be raised for the first time after the trial has begun. —Peninsular Stove Co. v. Osmun, 73 Mich. 570.

¶ 20. A motion to continue or to strike the case from the docket, as not properly on it, must be made on the first day of the court.—Marvin v. Bowlby, 135 Mich. 640.

¶ 21. An action based in part on a charge of conspiracy was noticed for trial without bringing in a portion of the defendants. A defendant who had pleaded asked that the case be set down for trial on a day certain, and at the day fixed objected that the others had not been brought in. On motion the plaintiff was allowed to discontinue as to those who had not been brought in. Held, that the right to object to the irregularity in noticing the case for trial was cut off by consenting to go to trial and by the order of discontinuance, and that it was of no consequence that the discontinuance was not entered on the record, and that there was no formal amendment of the declaration.—Cook v. Perry, 43 Mich. 623.

¶ 22. A defendant who goes to trial on a note of issue served before the filing of a bill of particulars which he has demanded and to which he is entitled waives the right to insist that the case is not on the docket for trial.—Peninsular Stove Co. v. Osmun, 73 Mich. 570.

¶ 22a. The irregularity in noticing an action in tort for trial before all the defendants are brought in is waived by appearing and asking that the cause be set down for trial for a day certain.—Cook v. Perry, 43 Mich. 623.

§ 7. Advancement or transfer of cause.

Transfer on appeal from law to equity or equity to law, see Appeal, § 498.
Regular order of preference on calendar, see 1916 C. C. Rule 40.
Provisions as to transfer to other side, see Jud. Act, Chap. XI, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 12351.
Transferring to jury calendar, see 1916 C. C. Rule 39.

¶ 23. The supreme court cannot make an order advancing a cause upon the calendar of the circuit court even where plaintiff has been wrongfully deprived of his right to have the case tried in its regular order.—Burt v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 90 Mich. 520.

¶ 24. A motion in the circuit court in chancery to transfer the case to the law side under the Judicature Act. Chap. XI, § 2, is properly denied where a decree dismissing the bill was rendered by the supreme court prior to January 1, 1916, when the act took effect.—Schook v. Iron Circuit Judge, 192 Mich. 103.

CANALS.

TREATS of artificial waterways for transportation and navigation, excluding drainage (see Drains) and power (see Mills; Waters) canals.

Analysis.

§ 1. In general; right to sue.
§ 2. Public title, control and regulation.
§ 3. Tolls and charges.

§ 1. In general; right to sue.

Public control, see post § 2.
Canal corporations, see generally Corporations.
Land grants in aid of canals, see Public Lands, VI.
Exemptions from taxation of canal lands, see Taxes, III.

¶ 1. A canal through a marsh in which a stream is lost, cut by private individuals through the land of one of them, for the purpose of affording floatage for timber and lumber through the same in connection with the stream—there being no evidence that the waters of the stream ever ran along its line, or that it was the improvement of an existing water channel—is a private way, and the public are not entitled to use it unless it be dedicated to their use.—Ward v. Warner, 8 Mich. 508.

¶ 2. The Sault Ste. Marie canal is an independent waterway, like a turnpike, which can only be used upon such conditions as the state, under the congressional grant, may lawfully impose.—Ryan v. Brown, 18 Mich. 196.

§ 2. Public title, control and regulation.

Public control of navigable waters in general, see Navigable Waters, II.

¶ 3. The canal board has such a control over the Sault Ste. Marie canal and its approaches that it is authorized to remove unlawful obstructions to the legitimate use of the canal; but the board's finding is not conclusive as to illegality, and its interference with private rights may be enjoined.—Ryan v. Brown, 18 Mich. 196.

¶ 4. A trust for the United States in the possession of the state was not created by the provision in the act of Congress requiring the Portage ship canal to be a public highway free of toll for United States vessels, or by the provision limiting the tolls that should be imposed after reimbursement.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Lake Superior Ship Canal, Railroad & Iron Co., 32 Mich. 233.

¶ 5. The action of the state fixed a contract right in said company with the right of possession, and it is not competent for the state to violate its contract and to assume to manage the canal—a work of internal improvement—for itself; but the Act of 1873 (How. St., §§ 5505-5516), constituting a board of control, etc., does not undertake to do this.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Lake Superior Ship Canal, Railroad & Iron Co., 32 Mich. 233.

§ 3. Tolls and charges.

¶ 6. The right of the Lake Superior Ship Canal, etc., Company, under the legislation of Congress and of state legislature to the possession of the Portage ship canal, and to collect tolls, sustained as against the claim of the state as trustee of the United States.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Lake Superior Ship Canal, Railroad & Iron Co., 32 Mich. 233.

CARRIERS.

TREATS of the law of common carriage of goods, animals, passengers and baggage. The law of Railroads and of Street Railways outside of their functions as carriers is treated in Railroads and Street Railways, respectively; while their rights and liabilities as employers are treated in Master and Servant; Workmen's Compensation Law. Actionable negligence by railroads and street railways is therefore treated in Carriers, if the duty was owing to a passenger or in respect to property carried, in Master and Servant if the duty was towards an employee, and in Railroads, Street Railways or Shipping, if the duty was towards any other persons or property.

[Note. In dividing this topic the plan has been to place in division I only such matter as applies generally to carriers without regard to the thing carried. Divisions II-V, respectively, include all matter relating to carriage of goods, live stock, passengers and baggage. It is nevertheless true that in cases of the carriage of passengers some of the precedents on carriage of goods will be pertinent, and some on carriage of passengers will be pertinent in other cases. A search of either division should also be supplemented by an examination of the cognate portions of the other divisions.]

Owing to the great multiplicity of statutes affecting common carriers and to the extensive changes brought about by the Interstate Commerce Acts, superseding in many particulars the state legislation, no attempt has been made to index the statutes exhaustively into this topic. Consult indexes to the published statutes. Particular reference to the Interstate Commerce Act and its amendments should be had whenever any interstate transportation is involved, and as to matters arising during the Federal administration of the railroads, the General Orders of the United States Railroad Administration should also be consulted.]

I. GENERAL LAW AND REGULATIONS.

§ 1. In general; who are common carriers.

When relation commences, see post §§ 14, 110.

When carrier becomes warehouseman, see post §§ 49, 50.

Carriage of live stock, nature of duty and service, see post III.

Express company as common carrier, see also post ¶ 33.

Nature of public service owed by telegraph or telephone companies and their lines, see Telegraphs and Telephones.

Statutory definition, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8111.

Telephone companies declared to be common carriers, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6689 et seq.

¶ 1. An undertaking to transport a circus train for a special rate in the cars of the proprietor, the carrier furnishing only the motive power and the trainmen, and expressly stating that the contract was not made as with a carrier, but with a "hirer" of machinery and motive power, right of way and men, does not create the relation of common carrier.—Coup v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 56 Mich. 111.

¶ 2. Telegraph companies, in the absence of any statutory provision, are not common carriers.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Carew, 15 Mich. 525.

¶ 3. A log driving company is not liable as a common carrier for failure to deliver to destination logs received by it.—Mann v. White River Log & Booming Co., 46 Mich. 38.

¶ 4. An expressman habitually carrying baggage to and from trains, and agreeing to carry for hire a trunk from a train to the intended residence of a passenger getting off the train, is a common carrier.—Baker v. Maher, How. N. P. 89.

¶ 5. A public moving van company is a common carrier, and it carries on its business subject to the rules governing such carriers.—Lawson v. Judge of Recorder's Court of City of Detroit, 175 Mich. 375.

¶ 6. A mill owner, furnished with machinery by a manufacturer in another place, who under their agreement is to set up the machinery in the mill, "except that" such owner is to "do all the teaming" in his town in that connection, does not become a common carrier, and he is bound to exercise ordinary care only.—Allis v. Voigt, 90 Mich. 125.

§ 2. Public regulation in general.

In respect to particular matters, see also post §§ 3-11.
Duty to have tickets on sale and to provide opportunity to buy tickets before train time, see post § 121.
Regulative powers of the Railroad Commission, see Public Service.
Regulations of railroads and other transportation agencies in respects not connected with carriage, see Railroads; Street Railways.
Powers of municipalities, see Municipal Corporations, IX.
Railroad Commission Act, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 155.
Subjection of express companies to Railroad Commission regulation, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8133 (f).

¶ 7. The contention that a railroad company operating in the city of Detroit was not incorporated for the purpose of intra-city transportation is untenable, as against the power of regulation of intra-city railroad traffic by the state, where the railroad was incorporated for the purpose of transportation, geographical limitations being immaterial under the circumstances.—Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada v. Michigan Rail-Road Commission, 231 U. S. 457, 58 L. ed. 310, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152, affirming 198 Fed. 1009.

§ 3. Franchise, rates and charges for service.

Payment of charges and recovery of overcharges, see post II, I.
Taking new rates during injunction as overcharge, see post § 77.
Penalties for overcharge, see post § 76.
Certainty of rates established for "car loads," see post ¶ 187.
Right of passengers to pay established rates, see post §§ 121-126.
Rates for fractions of mile, see post § 123.
For baggage carriage, see post § 248.
Railroad and street railroad franchises, see Franchises; Railroads, I; Street Railways, I.
Relative powers of courts and legislature as to rates, see Constitutional Law, II.
Municipal power to regulate fares, see Municipal Corporations, IX.
Basis for determining reasonableness of rates, see Public Service.
Statutory rates, see Michigan Railroad Commission Act; Comp. L. 1915, chap. 155, Long and short haul rates, see Pub. Acts 1915, No. 277.

¶ 8. Under the rule of Wellman v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 83 Mich. 592, and Smith v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 114 Mich. 460, the legislature has the power to fix rates to be charged by railroad companies, within certain limits.—Pingree v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 118 Mich. 314.

¶ 9. Laws 1846, No. 42, § 15, makes it lawful for the Michigan Central Railroad to fix, regulate, and receive tolls, limited only by a reasonable amount as to passengers, viz., three cents per mile, and such power is not qualified by section 11, stating that the company may only charge sums lawfully established by the by-laws, or by section 30, stating that the by-laws passed by the board of directors shall not be contrary to law.—Pingree v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 118 Mich. 314.

¶ 10. Railroad corporations organized under an existing law will not be heard to question the rates fixed by the law since they cannot avail themselves of the provisions which give them the right to do business and disregard provisions which are onerous.—Commissioner of Railroads v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 130 Mich. 248. Affirmed in 193 U. S. 17, 48 L. ed. 598, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 310.

¶ 11. Where a statute fixing maximum rates for the transportation of freight by railroads is included in the general railroad law at the time of the incorporation of a railroad company, such company cannot question the reasonableness of the rates fixed by the statute.—Robinson v. Harmon, 157 Mich. 266.

¶ 12. Under Act No. 312, Pub. Acts 1907, giving the Michigan Railroad Commission power to establish maximum rates, the rates ordered by it continue in force until the railroads take the initiative and have them declared unreasonable, on evidence submitted by them to the courts.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 160 Mich. 355.

¶ 13. The language of an ordinance which provides that the rate of fare for one passenger on a street railroad shall not be more than 5 cents, does not give the city any right to reduce it below the rate of 5 cents, as established by the company.—City of Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co., 184 U. S. 368, 46 L. ed. 592, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410.

§ 4. ——Additions and extensions of lines of carrier.

¶ 14. A franchise to a street railway company providing that the fare from any point in the township of Detroit "shall at no time exceed the rate then charged by the company from Pontiac to Detroit, and vice versa," refers not only to the company mentioned in the franchise but includes any line which that company or its assignee might at any time build or purchase.—Township of West Bloomfield v. Detroit United Ry., 146 Mich. 198.

¶ 15. A contract by ordinance relating to street railway fares is made in view of the power of the legislature of the state to increase or diminish the territory within the city, and neither the city nor the company contemplates that in case of an extension of the lines of the company within the city, either by purchase or acquisition from another company, an increased fare should be demanded.—People v. Detroit United Ry., 162 Mich. 460. Reversed in 242 U. S. 238, 61 L. ed. 268, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 87.

¶ 16. In 1889 an ordinance was passed requiring the Detroit City Railway Company to sell workingmen's tickets eight for twenty-five cents during certain hours of the day, good over any of the company's lines in the city. Defendant became the assignee of said railway. It later purchased a street railway in territory adjoining the city. Subsequently the city annexed this territory. Held, the railway was liable for failure to sell said tickets, as provided in the ordinance of 1889, so as to entitle purchasers to use them over the purchased railway in the annexed territory.—People v. Detroit United Ry., 162 Mich. 460. Reversed in 242 U. S. 238, 61 L. ed. 268, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 87.

¶ 17. Where a city ordinance provides that tickets shall be sold by a city railway at a named price, to be good over all parts of the city to which the railway may be extended, the term "extended" includes railway constructed and that acquired by purchase under Comp. L. 1897, § 6448.—People v. Detroit United Ry., 162 Mich. 460. Reversed in 242 U. S. 238, 61 L. ed. 268, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 87.

¶ 18. A schedule of freight rates established by the Michigan Railroad Commission on a mileage basis applies to branch lines added by a carrier pending a contest of the reasonableness of such rates, as well as to trackage subsequently added.—Michigan Railroad Commission v. Detroit & Mackinac R. Co., 184 Mich. 242.

§ 5. Posting and publication of rates and tariffs.

Conclusiveness of established rates, see ante § 3.
Effect of publication of limited value rates to relieve carrier from higher value in case of loss, see post § 48.
Posted baggage limitation as affecting passenger, see post § 247.
Statutory provisions, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8118; and see also Interstate Commerce Act and Regulations.
Express rates, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8133 (a), (c).

¶ 19. Posting and filing with the Michigan Railroad Commission typewritten copies of a freight schedule established by a carrier under an order of such commission, is not in compliance with section 10a of Public Acts 1909, No. 300 (How. St., 2nd. Ed., § 6533), requiring printing in large type.—Michigan Railroad Commission v. Detroit & Mackinac R. Co., 184 Mich. 242.

§ 6. Reception and interchange of cars and traffic.

Statutory duty, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8112 (b).
Interchange of freight traffic, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8115.
See amendment as to interchange of traffic, Pub. Acts 1915, No. 278; Pub. Acts 1917, No. 387.
Private tracks and switches to industries, warehouses, and the like, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8114.
Changing side track and switching service, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8122.

¶ 20. The state of Michigan has power, through the Railroad Commission, to make a reasonable order requiring a carrier to permit empty or loaded cars owned by it to be hauled from its line upon the connecting line for purposes of loading or delivery of intra-state freight, and to permit the cars of other carriers loaded with such freight consigned to points on the connecting line to be hauled from its line upon the connecting line for the purpose of delivery.—Michigan Central R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 236 U. S. 615, 59 L. ed. 750, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426; affirming 168 Mich. 230.

¶ 21. The provision of Pub. Acts 1911, No. 139, § 7, subd. "a," How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6530, providing that nothing in the act shall be construed "as requiring any railroad to give the use of its tracks or terminal facilities to another railroad, engaged in the like business," is not inconsistent with subdivision "d," requiring every common carrier to receive and transport at reasonable rates all car load traffic under the usual conditions locally consigned, between points in the same city or town, and receive and transport from any junction or transfer point or intersection with another railroad in such city or town all such carload freight destined to train tracks or other sidings on any line operated by the delivering carrier, and to deliver such cars upon such train tracks or sidings in the city or town where such cars are received from any such connecting line, when required so to do, so as to render the act void, and, subdiv. d, having been enacted at a later time, would, in any event, prevail.—Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 198 Fed. 1009; affirmed 231 U. S. 457, 58 L. ed. 310, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152.

§ 7. ——Private cars and car lines.

¶ 22. A common carrier's statutory duty to receive the cars of private owners does not oblige it to move them except in their own routine and in the ordinary course of business.—Coup v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 56 Mich. 111.

§ 8. ——Hack stands and taxicab stations.

See also post § 10.

¶ 23. A railroad company cannot grant to one hack and omnibus company exclusive facilities for carrying passengers and freight to and from its station grounds, or even better facilities than it allows others in the same business; so held, not only in view of the provisions of How. St., § 3355, requiring all railroads to grant equal facilities for the transportation of passengers and freight to all persons, companies, or corporations, but independently.—Kalamazoo Hack & Bus Co. v. Sootsma, 84 Mich. 194.

¶ 24. How. St., § 3355, requiring all railroad companies to grant equal facilities for the transportation of passengers and freight to all persons, companies and corporations, does not relate entirely to the mere carriage in the cars of the road, but includes the receiving of such passengers and freight at its depots, and by other "persons, companies and corporations" at the point upon the road where the carriage ends.—Kalamazoo Hack & Bus Co. v. Sootsma, 84 Mich. 194.

¶ 25. A rule adopted by a railroad company reserving the right upon its own grounds to assign places to different hackmen, and excluding from those places others not assigned, is a reasonable rule which the company has a right to enforce.—Cole v. Rowen, 88 Mich. 219.

§ 9. Foreign carriers and corporations.

General law of foreign corporations, see Foreign Corporations.

¶ 26. A foreign express company permitted to do business in the state is subject to all the duties and obligations which the law imposes upon common carriers.—Attorney General ex rel. Moore v. American Exp. Co., 118 Mich. 682. Reversed in 177 U. S. 404, 44 L. ed. 823, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 695.

§ 10. Control of buildings, grounds and tracks.

See also ante § 8.

Right of station master to use force in enforcing regulations about hack stands, see Assault, ¶ 62.

¶ 27. A railroad company can make all needful reasonable rules and regulations concerning the use of its station and grounds, and can exclude all persons therefrom who have no business with the railroad or passengers going to and coming from its trains or stations, and it probably can prohibit all persons from soliciting business for themselves upon its premises; but it cannot, arbitrarily, admit one common carrier of passengers or freight to its stations or grounds, and exclude all others, for no other reason than that it is for its own profit or pleasure to do so.—Kalamazoo Hack & Bus Co. v. Sootsma, 84 Mich. 194.

¶ 28. A railroad company has a right to adopt and enforce reasonable regulations assigning places on its station grounds to omnibus and hack drivers while waiting for trains, and the station master is not guilty of assault and battery if, using no more force than is necessary, he ejects a refractory driver from another's place.—Cole v. Rowen, 88 Mich. 219.

§ 11. Discrimination and rebates.

Among hackmen and taxicabmen, see also ante § 8.
Right to freight, charges and liens, and recovery of overcharges, see post II, I.
As to cars for live stock, see post § 97.
Pleading discrimination, see post § 84.
Statutory prohibition, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 8124-8126.

¶ 29. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 6235, which provides that railroads shall transport merchandise and persons "without partiality or favor," under a penalty of $100 for each violation "to be recovered by the party aggrieved," the penalty cannot be recovered by a connecting carrier to whom property may have been consigned for transportation to its destination, but only by the shipper, or his principal if he be an agent, he being the "party aggrieved."—Crosby v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 131 Mich. 288.

¶ 30. Under 24 U. S. Stat. 379, all discriminations made by railways are not unlawful, but only such as are unjust, undue, or unreasonable.—Dingman v. Duluth, S. S. & A. Ry. Co., 164 Mich. 328.

¶ 31. Relator, a shipper, had a dispute with defendant railway over the amount of certain freight bills. After that defendant refused to extend credit on shipments. Defendant was extending credit to other competitors of relator. Defendant testified that it had had a great deal of trouble with relator in settling charges. Held, mandamus would not lie to compel defendant to give credit to relator under Pub. Acts 1907, No. 312, § 17, which makes it unlawful for a carrier to give undue preference.—Brown & Brown Coal Co. v. Grand Trunk Ry. System, 159 Mich. 565.

II. CARRIAGE OF GOODS.

A. IN GENERAL; RECEPTION OF GOODS.

§ 12. Nature and responsibilities of the service.

General law and regulations applicable to all carriers, see ante I.
Carriage of live stock, see post III.
Carriage of baggage and passengers' effects, see post V.
Liability for loss, injury or delay in carriage, see post II, E.
Of connecting carriers, see post II, G.
Nature of the undertaking under limited liability contracts, see post § 67.
Burden of proof of shipper's liability for injury to car, see post ¶ 226.
Care required of gratuitous carrier, see also Bailments, ¶ 15.
General doctrine of responsibility of principal or master for acts of agent or servant, see Agency, II; Master and Servant, IV.
Notice to former agent or employee, see Agency, § 74, ¶ 448.
The duties of the carrier, and the corresponding negligence, in respect to the particular acts and things to be done in carrying the goods are specifically treated in the succeeding portions of division II.

§ 13. Duty to receive and carry.

Particular duties, see post II, D.
Free delivery and pickup limits, see post ¶ 86.
Reasonableness of delay in furnishing cars as jury question, see post § 92.
Right to prepayment of freight, see post § 73.
Statutory duty, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8112.
Duty to furnish cars, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8116.

¶ 32. A common carrier is bound to receive and carry goods only when offered for carriage by their owner or his authorized agent.—Fitch v. Newberry, 1 D. 1.

¶ 33. An express company is a common carrier, and as such it is its duty to receive for carriage and to carry the goods of any person tendered to it for transmission, provided that they are such that it holds itself out as willing to carry, and the party tendering them offers to pay its proper charges.—Attorney General ex rel. Moore v. American Exp. Co., 118 Mich. 682. Reversed in 177 U. S. 404, 44 L. ed. 823, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 695.

§ 14. Delivery for carriage and inception of duty.

Necessity for bill of lading, see post § 16.
Delivery to consignee or at end of transit, see post § 28 et seq.
Commencement and termination of liability, see also post § 41.
Inception of warehouseman's liability, see post § 49.
Pleading duty and relation of carrier, see post § 82.
Burden of proof against carrier, see post § 87.
Delivery and notification of carrier as question of fact, see post § 91.

¶ 34. A railroad company is not liable as common carrier for goods deposited in its warehouse to await orders from the owner for their transportation.—Michigan Southern & Northern I. R. Co. v. Shurtz, 7 Mich. 515.

¶ 35. If a common carrier agrees that property intended for transportation by him may be deposited at a particular place without express notice to him, such deposit alone is a sufficient delivery; and such an agreement may be shown by a constant practice and usage so to receive property without special notice.—Pratt v. Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada, 95 U. S. 43, 24 L. ed. 336.

¶ 36. A railroad company becomes immediately liable as a common carrier, where goods properly marked for shipment are placed inside its freight depot for immediate transportation, with the agreement by its agent that they will be shipped the following morning, although no shipping bill or written contract is given, and the carrier is liable for their destruction by fire while in its warehouse that day awaiting shipment. —Meloche v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 116 Mich. 69.

Duty of shipper to inform carrier of dangerous character of goods shipped, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 248-266.

§ 15. Duty and liability of special carrier.

Special liability on contract to move circus train, see post § 98, ¶ 275.

¶ 38. A special carrier of goods is bound to use ordinary care only, and in case of breakage happening, by accident and not his negligence, in course of their being carried, is not liable.—Allis v. Voigt, 90 Mich. 125.

B. CONTRACTS AND BILLS OF LADING IN GENERAL.

§ 16. In general; necessity and form of bills and receipts.

Necessity of writing to limit liability, see post § 67.
Necessity of production in order to require diversion from route, see post ¶ 74.
Effect of limiting provisions in bill, assent of shipper, see post § 71.
Burden of proof as to contract when action sounds in tort, see post § 87.
For shipment of live stock, see post § 98.
Statutory requirements, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8148.
Under federal laws, see Interstate Commerce Act and amendments.
Bills of Lading Act of 1909, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 156.
Uniform Bills of Lading Act, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 156, § 8174 et seq.

¶ 39. The carrier's common law liability attaches where goods are accepted by it for transportation without the issuance of a shipping receipt or bill of lading.—Farnsworth v. National Exp. Co., 166 Mich. 676.

¶ 40. The War Revenue Act of June 13, 1898, requiring express companies to issue a bill of lading for shipments received for carriage, to which shall be attached a one cent stamp, imposes upon the carrier the obligation of issuing a receipt.—Attorney General ex rel. Moore v. American Exp. Co., 118 Mich. 682. Reversed in 177 U. S. 404, 44 L. ed. 823, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 695.

¶ 41. The War Revenue Act of June 13, 1898, requiring express companies to issue a bill of lading for shipments received for carriage, to which shall be attached a one cent stamp, imposes a duty which the carrier cannot evade by making new regulations and establishing new rates so as to throw the burden upon the shipper.—Attorney General ex rel. Moore v. American Exp. Co., 118 Mich. 682. Reversed in 177 U. S. 404, 44 L. ed. 823, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 695.

§ 17. Validity and effect of contracts and bills.

Authority to agree to contract, see post §§ 19, 20.
Right to delivery, assignee or transferree of bill, see post § 29.
Effect of shipping papers made out after delivery of goods, see also post ¶¶ 184, 185.
Of limitations of liability in bill or contract, see post §§ 67-70.
Bill of lading other than as contract for carriage, see Bills of Lading.

¶ 42. The law does not compel persons dealing with common carriers to rely and insist upon the liability which, in the absence of special contract, it imposes in their favor, but recognizes their competency to manage their own affairs, and to make such contracts with respect thereto as they may deem most conducive to their interests.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Hale, 6 Mich. 243.

¶ 43. An agreement between a carrier and a shipper of goods made at the time of shipment whereby the carrier is to collect the freight from the consignee is valid.—King v. Van Slack, 193 Mich. 105.

¶ 44. The consignee of goods is bound by the contract made between the carrier and the consignor.—Frohlich v. Pennsylvania Co., 138 Mich. 116.

¶ 45. The fact that a shipper signed a bill of lading in haste, when it was presented to him at the last moment, does not prevent the enforcement of its provisions.—Hengstler v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 125 Mich. 530.

¶ 46. The receipt or bill of lading issued by a common carrier (express company) to a consignor, and received by him without objection, and without any insistence upon the common law liability of the carrier, is a contract between the parties, and fixes their liabilities and rights.—Smith v. American Express Co., 108 Mich. 572.

Oral or written contract as controlling, where bill of lading not issued until after oral contract entered into, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 928-976.

§ 18. Interpretation and explanation.

As to through shipment over successive lines, see post § 55.

Conclusiveness of bill of lading as evidence of receipt of goods, see also Bills of Lading, ¶ 1.

Inadmissibility of custom to change express contract, see Customs and Usages.

¶ 47. Each bill of lading is open to explanation, and the carrier may show that the actual amount of property which came into his hands was different from that stated in the bill.—Strong v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 15 Mich. 206.

¶ 48. Carriers seeking to modify their contracts by regulations and customs of their own must show that both parties acted in reference to them.—Moore v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 3 Mich. 23.

¶ 49. A bill of lading conditioned to deliver goods "at Toledo for Detroit" is a contract to carry to Toledo and then forward to Detroit; and the carrier receiving the same at Toledo to carry to Detroit receives them under his common law liability and not under the conditions of the bill of lading, though he would be limited in his charges to the sum specified in the bill.—Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co., 16 Mich. 79.

¶ 50. The agent of the O. & P. R. R. Co., on receipt of goods to be forwarded, gave a dray ticket, signed by himself, in the following form: "Pittsburgh, Nov. 1, 1864. To O. & P. R. R. Rec'd of F. Bros., in good order [certain goods described], for M. I. M. & Co., Detroit. To Mansfield." A shipping bill was also given at the time, specifying Mansfield as the place for delivery of the goods. Held, that this dray ticket, standing by itself, was not evidence of an obligation on the part of the railroad company to convey the goods to Detroit, but, under the circumstances, evidenced only an obligation to keep the goods safely, and redeliver them or account for their value.—Fleming v. Mills, 5 Mich. 420.

§ 19. Authority of consignor to assent.

See also ante ¶ 44.

¶ 51. The carrier has the right to assume that the consignor is entitled to make contracts for carriage, and the consignee will be bound by such as he makes by the bill of lading.—McMillan v. Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co., 16 Mich. 79.

§ 20. Authority of agents in making.

Authority of forwarders, see post § 65.

¶ 52. The ticket or shipping agents of common carriers have authority to make all usual and ordinary contracts of carriage and shipment, and the public has a right to assume that they are authorized to do whatever they attempt to do.—Hayes v. Wabash R. Co., 163 Mich. 174.

¶ 53. A local agent of a railroad has authority to determine the form and contents of a bill of lading.—Sturges v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 166 Mich. 231.

¶ 54. The custom of issuing bills of lading, so that such a bill constitutes the contract between the parties, is not conclusive of the authority of a shipping agent, or of the reasonableness of a contract he assumes to make.—Rudell v. Ogdensburg Transit Co., 117 Mich. 568.

¶ 55. An agreement that a shipment shall arrive within usual time of transit at destination, is not so unusual or extraordinary as to be outside of the general authority of the carrier's shipping agent.—Rudell v. Ogdensburg Transit Co., 117 Mich. 568.

§ 21. Modification or avoidance of contract or conditions.

Modification of contracts in general, see Contracts, VIII.

¶ 56. Where a contract for shipment has already been made it cannot be changed by handing a receipt or bill of lading to the clerk of him for whom the goods are to be carried.—Rudell v. Ogdensburg Transit Co., 117 Mich. 568.

¶ 57. Assurances by an agent of an express company that the goods shipped will reach their destination at a given time are mere opinion and not evidence of fraud or deceit so as to avoid the ordinary printed conditions of the express receipt.—Sloman v. National Exp. Co., 134 Mich. 16.

¶ 58. The fact that the printed matter in an express receipt is partially covered by revenue stamps, does not indicate an erasure of any part of the terms.—Sloman v. National Exp. Co., 134 Mich. 16.

C. TITLE, CUSTODY AND CONTROL OF GOODS.

§ 22. In general.

Right of carrier to lien, see post § 75.

¶ 59. A common carrier who obtains possession of goods wrongfully, or without the owner's express or implied consent, and who on demand refuses to deliver them to him, is liable in trover for their value.—Fitch v. Newberry, 1 D. 1.

§ 23. Title and ownership.

Right of transferree to delivery at destination, see post § 29.

Who liable for freight, see post § 72.

The question of title in cases where shipment is being made pursuant to a contract of sale will depend on when the title passes by terms of the sale from one party to the other. This matter is treated in Sales, IV, which see.

¶ 60. Prima facie the consignee of goods is the owner thereof.—Turnbull v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 183 Mich. 213.

¶ 61. Upon shipment of goods through a carrier to a third party and on delivery to the shipper of the bill of lading, the consignee is prima facie the owner of the property; but this presumption of ownership may be rebutted by proof of facts showing the actual intent of the shipper at the time the goods were delivered to the carrier for shipment.—Sturges v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 166 Mich. 231.

¶ 62. The consignee named in a bill of lading is presumptively the owner of the shipment and should be so treated by the carrier unless notified to the contrary, and this presumption will prevail as against any undisclosed intention of the consignor.—Nelson Grain Co. v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 174 Mich. 80.

¶ 63. Where goods are shipped through a carrier to a third party, on delivery to the shipper of a bill of lading, the consignee is prima facie the owner.—Ithaca Roller Mills v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 197 Mich. 440.

¶ 64. Upon shipment of goods through a carrier to a third party, and on delivery to the shipper of the bill of lading, the consignee is prima facie the owner of the property.—King v. Van Slack, 193 Mich. 105.

¶ 65. The presumption that the consignee is the owner of goods shipped through a carrier to a third person, on delivery to the shipper of a bill of lading, may be overcome by proof of facts showing the actual transaction and the intent of the parties.—Ithaca Roller Mills v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 197 Mich. 440.

¶ 66. Where a contract for the purchase of goods calls for the delivery of the goods at the purchaser's town and the carrier acknowledges receipt of the goods for transportation from the seller, the contract is with the seller and the seller is the owner of the goods until delivery to the consignee and consequently can maintain an action in his own name for negligent performance of the contract of carriage resulting in the damage to the goods.—Ithaca Roller Mills v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 197 Mich. 440.

§ 24. ——Notice or knowledge of carrier.

¶ 67. The knowledge of the arbitrary mark of a consignee of goods by railroad, possessed by a former officer or agent of the railroad company, is not the knowledge of the company so as to affect the company with notice of his ownership of goods thus marked in subsequent transactions. Nor would notice to an agent of the company on one or more occasions, that certain arbitrary marks indicated a certain ownership, affect the company with notice of such ownership in any subsequent transactions, unless the agent then actually remembered the previous notice, and had reason to believe the marks still indicated the same ownership.—Great Western Ry. Co. of Canada v. Wheeler, 20 Mich. 419.

§ 25. Levy or seizure in transit.

Liability of carrier for misdelivery to officer, see post § 38.

Levy as excusing connecting carrier under Interstate Commerce Act, see post § 68.

Burden of proof of lawfulness of levy as defense, see post § 87.

Duty to surrender to sheriff attached forest products in transit, see Attachment. § 59.

Place for levy of attachment on property in transit, see Attachment, § 50.

¶ 68. A railroad company which delivers a carload of shingles to the consignee after service of a writ of attachment thereon, not only loses its right to storage thereon until demand by the sheriff, but also makes itself liable for their conversion.—Lake v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 132 Mich. 190.

Liability of carrier for goods seized by public officer, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 732-742.

D. ROUTE, TRANSPORTATION AND FINAL DELIVERY.

§ 26. General duties as to route and transportation.

Diversions and changes, see post § 27.

General duty and act of God as excuse for breach, see post II, E.

Directions or choice of car by shipper as excusing carrier from resultant loss or delay, see post § 42.
Liability for delay, misrouting, etc., see post § 46.
Reasonableness of time, see post § 47.
Authority of agent to make agreement for definite time of delivery, see ante ¶ 55; and see also Agency, ¶ 222.
Connecting carriers and forwarders, see post II, G.
Selection of connecting lines, see post, § 56.
Questions of pleading, evidence, jury questions, and instructions, see post II, J.
Suitable cars for live stock, see post § 97.
Statutory provisions as to routing, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8115.
Stoppages and breaking bulk or continuity of shipments, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8123.
For express shipments, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8133 (g).

¶ 69. It is the duty of a common carrier to safely transport goods, properly prepared for shipment and in good condition, intrusted to and accepted by it for that purpose, to their destination safely and with reasonable dispatch.—A. F. Young & Co. v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 201 Mich. 39.

¶ 70. Where a contract for the transportation of goods gives the carrier an option between modes of transportation, the option must be exercised with a view to the interest of the opposite party; and it is a breach of the contract to exercise it to his disadvantage unless it is done in good faith and under circumstances which seem to require it.—Blitz v. Union Steamboat Co., 51 Mich. 558.

¶ 71. In an action for damages on a contract for the carriage of goods by steamer the usual course of business in such transportation must be considered in determining the propriety of shipping under sail on part of the route.—Blitz v. Union Steamboat Co., 51 Mich. 558.

¶ 72. A common carrier cannot refuse to carry such property as is generally carried, but it must have the right to carry it on trains made up by itself and running on its own time; it cannot be required to make up special trains on demand, or drive such trains made up entirely by other persons, or of their cars.—Coup v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 56 Mich. 111.

¶ 73. A voluntary association raised $1,500 and put it in a bank to buy a monument, and the plaintiff contracted to furnish the monument, relying entirely on the $1,500 for payment, as the association had no other funds or financial responsibility. Against the protest of the plaintiff, the defendant railroad refused its regular service of shipment, and, at the instance of the association, provided special transportation, for the payment of which $700 was taken out of the $1,500 fund. Held, that in a suit for the $700, there was evidence from which the jury might infer liability upon the part of defendant, for interfering with plaintiff's contract rights.—Harrison Granite Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 154 Mich. 48.

§ 27. Diversions and changes of destination.

¶ 74. A consignee has no right to change the destination of a shipment without producing the bill of lading.—Perkett v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co., 175 Mich. 253.

§ 28. Delivery or notice of arrival.

To connecting carrier, see post § 54 et seq.
Sufficiency of acceptance, see post § 34.
Excuses for nondelivery or misdelivery, see post § 38.
Delivery or notice as terminating liability as carrier, see post § 41.
Commencement of warehouseman's liability, see post § 49.
Performance of carriage as basis for lien, see post § 75.
Contributory negligence in ignoring misleading notice, see post ¶ 260.
Statutory provisions, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8346.

¶ 75. Common carriers by railroad and watercraft are excused from a personal delivery of goods carried by them; but, in lieu of delivery, are required to notify the consignee, and their liability as carriers continues until the consignee has had a reasonable time to remove the property.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Ward, 2 Mich. 538.

§ 29. Person entitled to delivery; assignments and transfers.

Necessity of surrendering bill, see post §§ 30, 31.
Liability for misdelivery, see post §§ 36, 37.
Right of transferree to sue for injury to live stock, see post § 104.
Provisions of Uniform Bills of Lading Act, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8184 et seq.

¶ 76. Common carriers must recognize transfers of bills of lading and consignments of goods, and hence unless protected by proper vouchers cannot always assume to deal with consignments as actually and beneficially belonging to the consignee.—Walker v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 49 Mich. 446.

§ 30. Presentation and surrender of bill or papers.

Necessity of producing bill to effect diversion, see ante ¶ 74.
Where bill is to the order of the shipper with directions to notify another on arrival, see post § 31.

Possession of papers as excuse for delivery to holder, see also post § 38.

¶ 77. Where a bill of lading provides that its proper indorsement and surrender shall be required before delivery, such provision is for the benefit of the carrier and will not subject the carrier to liability for failure to require its production, on making delivery to one to whom the consignor has ordered that it shall be delivered.—Nelson Grain Co. v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 174 Mich. 80. (Moore and Bird, JJ., dissenting.)

§ 31. ——Under "order" bills of lading.

C. O. D. shipments, see also post § 37.
Liability for act of connecting carrier under Interstate Commerce Act, see post § 62.
Sufficiency of evidence of wrongful delivery after assignment, see post § 90.

¶ 78. A carrier delivering goods without requiring the presentation of an outstanding order bill of lading with draft attached, does so at its peril.—Turnbull v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 183 Mich. 213.

¶ 79. A provision of an order bill of lading with draft attached, requiring its surrender to the carrier before the delivery of a consignment, is for the mutual protection of both shipper and the carrier.—Turnbull v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 183 Mich. 213.

¶ 80. A shipper placing goods in the hands of a carrier may rely on a condition of an order bill of lading with draft attached, requiring the surrender thereof to the carrier as a condition precedent to the delivery of the goods on arrival at destination.—Turnbull v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 183 Mich. 213.

¶ 82. Where perishable property is shipped subject to inspection, under an order bill of lading with draft attached, a telegram from the consignor directing delivery to be made with the privilege of rejecting frozen goods at his expense, will not permit the carrier to make delivery without the surrender of the original bill of lading.—Berwick Store Co. v. Starks, 185 Mich. 473.

¶ 83. Where goods are consigned under an order bill of lading with draft attached subject to the order of one other than the consignor, the carrier is answerable to the latter for making delivery on the direction of such order consignee without requiring the presentation of such bill of lading.—Turnbull v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 183 Mich. 213; Thomas v. Blair, 185 Mich. 422.

¶ 84. A carrier which delivers goods without the presentation of an outstanding order bill of lading with draft attached, is answerable to the consignor or a bona fide holder of the bill.—Turnbull v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 183 Mich. 213.

¶ 85. Where goods are delivered to a carrier upon an order bill of lading signed by the consignee and by another person as shippers, and the goods are delivered upon a forged bill of lading signed by the consignee, without surrender of the outstanding order bill of lading, the carrier is liable to the other shipper, the real owner of goods.—Churchill v. Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co., 188 Mich. 376.

§ 32. Place, manner and limits of delivery.

Notice in lieu of personal delivery, see ante § 28.
Carload shipments to team tracks and particular sidings, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8115(d).
Statutory provisions as to receiving at station and notifying of arrival, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8346.

¶ 86. Where an express company, in apparent good faith, and with due regard to the public requirements, has assumed to fix limits in a city beyond which it will not call for or deliver packages, it is under no obligation, as to one having knowledge of the limits so fixed, to extend its service beyond them; and this is so, although such limits extend farther from its office in one direction than in another.—Bullard v. American Express Co., 107 Mich. 695.

¶ 87. An express company which undertakes to deliver by a certain time a package addressed to the Secretary United States Treas. Dept., Washington, D. C., and which within the specified time delivers it to the usual custodian of such department, is not liable for its failure to reach a certain bureau of the treasury to which the company has not assumed or agreed to deliver it.—Aldrich Car Seal Mfg. Co. v. American Express Co., 117 Mich. 32.

¶ 88. In an action against an express company for failure to deliver a basket of peaches, it appeared that it was left at the rear entrance of the house in which plaintiff had formerly lived. Plaintiff being out of the city, did not learn of the delivery until the fruit had become worthless. Held, that the carrier having failed to make proper delivery while there was still time, was liable for the damages.—Stowe v. United States Express Co., 179 Mich. 349.

¶ 89. Where a carrier's contract called for delivery at a specified dock in a certain port, conveyance to the port is not enough unless delivery be dispensed with or prevented by the owner.—Johnston v. Davis, 60 Mich. 56.

§ 33. ——Depositing in warehouse.

As misdelivery of C. O. D. shipment, see post ¶ 99.
Duty and liability as warehouseman, see post II, F.
Delay in removing as absolving from liability as warehouseman, see post § 53.
Right of lien for advances where warehouseman's custody is in violation of carrier's contract, see post ¶ 196.
Grain shipments, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8345.

¶ 90. Long acquiescence by consignees in the delivery of freight by a common carrier to an independent warehouseman from whom they receive it and by whom they are notified of its arrival and to whom they give receipts relieves the carrier from liability for safekeeping after delivery to a warehouseman.—Black v. Ashley, 80 Mich. 90.

§ 34. Acceptance by consignee.

Sufficiency of delivery, see ante §§ 28-33.
Duty to remove goods, termination of liability of carrier, see post § 41.
Neglect in accepting as jury question, see post § 94.

¶ 91. Plaintiff shipped a car of fruit over defendant railroad, the bill of lading being to plaintiff's order. Plaintiff's draft and order to deliver to the purchaser of the fruit were sent to a bank at the place of destination. The purchaser of the fruit upon its arrival broke open the seal of the car and inspected it, defendant having placed no lock on the car. The purchaser then refused to accept the draft or the fruit. Held, in a suit in assumpsit for failure to carry and deliver the car, that defendant was not liable for having made an unauthorized delivery of the fruit.—Yuille-Miller Co. v. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co., 164 Mich. 58.

¶ 92. A consignee of goods which are to be delivered at the consignee's town does not, by making an inspection of the goods in the railroad freighthouse in his town, accept them, and thereby make a good delivery of them.—Ithaca Roller Mills v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 197 Mich. 440.

¶ 93. There is a delivery of a car of potatoes where the consignee receives them under a joint account deal, whereby consignor and consignee are to divide the profits and loss, if any, takes possession of them upon their arrival in a damaged condition and transfers the unfrozen potatoes to a car ordered from the railroad company in order to put them in a salable condition.—Otto v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co., 196 Mich. 746.

§ 35. Right to question delivery; assent and estoppel.

¶ 94. The consignor of goods by rail cannot sue the carrier for them if the latter delivers them to the wrong person on written authority to do so from the consignee, even though the consignee states that he has no claim on the goods; a fortiori he cannot if he himself has assented to such delivery.—Dobbin v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 56 Mich. 522.

¶ 95. Plaintiff shipped a carload of plums over defendant railway. The consignees wired and wrote plaintiff that the fruit was defective and they would not accept it unless plaintiff would allow a reduction of fifty dollars on the draft. Meanwhile plaintiff had wired defendant's agent asking him to notify the consignees and to wire the date of arrival and delivery. This telegram was not sent out in response to the telegram and letter of the consignees, but merely to serve as directions to defendant as to delivery. Defendant's agent wired that the car had arrived and had been delivered. It appeared that plaintiff did not rely on this telegram, and was suspicious as to the fact of delivery. He made no further inquiries of the bank holding the draft as to whether the consignees had made payment. The consignees rejected the plums. Plaintiff sued defendant railway for making an unauthorized delivery. Held, the defendant was not estopped by the telegram of its agent from denying that it made any delivery to the consignees.—Yuille-Miller Co. v. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co., 164 Mich. 58.

§ 36. Liability for misdelivery.

For improper surrender after levy, see ante § 25.
Delivery by connecting line without bill as required by contract, see post ¶ 148.
By connecting carrier under Interstate Commerce Act, see post § 62.

¶ 96. Delivery by a carrier of goods to a third party without the consent of the consignor or consignee is a conversion and renders the carrier liable in trover.—Gibbons v. Farwell, 63 Mich. 344.

¶ 97. A carrier is liable for damages for the misdelivery of goods reshipped to point of origin and there delivered to the former partner of the consignor, who had wrongfully obtained the shipping receipt, where it appears that the agent of the company who made such delivery had no knowledge at the time of the delivery of the former partnership.—Adrian Knitting Co. v. Wabash Ry. Co., 145 Mich. 323.

¶ 98. Plaintiff shipped two carloads of beans to consignees, designated by a commission firm, the bills of lading being issued in the name of the latter as shippers. The commission firm sent forged bills of lading to consignees, to whom the cars were delivered. Plaintiff having failed to notify the carrier that it desired to retain title until the shipments were paid for, and the carrier having delivered the property on the order of the shippers and apparent owners, the carrier is not liable.—Nelson Grain Co. v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 174 Mich. 80. (Moore and Bird, JJ., dissenting.)

§ 37. ——C. O. D. shipments.

Freight shipments under order bills, see ante § 31.

Liability while holding for collection, see post ¶ 127.

Liability of forwarder of C. O. D. shipment, see post ¶ 155.

¶ 99. The instructions for carriage were that defendant should deliver certain goods to the express company, who in turn were to deliver them to one M. on the payment of a balance due upon them. The defendant delivered them to a warehouseman without instructions, and he delivered them to M. without payment. M. was insolvent. Held, that defendant was liable for the amount of such balance.—Hutchings v. Ladd, 16 Mich. 493.

Liability of express carrier for loss or damage due to negligence in handling C. O. D. shipment, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 100-113.

§ 38. Excuses for misdelivery or nondelivery.

General liability for loss or injury, see post II, E.

¶ 100. If a carrier's servant delivers the goods to an officer whose writ gives him no legal right to take them the carrier is liable.—Gibbons v. Farwell, 63 Mich. 344.

¶ 101. Goods taken under a chattel mortgage were by the mortgagee delivered to a carrier for shipment, and were seized in transit by the sheriff on an attachment against the mortgagor. The carrier at once gave notice of the seizure. Held, that seizure on regular process exonerated the carrier for non-delivery at the place of consignment.—Pingree v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 66 Mich. 143.

¶ 102. A custom of defendant carrier together with some other carriers of delivering goods to any person who might produce the shipping receipt, cannot avail to excuse a carrier from the burden which the law casts upon it, where on reshipment to point of origin it delivered the goods to one wrongfully in possession of the shipping receipt, it appearing that such custom was unknown to the consignor.—Adrian Knitting Co. v. Wabash Ry. Co., 145 Mich. 323.

E. LIABILITY FOR LOSS, INJURY OR DELAY.

§ 39. General duty and liability.

In carriage of live stock, see post III.

Duties as to route, transportation, time and delivery at destination, see ante II, D.

Loss by fire, cold, heat, or perishable nature of goods, see post §§ 43-45.

Liabilities of connecting and successive carriers, see post § 57 et seq.

General questions of procedure, including pleading, evidence, jury questions, and instructions, see post II, J.

Burden of proof as to negligence, see post § 87.

Burden of proof of shipper's liability for injury to cars, see post ¶ 226.

Liability of principal for acts of agents generally see Agency, II.

Liability for injury of person at freight house or tracks delivering or receiving goods, or there for other purpose incident to shipment, see Railroads, VIII, B.

¶ 103. Common carriers of freight are liable for any damage not caused by the act of God or of the public enemy.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537.

¶ 104. By a general doctrine of the common law, a common carrier is responsible on the implied contract for all loss of, or injury to, goods received for carriage, except in case of loss caused by the act of God or the public enemy or the fault of the owner.—Black v. Ashley, 80 Mich. 90.

¶ 105. It is the duty of an expressman, contracting for hire, to convey a trunk from a railway station to a private residence to watch over it, protect it, and carry it safely, and he is liable for the loss of the trunk due to its being stolen at a time when he has left his wagon in the street and is delivering a trunk at the residence of another person.—Baker v. Maher, How. N. P. 89.

Liability of carrier for injury to shipment while car on sidetrack en route, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 745-763.

Liability of express carrier for loss or damage due to negligence in handling C. O. D. shipment, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 100-113.

Application of the third section of the Harter Act (27 Stat. at Large 445), in actions against shipowners to recover for livery while there was still time, was liable for the damages.—Stowe v. United States Express Co., 179 Mich. 349.

¶ 89. Where a carrier's contract called for delivery at a specified dock in a certain port, conveyance to the port is not enough unless delivery be dispensed with or prevented by the owner.—Johnston v. Davis, 60 Mich. 56.

§ 33. ——Depositing in warehouse.

Grain shipments, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8345.

¶ 90. Long acquiescence by consignees in the delivery of freight by a common carrier to an independent warehouseman from whom they receive it and by whom they are notified of its arrival and to whom they give receipts relieves the carrier from liability for safekeeping after delivery to a warehouseman.—Black v. Ashley, 80 Mich. 90.

§ 34. Acceptance by consignee.

Sufficiency of delivery, see ante §§ 28-33.
Duty to remove goods, termination of liability of carrier, see post § 41.
Neglect in accepting as jury question, see post § 94.

¶ 91. Plaintiff shipped a car of fruit over defendant railroad, the bill of lading being to plaintiff's order. Plaintiff's draft and order to deliver to the purchaser of the fruit were sent to a bank at the place of destination. The purchaser of the fruit upon its arrival broke open the seal of the car and inspected it, defendant having placed no lock on the car. The purchaser then refused to accept the draft or the fruit. Held, in a suit in assumpsit for failure to carry and deliver the car, that defendant was not liable for having made an unauthorized delivery of the fruit.—Yuille-Miller Co. v. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co., 164 Mich. 58.

¶ 92. A consignee of goods which are to be delivered at the consignee's town does not, by making an inspection of the goods in the railroad freighthouse in his town, accept them, and thereby make a good delivery of them.—Ithaca Roller Mills v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 197 Mich. 440.

¶ 93. There is a delivery of a car of potatoes where the consignee receives them under a joint account deal, whereby consignor and consignee are to divide the profits and loss, if any, takes possession of them upon their arrival in a damaged condition and transfers the unfrozen potatoes to a car ordered from the railroad company in order to put them in a salable condition.—Otto v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co., 196 Mich. 746.

§ 35. Right to question delivery; assent and estoppel.

¶ 94. The consignor of goods by rail cannot sue the carrier for them if the latter delivers them to the wrong person on written authority to do so from the consignee, even though the consignee states that he has no claim on the goods; a fortiori he cannot if he himself has assented to such delivery.—Dobbin v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 56 Mich. 522.

¶ 95. Plaintiff shipped a carload of plums over defendant railway. The consignees wired and wrote plaintiff that the fruit was defective and they would not accept it unless plaintiff would allow a reduction of fifty dollars on the draft. Meanwhile plaintiff had wired defendant's agent asking him to notify the consignees and to wire the date of arrival and delivery. This telegram was not sent out in response to the telegram and letter of the consignees, but merely to serve as directions to defendant as to delivery. Defendant's agent wired that the car had arrived and had been delivered. It appeared that plaintiff did not rely on this telegram, and was suspicious as to the fact of delivery. He made no further inquiries of the bank holding the draft as to whether the consignees had made payment. The consignees rejected the plums. Plaintiff sued defendant railway for making an unauthorized delivery. Held, the defendant was not estopped by the telegram of its agent from denying that it made any delivery to the consignees.—Yuille-Miller Co. v. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co., 164 Mich. 58.

§ 36. Liability for misdelivery.

For improper surrender after levy, see ante § 25.
Delivery by connecting line without bill as required by contract, see post ¶ 148.
By connecting carrier under Interstate Commerce Act, see post § 62.

¶ 96. Delivery by a carrier of goods to a third party without the consent of the consignor or consignee is a conversion and renders the carrier liable in trover.—Gibbons v. Farwell, 63 Mich. 344.

¶ 97. A carrier is liable for damages for the misdelivery of goods reshipped to point of origin and there delivered to the former partner of the consignor, who had wrongfully obtained the shipping receipt, where it appears that the agent of the company who made such delivery had no knowledge at the time of the delivery of the former partnership.—Adrian Knitting Co. v. Wabash Ry. Co., 145 Mich. 323.

¶ 98. Plaintiff shipped two carloads of beans to consignees, designated by a commission firm, the bills of lading being issued in the name of the latter as shippers. The commission firm sent forged bills of lading to consignees, to whom the cars were delivered. Plaintiff having failed to notify the carrier that it desired to retain title until the shipments were paid for, and the carrier having delivered the property on the order of the shippers and apparent owners, the carrier is not liable.—Nelson Grain Co. v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 174 Mich. 80. (Moore and Bird, JJ., dissenting.)

§ 37. ——C. O. D. shipments.

Freight shipments under order bills, see ante § 31.

Liability while holding for collection, see post ¶ 127.

Liability of forwarder of C. O. D. shipment, see post ¶ 155.

¶ 99. The instructions for carriage were that defendant should deliver certain goods to the express company, who in turn were to deliver them to one M. on the payment of a balance due upon them. The defendant delivered them to a warehouseman without instructions, and he delivered them to M. without payment. M. was insolvent. Held, that defendant was liable for the amount of such balance.—Hutchings v. Ladd, 16 Mich. 493.

Liability of express carrier for loss or damage due to negligence in handling C. O. D. shipment, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 100-113.

§ 38. Excuses for misdelivery or nondelivery.

General liability for loss or injury, see post II, E.

¶ 100. If a carrier's servant delivers the goods to an officer whose writ gives him no legal right to take them the carrier is liable.—Gibbons v. Farwell, 63 Mich. 344.

¶ 101. Goods taken under a chattel mortgage were by the mortgagee delivered to a carrier for shipment, and were seized in transit by the sheriff on an attachment against the mortgagor. The carrier at once gave notice of the seizure. Held, that seizure on regular process exonerated the carrier for non-delivery at the place of consignment.—Pingree v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 66 Mich. 143.

¶ 102. A custom of defendant carrier together with some other carriers of delivering goods to any person who might produce the shipping receipt, cannot avail to excuse a carrier from the burden which the law casts upon it, where on reshipment to point of origin it delivered the goods to one wrongfully in possession of the shipping receipt, it appearing that such custom was unknown to the consignor.—Adrian Knitting Co. v. Wabash Ry. Co., 145 Mich. 323.

E. LIABILITY FOR LOSS, INJURY OR DELAY.

§ 39. General duty and liability.

In carriage of live stock, see post III.

Duties as to route, transportation, time and delivery at destination, see ante II, D.

Loss by fire, cold, heat, or perishable nature of goods, see post §§ 43-45.

Liabilities of connecting and successive carriers, see post § 57 et seq.

General questions of procedure, including pleading, evidence, jury questions, and instructions, see post II, J.

Burden of proof as to negligence, see post § 87.

Burden of proof of shipper's liability for injury to cars, see post ¶ 226.

Liability of principal for acts of agents generally see Agency, II.

Liability for injury of person at freight house or tracks delivering or receiving goods, or there for other purpose incident to shipment, see Railroads, VIII, B.

¶ 103. Common carriers of freight are liable for any damage not caused by the act of God or of the public enemy.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537.

¶ 104. By a general doctrine of the common law, a common carrier is responsible on the implied contract for all loss of, or injury to, goods received for carriage, except in case of loss caused by the act of God or the public enemy or the fault of the owner.—Black v. Ashley, 80 Mich. 90.

¶ 105. It is the duty of an expressman, contracting for hire, to convey a trunk from a railway station to a private residence to watch over it, protect it, and carry it safely, and he is liable for the loss of the trunk due to its being stolen at a time when he has left his wagon in the street and is delivering a trunk at the residence of another person.—Baker v. Maher, How. N. P. 89.

Liability of carrier for injury to shipment while car on sidetrack en route, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 745-763.

Liability of express carrier for loss or damage due to negligence in handling C. O. D. shipment, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 100-113.

Application of the third section of the Harter Act (27 Stat. at Large 445), in actions against shipowners to recover for loss or damage to cargo, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 56-85.

Perils of the sea as a defense in actions to recover for loss of or damage to cargo, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 152-156.
Liability of shipowner for loss or damage to cargo due to negligence in loading or unloading, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 245-252.

§ 40. Act of God, and other extraordinary causes.

In live stock shipments, see post § 103.
Excuses for nondelivery or misdelivery, see also ante § 38.
Excuse for loss of baggage, see also post § 249.

¶ 106. While railroad companies must always be suitably prepared to receive and transport promptly and safely all freight that might reasonably be expected under ordinary circumstances, they are not bound to be prepared for such extraordinary contingencies as no ordinary prudence could foresee, and are not liable, as for unreasonable delay, for necessary delays in transportation arising therefrom.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Burrows, 33 Mich. 6.

Liability of carrier for loss of goods by flood, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 1-30.
Liability of carrier of goods touching carriage or delivery of accepted freights under conditions imposed by military law, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 917-931.

§ 41. Beginning and termination of liability.

Among connecting carriers, see post § 58.
Pleading the duty, see post § 82.
Burden of proof and presumptions, see post § 87.

¶ 107. The liability of a common carrier of goods, as such, continues until the consignee has been notified of their arrival and has had a reasonable time in the common course of business, to take them away after such notification, and this rule applies though the consignee knew the probable date of shipment and the probable time of arrival.—Walters v. Detroit United Ry., 139 Mich. 303.

¶ 108. A carrier was not responsible for the destruction by fire of goods which a consignee had left on the carrier's premises for several days to suit his convenience as to their removal.—Stapleton v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 187.

¶ 109. The liability of a carrier is discharged by a delivery of the goods. If he is an intermediate carrier, this duty is performed by a delivery to the succeeding carrier for further transportation, and an acceptance by him.—Pratt v. Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada, 95 U. S. 43, 24 L. ed. 336.

Liability of carrier for injury to shipment while car on sidetrack at destination or shipping point, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 816-840.

§ 42. Directions or choice of shipper contributing to loss.

Leaving goods in warehouse until frozen, see post ¶ 132.

¶ 110. A concert singer contracted with certain persons to give a concert at a certain point, and the latter expressly stipulated that she should furnish them the posters announcing it, not later than the 21st inst. The posters were printed in another town, and were delivered to the express company on the evening of the 20th to be forwarded. The person in charge of the express office was told that the forwarders wanted the package to go on "No. 5," in order to make connection, as "they" wanted the package and did not want it to be delayed. Nothing was said about its contents or purpose, or any necessity for its delivery next day, nor was any departure from the usual course of business asked for. The package was sent by train No. 5, but owing to the running arrangements it did not reach its destination until the evening of the 21st, and could not be delivered until the next day. The parties who had contracted for the concert accordingly canceled the arrangement, and the concert singer, claiming to be injured in consequence, sued the express company for negligence in not making seasonable carriage and delivery of the package. Held, that the action could not lie.—United States Express Co. v. Root, 47 Mich. 231.

¶ 111. The consignee of glass cannot hold the railroad company liable for damages on the theory that a defective car was furnished where there was an agreement between the railroad company and the consignor permitting the latter to select from among the cars delivered upon its siding such cars as it deemed fit and suitable for the purpose of shipping its glass and such selection had been made in this instance.—Frohlich v. Pennsylvania Co., 138 Mich. 116.

§ 43. Injury from or destruction by fire.

Liability during storage in warehouse, see post II, F.
Burning while awaiting shipment, see also ante ¶ 36.
Limitation against liability from fire, see post §§ 67-70.
Due to delay in removing goods, see also ante ¶ 108.
Burden of proof of negligence, see post § 88.
Questions for jury, see post §§ 91-94.

¶ 112. U. S. Rev. Stat., § 4282, exempting vessel-owners from liability for loss or damage to goods by fire, is limited in its application to fires happening on ship-board.—Black v. Ashley, 80 Mich. 90.

§ 44. Perishable goods.

Surrender on order bill without presentment of bill, see ante § 31.
Sufficiency of evidence of care or neglect, see post § 90.
Right of carrier to sell, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8420.

¶ 113. Giving relief goods the preference in order of transportation at the time of such a public calamity as the Chicago fire of 1871 is not negligence towards perishable goods retarded in transit thereby, the necessity being paramount.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Burrows, 33 Mich. 6.

¶ 114. Beans need not be shipped as perishable freight in order to permit a recovery for their deterioration in quality as the result of an unreasonable delay on the part of a carrier in making delivery at their destination.—Lyons v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada, 185 Mich. 417.

Duty of carrier in transportation of live fish, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 588.

§ 45. Injury from cold or heat or weather.

Delay in removing from warehouse as cause of freezing, see post ¶ 132.
Loss on connecting line, see post § 59.
Limitations against liability, see post § 67.
Burden of proving failure to ice car properly, see post § 88.
Sufficiency of evidence, see post § 90.
Place of failure to re-ice as jury question, see post § 93.

¶ 115. It is negligence for a carrier to receive in a refrigerator car perishable goods, which will suffer from a temperature of 8 degrees or less, on December 11th in Buffalo, N. Y., and on the next morning to remove them to a warehouse where they remained for some days exposed to lower temperatures, though it is the custom to unload shipments less than a car load and though they were sufficiently protected in the car.—Burroughs v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 67 Mich. 351, affirming lower court by equal division.

¶ 116. After a carrier was negligent at destination in taking perishable goods out of a protected car and placing them in an unprotected warehouse without notice to the consignee, the consignee's delay in calling for them or giving directions for their disposal did not avoid the carrier's liability.—Burroughs v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 67 Mich. 351, affirming lower court by equal division.

¶ 117. Under a bill of lading providing for the icing at G. of the cars containing the perishable fruit in question, and for re-icing as often as necessary to keep the car thoroughly iced, the carrier was not relieved from responsibility by the shipper's knowledge of insufficient icing of the cars before their departure, where they had no opportunity to relieve the situation, or honestly believed that the fruit would reach G. without injury.—Johnson v. Toledo, S. & M. Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 596.

¶ 118. An unreasonable delay in shipment of perishable produce is not the proximate cause of freezing of the produce thereafter.—Lardie v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co., 192 Mich. 77.

Liability of carrier for damages due to failure properly to ice car, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 572-587.
Liability for damage to freight from failure to keep car properly heated, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 873-878.
Liability of carrier for failure to supply refrigerator car, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 1071-1082.

§ 46. Injury from delay, misrouting, etc.

Delay due to directions given by shipper, see also ante § 42.
Delay of perishable goods, see also ante § 44.
Delay as cause of freezing, see ante ¶ 118.
Delay causing loss on connecting line, see post § 59.
Reasonableness of time, see post § 47.
Variance as to point or manner of delivery from allegations, see post ¶ 215.
Burden of proving that delay did not cause loss, see post § 88.

¶ 119. A manufacturer under contract with a voluntary association for the manufacture and delivery by a certain date at a certain place of a monument, is entitled to a verdict for damages, where, in an action against a carrier for intermeddling with such contract, it appears that such carrier, with full knowledge of all the facts, after gaining possession of such monument by plaintiff's consignment of it to itself at the point of destination, refused its regular service to plaintiff, thus preventing plaintiff from performing its contract, but that such defendant, by agreement with such association, rendered special service, which was unnecessary, carrying such monument to its destination, over the protest of plaintiff, for which defendant received from such association, which was financially irresponsible, in payment a large part of a fund raised for the purchase of such monument, thereby diverting to the defendant money, which otherwise would have been paid to plaintiff, and which was, in consequence, wholly lost to plaintiff, regardless of the fact that such carrier delivered such monument in good condition at its destination by the date agreed upon.—Harrison Granite Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 145 Mich. 712.

§ 47. Reasonable time and delay.

In carriage of live stock, see post III.
Duty to carry in reasonable time, see ante § 26.
Burden of proof of negligent delay, see post § 88.
Admissibility of evidence as to usual time required, see post § 89.
Sufficiency of evidence, see post § 90.
As question of fact, see post § 92.

¶ 120. The question of unreasonable delay in railroad transportation is determined by ascertaining the average running time under the circumstances existing at the time of the delay.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Burrows, 33 Mich. 6.

48. Extent of liability; undeclared value.

Limitations of liability to declared value, see post § 70.

¶ 121. Where the carrier makes no inquiry and no artifice is used to mislead him as to the value of goods, he is responsible for loss, however great the value may be.—Farnsworth v. National Exp. Co., 166 Mich. 676.

¶ 122. Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300, providing for the filing of schedules with the railroad commission and in the various offices of the carrier and forbidding the carrier to depart therefrom in making its charges, does not prevent the carrier from being liable for the full value of a lost package where no inquiry was made as to its value, notwithstanding, had the value been disclosed, it would have been required to carry at a greater charge.—Farnsworth v. National Exp. Co., 166 Mich. 676.

¶ 123. Where the shipper obtains a lower rate in consideration that the value of the property be limited he is estopped to recover more than the agreed valuation.—Harrison Granite Co. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 175 Mich. 144.

F. CARRIER AS WAREHOUSEMAN, AND LIABILITY AS SUCH.

§ 49. In general; when warehouseman character commences.

¶ 124. While the same party may be both carrier and warehouseman at the same time, the two functions cannot be so mingled as to attach to the same property at the same time.—Buckley v. Great Western R. Co., 18 Mich. 121.

Liability of carrier as insurer or warehouseman where goods are damaged or destroyed while in vehicle of transportation before or after transit, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 277-291.

§ 50. After arrival and pending delivery or inspection.

¶ 125. A railroad company's liability for goods in warehouse awaiting delivery to the consignee is as common carrier, not as warehouseman, unless there is usage or agreement to the contrary.—Buckley v. Great Western Ry. Co., 18 Mich. 121; Feige v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 62 Mich. 1; McMillan v. Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co., 16 Mich. 79 (equally divided court).

¶ 126. The Michigan Central Railroad Company is liable under its charter as warehouseman, and not as common carrier, for goods transported by it and deposited in its warehouse awaiting delivery to the final consignee.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Hale, 6 Mich. 243, overruling Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Ward, 2 Mich. 538.

¶ 127. The liability of an express company holding at their point of destination goods sent C. O. D. in order to give the consignees an opportunity to pay for and take such goods, or until the consignees who have been notified appear, is that of a warehouseman and not of a common carrier, and there can be no recovery against it for loss by fire without its fault.—Hasse v. American Express Co., 94 Mich. 133.

Liability of carrier for injury to shipment while car on sidetrack at shipping point or destination, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 816-840.

§ 51. ——Pending delivery to connection.

See also post ¶ 142.

¶ 128. A railroad company which has entered into a contract to deliver flour on shipboard continues liable as common carrier until this delivery is made; and if the flour is destroyed in its warehouse, it cannot claim that its liability, while the flour was there, was that of warehouseman merely.—Moore v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 3 Mich. 23.

¶ 129. The Michigan Central Railroad is, under its charter, liable as warehouseman for goods transported by it and deposited in its warehouse awaiting delivery to an intermediate carrier for further transportation. —Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Lantz, 32 Mich 502; Contra, Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Mineral Springs Mfg. Co., 16 Wall. (83 U. S.) 318, 21 L. ed. 297.

¶ 130. The provision of a railroad charter that the company shall be responsible for goods on deposit in any of their depots awaiting delivery as warehousemen and not as common carriers refers to property that has reached its final destination and is there awaiting delivery to its owner.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Mineral Springs Mfg. Co., 16 Wall. (83 U. S.) 318, 21 L. ed. 297.

§ 52. Duty and care required as warehouseman.

See also generally, Warehousing.
Limitations of liability as warehouseman, see post § 69.

¶ 131. Where the company is prohibited by its charter from charging as warehouseman for storage, it is liable for property so deposited as gratuitous bailee only.—Michigan Southern & Northern I. R. Co. v. Shurtz, 7 Mich. 515.

§ 53. Delay of consignee in removing goods.

¶ 132. A delay of 6 days and 12 days respectively in removing shipments of potatoes from the warehouse at point of destination in the winter time, after notice to consignees, relieves a carrier from liability for damage by freezing.—Barber v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 197 Mich. 643.

G. CONNECTING CARRIERS AND FORWARDERS.

§ 54. In general; duty and relation to parties.

Of passengers, see post IV, F.
Duty as to receiving and interchanging traffic, see ante § 6.
Implication as to through shipment or billing, see post § 55.
Warehouseman's liability pending delivery to connection, see ante § 51.
Intrastate shipments, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8115(e).

¶ 133. In the absence of any special agreement or contract as to trains going over connecting lines, it is the duty of the carrier to carry safely to the end of its line, and there deliver to the next carrier in the route beyond, and by so doing the carrier is discharged.—Rickerson Roller Mill Co. v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 67 Mich. 110.

¶ 134. A carrier of goods must receive and forward articles on the usual terms and deliver them in the condition in which he received them; he has ordinarily no means of opening packages and examining their contents, and has nothing to do with previous dealings with the property by independent carriers.—Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Kirkwood, 45 Mich. 51.

¶ 135. A carrier of goods acts as agent of the consignee in transferring them to another carrier, and not as the latter's agent.—Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Kirkwood, 45 Mich. 51.

§ 55. Through contracts and shipments.

As assuming liability for succeeding carrier, see post §§ 59, 62.
Sufficiency of evidence of contract, see post § 90.
Evidence as to joint liability as baggage carriers, see post § 257.
Statutory regulations as to through billing and rates, see generally Comp. L. 1915, chap. 155.

¶ 136. Where a carrier receives goods marked for a particular destination beyond his line, and does not expressly undertake to deliver them at the point designated, the implied contract is only to transport them over his own line and forward from its terminus. —McMillan v. Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co., 16 Mich. 79.

¶ 137. A railroad company receiving and receipting goods for transportation to a point beyond the terminus of its road is not to be understood as undertaking to carry the goods beyond such terminus, unless there is an express promise to that effect.—Detroit & B. C. R. Co. v. McKenzie, 43 Mich. 609.

¶ 138. By a contract for the shipment of goods to a point known to the shipper to be off the line of the defendant carrier, the latter agreed to deliver the goods in good order "at —— station," and further "to forward the property to the place of destination as per margin, but are not to be held liable on account thereof after the same shall be delivered as above." The station on defendant's line where transfer occurred was not filled in. Held, that the contract was not one for through carriage.—Rickerson Roller Mill Co. v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 67 Mich. 110.

¶ 139. A shipper delivered two car loads of lumber to a railroad company, consigned to a point beyond its road, and received a bill of lading, in which it was stated that the lumber was received "for transportation by [defendant] to its destination, if upon the railroad company's line of road—otherwise, to the place where said property is to be received by the connecting carrier—upon the terms and conditions on the back" of the bill of lading. Among the conditions was one providing that the railroad company, "in forwarding the lumber from the point where it leaves its road, is to be held as a forwarder only." Held, that the mere fact that the railroad company gave the shipper a through rate for freight would not, in view of the terms expressed in the bill of lading, and upon which it received the lumber, make the railroad company liable as a carrier beyond its own line.—McEacheran v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 101 Mich. 264.

§ 56. Route and selection of connections.

See also ante ¶ 70.

¶ 140. The initial carrier may deliver freight to a connecting carrier of its own choice in the absence of directions from the shipper and of contract routing.—Goehrend v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 146 Mich. 497.

§ 57. Degree and extent of liability.

Termination of original and commencement of connecting liability, see post § 58.
Initial carrier's liability under Interstate Commerce Act, see post §§ 62, 63.
Limitations on liability to own line, see post § 68.
Place of injury as jury question, see post § 93.
Liability of initial carrier, and right of action over against connecting carriers, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 387, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 8115.

¶ 141. Where loss is occasioned by the successive delays of different common carriers, one of them cannot properly be held liable for the whole injury.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Burrows, 33 Mich. 6.

§ 58. Termination and transfer of liability.

See also ante ¶ 109.
Injury occurring after turning over to succeeding line, see post § 59.
Burden of proof on terminal carrier as to condition when received, see post § 87.

¶ 142. A common carrier's liability for freight that is to be transferred to another carrier continues until it is so transferred, or at least until such notification has been given to the other carrier as amounts to a tender of delivery. And if the first carrier merely stores the freight in a warehouse of its own, where the other is in the habit of taking it at its convenience, and the freight while so stored is destroyed, the first carrier is answerable for its value.—Condon v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 55 Mich. 218.

§ 59. Liability for injury after delivery to connection.

Under limiting provisions in bill or contract, see post § 68.
Burden of proof that liability was incurred on other line, see post § 87.
Jury questions, see post § 93.

¶ 143. If a carrier agrees to carry to a certain point chattels which are destined to a more distant market, and by his delay causes damage to the shipper for the non-arrival of the chattels in a reasonable time at their ultimate destination, he is responsible for such damages as much as if it had occurred upon his own line.—Sisson v. Cleveland & T. R. Co., 14 Mich. 489.

¶ 144. Proof of negligent delay by a subsequent carrier, and that without it the injury would have been avoided, is a complete answer to an action seeking to hold the first carrier responsible by reason of its delay for the injury to fruit by freezing while in custody of the subsequent one.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Burrows, 33 Mich. 6.

¶ 145. The freezing of apples while being transported by a subsequent carrier is not so direct a result of unreasonable delay by the first carrier as to make such first carrier liable therefor by reason of such delay.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Burrows, 33 Mich. 6.

¶ 146. Under a bill of lading issued for a car of perishable fruit consigned to a locality in another state, and providing that the property was received "subject to carriers' liability under the common law and statutes" in force in the various states through which the goods might pass, and providing for reicing as often as necessary to keep the car thoroughly iced, the carrier was liable to the shipper for any part of the loss due to the negligence of connecting roads.—Johnson v. Toledo, S. & M. Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 596.

§ 60. ——Delivery to improper or forbidden connection.

¶ 147. Where a transportation company undertook to forward goods from New York to Detroit, "by sail on the lake," all dangers of the lake, etc., to be at the risk of the owner, it was held that the contract was restrictive as to the mode of transportation; and the company having departed from it, by shipping the goods by steam instead of by sail, and the goods having been lost on the lake, the company was liable to the owners for their value.—Merrick v. Webster, 3 Mich. 268.

§ 61. ——For misdelivery or nondelivery.

¶ 148. Where a contract for the shipment of goods by a carrier to a point beyond the line of its road specifies that the property shall not be delivered except upon a bill of lading, the delivery of the goods by such carrier to one of its connecting lines, to be forwarded, accompanied by the necessary information concerning the delivery, relieves such carrier from liability for a delivery without the presentation of the bill of lading.—Rickerson Roller Mill Co. v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 67 Mich. 110.

§ 62. Liability under Interstate Commerce Act.

Excuses of initial carrier, see post § 63.
Pleading the bill, see post § 81.

¶ 149. Under Act of Congress of June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 7, 34 Stat. L. 595, an initial carrier is liable for the loss, damage or injury caused to property by the connecting carrier.—Sturges v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 166 Mich. 231.

¶ 150. An initial carrier is, under 34 U. S. St. 594, Fed. St. Ann. Supp. 1909, pp. 273, 274, answerable to a shipper for the value of a consignment wrongfully delivered by the final carrier pursuant to directions of the person subject to whose order the shipment was made, without first requiring the presentation of an outstanding order bill of lading with draft attached.—Thomas v. Blair, 185 Mich. 422.

¶ 151. Plaintiffs took from defendant railroad a "straight" bill of lading, made out to the order of the consignee and indorsed on same the words: "B. L. attached to draft." Plaintiffs informed defendant, the initial carrier, that they wished to send the goods in such a manner that the consignee could not obtain the same without payment therefor, and were informed by defendant's agent that the bill of lading as made out would accomplish said purpose. The goods themselves were addressed to the consignor, with the direction to notify the consignee. Held, defendant was liable for the act of the connecting carrier in delivering the goods to the consignee without payment of the draft. —Sturges v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 166 Mich. 231.

§ 63. ——Excuses for loss or delay.

¶ 152. Where a shipper sues the initial carrier for damages from diversion of a shipment to his own order, it is no defense that the goods were seized under attachment where the evidence shows that the connecting carrier at the instance of the purchaser, who was the person to be notified, stopped the car 60 miles from its destination and left it standing on the sidetrack, at which place during the delay he caused the attachment.—Perkett v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co., 175 Mich. 253.

§ 64. Advances and reimbursement by connections.

Right to lien for advances as dependent on rightfulness of possession under contract of carriage, see post ¶ 196.

¶ 153. A connecting carrier to whom property has been delivered by the initial carrier subject to charges, and who makes a deduction from the freight earned, under an illegal custom is liable to an action therefor by the initial carrier if the deduction was made under protest and the action is brought before he has accounted with the owner.—Strong v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 15 Mich. 206.

§ 65. Forwarders, and duty and liability.

Contract to ship and forward, see also ante ¶ 49.
Connecting carrier as agent to turn over to successor, see ante ¶ 135.
Authority of forwarder's clerk to make contracts, see also Agency, ¶ 159.

¶ 154. It is within the scope of a forwarder's business to send forward with property instructions qualifying or imposing restrictions upon its delivery, and his clerk must therefore be presumed to have authority to make a contract to do so.—Hutchings v. Ladd, 16 Mich. 493.

¶ 155. Forwarding instructions for the delivery C. O. D. to the express company along with the goods, in a sealed envelope, was not a compliance with the contract to forward and deliver according to instructions.—Hutchings v. Ladd, 16 Mich. 493.

H. CONTRACT LIMITATIONS OF LIABILITY.

In shipments of live stock, see post § 98.

§ 66. In general; right to limit.

See also ante ¶ 42.
Necessity and sufficiency of written contract or bill of lading, see ante §§ 16, 17.
Right to take heavier charges for larger liability, see post ¶ 186.
Pleading limitations, necessity of special pleas, see post § 85.
Sufficiency of evidence of contract, see post § 90.

¶ 156. A common carrier has no power to restrict, in any way, his common-law liability, but is bound to transport the property intrusted to him under this liability, if it be not waived or changed by contract. But he may make any contract with an individual relative to the transportation of his property which the latter may deem conducive to his interest and enter into upon a consideration satisfactory to himself, though a diminution of the carrier's common-law liability results therefrom.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Hale, 6 Mich. 243; McMillan v. Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co., 16 Mich. 79.

¶ 157. A corporation which is made a common carrier by its charter, and required to "transport merchandise and property without showing partiality or favor," has the same power to contract for a limitation of liability as any other carrier, and no consideration of public policy is contravened by the exercise of such power.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Hale, 6 Mich. 243; overruling Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Ward, 2 Mich. 538.

¶ 158. Though the general railroad law of 1855 prohibits the companies formed under it from limiting their common-law liability as carriers, it does not preclude persons for whom goods are carried from releasing such companies from any part of that liability.—McMillan v. Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co., 16 Mich. 79.

¶ 159. The provisions of the act of 1867, Sess. L. 1867, p. 165 (see How. St., § 3418), which forbid railroad companies to change or limit their common-law liability as common carriers, apply only to those kinds of property which the company was, by its charter, bound to carry in that capacity, and such other kinds as they should assume thus to carry.—Michigan Southern & Northern I. R. Co. v. McDonough, 21 Mich. 165.

¶ 160. A common carrier of goods may by contract limit or extend his common-law liability.—Black v. Ashley, 80 Mich. 90.

¶ 161. A common carrier may limit its strict common-law liability, by express agreement, in such manner as the law can recognize as reasonable, and not inconsistent with sound public policy.—Smith v. American Express Co., 108 Mich. 572.

§ 67. Validity, construction and effect of limitations.

Form and effect of bills of lading, see ante II, B.
Live stock contracts, see post § 98.
Right to limit liability, see also ante § 66.
Waiver of condition for presentation of claim, see post ¶ 206.

¶ 162. When a limited liability is legally contracted for, the bailee is not a common carrier in the full common-law sense, but a private carrier, or a bailee of another class, or a common carrier sub modo only.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Perkins, 25 Mich. 329.

¶ 163. The act of 1867 (How. St., § 3418), in requiring all contracts limiting a carrier's liability to be wholly in writing, is in conflict with the act of 1873 (How. St., § 3328), in so far as the latter simply requires them to be signed in writing; and to the extent of this variation the latter act repeals the former.—Feige v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 62 Mich. 1.

¶ 164. As a general rule a carrier may not exempt itself wholly from liability for its negligence, but can limit its liability only by stipulations, which are in themselves just and reasonable.—Lardie v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co., 192 Mich. 77.

¶ 165. A carrier may by contract exempt itself from liability from loss by fire not caused by its own negligence.—Smith v. American Express Co., 108 Mich. 572.

¶ 166. Where shipper and carrier enter into an agreement whereby the shipping rate is reduced in consideration that the liability for damages resulting from negligence be limited such an arrangement is held good except in the event of gross negligence of the carrier.—Harrison Granite Co. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 175 Mich. 144.

¶ 167. A carrier may limit its liability for damages due to freezing of perishable produce in a bill of lading by the insertion of a clause in the bill of lading to the effect that shipment is made in a box car at shipper's request and at shipper's risk of freezing, where the carrier informs the shipper that it is unable to furnish a refrigerator car and is informed that a box car will be all right, as such provision does not attempt to relieve the carrier from its own negligence but from a loss contemplated by the parties to the contract.—Lardie v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co., 192 Mich. 77.

¶ 168. A sufficient consideration for restrictive provisions contained in a bill of lading will be presumed.—McMillan v. Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co., 16 Mich. 79.

¶ 169. General words of exemption, when employed after a designation of specific exemptions from the liability of a carrier, will be presumed to include only those of a similar character, unless a different intention is manifest in the contract.—Hawkins v. Great Western R. Co., 17 Mich. 57.

¶ 170. A carrier's limited liability contract is not to be construed as in any way limiting the carrier's liability for loss or damage due to the neglect or default of its employees.—Smith v. American Express Co., 108 Mich. 572.

¶ 171. A bill of lading for matches exempting the carrier from loss or damage by fire relieves the defendant from liability as insurer for damage to such goods while in transit, but it does not relieve defendant from liability for its negligent conduct.—Modern Match Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 140 Mich. 570.

§ 68. ——As to acts or neglect of connecting lines.

In live stock shipments, see post § 98.

¶ 172. A carrier is not liable for loss of a parcel burned in an express car after delivery to a succeeding carrier, where the contract expressly limits its liability to its own line.—Smith v. American Express Co., 108 Mich. 572.

¶ 173. A carrier may stipulate for immunity from responsibility for damages resulting upon connecting roads after his discharge of his full duty of delivering the goods to another road.—Kibby v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 142 Mich. 313.

¶ 174. Where a carrier contracts to furnish a suitable car to transport potatoes for the entire trip and deliver the car and cargo to a connecting line in good condition, it is responsible for its breach of contract where the potatoes were ruined by rain coming through a leaky roof, despite a stipulation that it should not be liable for damages not occurring on its own road.—Kibby v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 142 Mich. 313.

¶ 175. Defendant, the initial carrier, received goods for shipment under a contract providing that it should not be liable for loss or injury, or for delay in delivery, by any other carrier after the delivery of the goods to it by the defendant. The goods were properly delivered to a connecting carrier. A new waybill was made out by the connecting carrier from which were omitted the words "notify H. & Co.," at the place of destination, which had appeared upon the bill of lading. The consignee, by reason of the error, was not located, and the goods were placed in storage, from which the consignee, after locating the goods, refused to remove them unless the storage charges were paid. Months later the goods were sold for such charges. Held, that defendant was not liable beyond possibly the first delay.—Hope v. Delaware & H. Canal Co., 111 Mich. 209.

¶ 176. Whether a waybill, providing that perishable goods shipped in a designated car to a foreign station, should be at the owner's risk from frost with a limitation of liability to the initial carrier's own line applied beyond the line of the carrier which gave it and bound the connecting carrier, quære; the court being equally divided.—Burroughs v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 67 Mich. 351.

§ 69. ——As to warehouseman's liability.

¶ 177. It is competent for a carrier to limit or modify, by contract, its common-law liability with respect to the character in which it holds goods in its warehouse awaiting delivery.—Buckley v. Great Western Ry. Co., 18 Mich. 121; Feige v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 62 Mich. 1.

§ 70. ——As to valuation and damages recoverable.

Reduced rate limitations, see ante § 67.
Instructions as to effect of release clause on bill, see post § 95.

¶ 178. A provision in a bill of lading limiting the carrier's liability to an agreed value, made to adjust the rate is not forbidden by the Carmack Amendment.—Harrison Granite Co. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 175 Mich. 144.

¶ 179. The receipt given by an express company for a package delivered to it for transportation provided that the company should not, in any event, be held liable beyond the sum of $50, unless the just and true value of the property was stated in the receipt. This was not done, nor was the value disclosed by the consignor to the company. Held, that the limitation was reasonable, and, in case of loss, fixed the limit of recovery by the consignor.—Smith v. American Express Co., 108 Mich. 572.

¶ 180. Where a shipper takes a receipt from an express company which states that the value of the package shall not be deemed to exceed fifty dollars unless the shipper declares a different value, and the shipper merely marks the package as containing opals and the receipt states it to contain the same, the shipper can recover for loss of the package only up to fifty dollars.—D'Arcy v. Adams Exp. Co., 162 Mich. 363.

¶ 181. Where plaintiff enters into a contract with defendant to ship certain material described in the shipping receipt as "building granite" which in fact is polished granite, and there is a provision limiting the liability in consideration of the lower shipping rate, the contract is valid and plaintiff is bound by the limitation in an action to recover damages to the shipment.—Harrison Granite Co. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 175 Mich. 144.

Freight rates charged by carrier as limiting liability for goods lost or damaged, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 53-66.

Liability of express company for goods lost or damaged as limited by rates charged for transportation, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 120-132.

§ 71. Assent to limitations.

Authority of forwarders to make, see ante § 65.

Consignee as bound by consignor's agreement, see ante § 44.

¶ 182. A common carrier cannot limit his common-law liability by a mere notice indorsed upon the receipt given the consignor, or published or posted, or otherwise brought to the consignor's notice. The assent of the latter to the limitation is necessary, and must be proved by evidence aliunde; it cannot be presumed from the terms of the receipt alone, or be implied from the posting of notices or the delivery thereof to the consignor.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Hale, 6 Mich. 243; McMillan v. Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co., 16 Mich. 79.

¶ 183. The sending of goods under a restrictive contract in any number of instances does not bind the party sending them to a similar contract in the future without his agreement to that effect; nor is it evidence that a like contract existed in the case of goods subsequently sent.—McMillan v. Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co., 16 Mich. 79.

¶ 184. After property had been delivered to a railroad company for carriage the owner signed a request for its shipment, which was presented to him by the company, and upon which was a notice to limit the company's liability in case of loss. A part of the property was never forwarded, but was lost from the company's warehouse. Held, that having received the property for transportation before the notice was given, the company's obligation to send forward the same was not restricted thereby, and the owner had a right to understand the notice as referring only to the liability of the company in respect to its carriage.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Adams, 15 Mich. 458.

¶ 185. Where no receipt is given at the time of shipment, the carrier cannot in the absence of statutory regulation, limit its liability by afterwards delivering to the shipper a receipt containing a limited liability clause, if the evidence shows that the shipper had no knowledge that the carrier claimed any such limitations at the time of shipment.—Farnsworth v. National Exp. Co., 106 Mich. 676.

¶ 185a. A bill of lading conditioned to deliver goods "at Toledo for Detroit" is a contract to carry to Toledo and then forward to Detroit; and the carrier receiving the same at Toledo to carry to Detroit receives them under his common-law liability and not under the conditions of the bill of lading, though he would be limited in his charges to the sum specified in the bill.—McMillan v. Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co., 16 Mich. 79.

I. FREIGHT AND CHARGES, AND LIENS.

§ 72. In general.

Agreement to collect from consignee, see also ante ¶ 43.

Right to storage on attachment of goods, see also ante ¶ 68.

Public regulation of rates and charges, see ante §§ 2, 3.

Conclusiveness of established rates, see ante § 3; and see Public Service.

Establishment of rates by Railroad Commission, and review of its decisions and rates, see Public Service.

Provisions as to free service, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8113(b).

Short and long haul charges, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8117, and Pub. Acts 1915, No. 277.

Classifications and commodity rates, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 8119-8121.

Statutory maximum rates, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8133(d).

Drayage charges, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8347.

¶ 186. It seems that railroad companies can adjust their charges for carrying freight in view of the risks which they assume or the law imposes; they may therefore properly exact heavier charges if held to a carrier's responsibility than if liable only as warehousemen.—Feige v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 62 Mich. 1.

¶ 187. The proviso to Comp. L. 1897, § 6234, limiting the rate for transporting freight by the car, is not ambiguous or uncertain, but it refers to transportation of freight by the carload, regardless of the size of the car or the weight of freight contained therein.—Robinson v. Harmon, 157 Mich. 266.

¶ 188. A consignee who actually receives goods upon which extra freight charges have not been paid, as the result of underbilling, is solely liable for the payment thereof where the carrier and shipper enter into an agreement that the consignee shall alone be liable for freight on the goods, and the consignee accepts the goods, especially where no demand is made on the consignees for the extra freight, and it is not claimed that the shipper is guilty of bad faith in underbilling the goods.—King v. Van Slack, 193 Mich. 105.

§ 73. Prepayment of charges.

Extending credit to some and not others as discrimination, see ante ¶ 31.

Advances to initial and other carriers, see ante § 64.

¶ 189. A common carrier is not bound to receive and carry goods unless freight is paid in advance if required.—Fitch v. Newberry, 1 D. 1.

¶ 190. A railroad employee does not waive the right of the company to a prepayment of charges before delivery of the cars, and to car rental for delay of the consignee, by responding "all right" to a statement by the consignee that he will give a disposal order for the cars, and will send the amount of the freight whenever he gets the expense notices and knows the amount.—McEachran v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 115 Mich. 318.

¶ 191. Where the Michigan Railroad Commission establishes a schedule of freight rates on lumber intended for manufacture and reshipment over the lines of a common carrier, with an additional rate of 50 cents per thousand feet on lumber not intended for reshipment, subject to such rebate however in the event of reshipment, the carrier cannot in the first instance impose such additional charge on all shipments.—Michigan Railroad Commission v. Detroit & Mackinac R. Co., 184 Mich. 242.

§ 74. Demurrage.

Burden of proof of waiver of demurrage, see post § 87, ¶ 220.

¶ 192. A demurrage charge is a terminal charge within the meaning of the Act of Congress of June 29, 1906.—Michigan Cent R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 183 Mich. 6.

¶ 193. A railroad forming part of the so-called "Grand Trunk Railway System" cannot recover demurrage charges due to other railroads, although such railroads also form part of such "system," in the absence of pleading and proof that plaintiff paid demurrage charges for the other railroads in the usual course of business, or had become liable to pay such charges, and in such case plaintiff's recovery will be limited to charges accruing to its own line.—Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co. v. Owosso Sugar Co., 192 Mich. 533.

§ 75. Liens.

Sale of unclaimed freight, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8247.

¶ 194. A carrier has a lien on the cargo for the freight earned.—Strong v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 15 Mich. 206.

¶ 195. A carrier cannot claim a lien for freight unless the contract of carriage is fully performed.—Johnston v. Davis, 60 Mich. 56.

¶ 196. To justify a lien upon goods for their freight, the relation of debtor and creditor must exist between their owner and the carrier, so that an action at law might be maintained for the payment of the debt for which the lien is claimed; and where plaintiff had shipped goods by carriers under a special contract, and during their transit they came into possession of other carriers without his assent, and were delivered to the defendants, who were warehousemen, and who advanced charges thereon in ignorance of the manner in which the last-mentioned carriers had come to possession, it was held that the defendants had no lien on the goods for their advances and charges, and plaintiff was entitled to the possession of the goods without payment thereof.—Fitch v. Newberry, 1 D. 1.

¶ 197. Where one replevied his goods from a carrier who claimed the right to retain them until the freight was paid, it was competent for plaintiff to prove damages to them in their transit, and thus reduce the amount of freight actually due, or show nothing due.—Bancroft v. Peters, 4 Mich. 619.

¶ 198. Where a purchase is induced by fraud and the title passed the seller on rescinding cannot recover the goods free from a lien acquired by a railroad company for subsequent transfer charges incurred by the purchaser.—Hoffman v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 125 Mich. 201.

§ 76. Penalties for overcharge.

¶ 199. Since the penalty for overcharge imposed by Comp. L. 1897, § 6235, is laid on "every such corporation" operating as a common carrier, it will not be extended to a receiver appointed by the federal court to operate the railroad.—Robinson v. Harmon, 157 Mich. 272, on rehearing reversing original opinion.

§ 77. Right to recover overcharge or improper charge.

See also ante ¶ 29.

Right to recover for special service improperly given and charged for, see also ante ¶ 73.

Right to recover charges on underbilled goods, see ante ¶ 188.

Complaint to Railroad Commission, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8118(g).

Under Interstate Commerce Act, see that act and the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

¶ 200. Where rates charged by a shipper are condemned by the Railroad Commission as unreasonable, and new ones approved as reasonable, the mere fact that a temporary injunction against putting the new rates into effect permits the carrier, notwithstanding the orders of the commission, to continue to take what its published tariffs called for, does not legalize the exaction nor prevent recovery of the excess charge by the shipper, upon the representations upon which the injunction was based later being held to be unfounded. —Fletcher Paper Co. v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 198 Mich. 409.

¶ 201. A railroad company that receipts goods to be transported to a point beyond its line for a definite sum named, and charges the consignor a larger sum therefor, is responsible to the consignor for the excess.—Detroit & B. C. R. Co. v. McKenzie, 43 Mich. 609.

¶ 202. If a common carrier obtains possession of goods wrongfully, or without the consent of the owner, express or implied, and, on demand, refuses to deliver them to the owner, such owner may bring replevin for the goods or trover for their value.—Fitch v. Newberry, 1 D. 1.

¶ 203. Where the Railroad Commission has decided that a certain rate charged a shipper is unreasonable, and that another is reasonable, a shipper may recover, in an action of assumpsit, the money illegally exacted through the charging of a higher than the fixed rate, and it is immaterial whether it declare upon Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300, § 10, subd. g., How. 2d Ed., § 6533, and the action of the commission or on the common counts. —Fletcher Paper Co. v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 198 Mich. 409.

In case of live stock shipments, see post § 104.

Rights of action not released by Railroad Commission Act, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8154.

¶ 204. A written contract for the transportation of goods entered into by the real owner of the property in the name of those from whom he purchased, they having been the original shippers by another line, from which defendants received them, and required by defendants to be thus made in the name of such original shippers, may be sued upon by said real owner of the property in their names.—Sisson v. Cleveland & T. R. Co., 14 Mich. 489.

¶ 205. In an action against a railroad company for failure to furnish cars for the movement of a peach crop, the contract for furnishing refrigerator cars being between defendant and plaintiff, a third party jointly interested with plaintiff in the crop is not a necessary party plaintiff.—Fremont Canning Co. v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 180 Mich. 283.

§ 80. Defenses.

Pleading defenses, necessity of special plea, see post § 85.

Burden of proof of levy as defense, see post § 87.

¶ 206. Where a carrier places its refusal to pay to the consignor of goods a claim for damages on distinct and definite grounds, it waives its right to insist, after the consignor has incurred the expense of litigation, on other defenses known to it, including the defense that a claim for loss in writing was not made within four months after the loss.—Ithaca Roller Mills v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 197 Mich. 440.

§ 81. Pleading; declaration.

In action on live stock carriage, see post § 106.
Issues and variance, see post § 86.
General law of pleading, see Pleading.
Pleading damages, see Damages, X.

¶ 207. In an action under the Interstate Commerce Act where the shipper sues the initial carrier for damages from a diversion of the shipment, held, the bill of lading was sufficiently described in the declaration to be admissible in evidence.—Perkett v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co., 175 Mich. 253.

§ 82. ——Assumption of duty and breach.

¶ 208. Admitting it to be one of the duties of a common carrier to transport without unreasonable delay, the neglect of that duty could not be a ground of recovery against him without an averment in the declaration charging the duty and averring a breach of it.—Buckley v. Great Western R. Co., 18 Mich. 121.

§ 83. ——In actions for recovery of overcharge or improper charge.

Matter within issues, see post ¶ 214.

¶ 209. In an action by a consignor against a carrier of goods to recover a freight charge, as for transportation beyond its line, in excess of that arranged for on receipting the goods, a variance in describing the defendant's undertaking as one for the carriage of the goods for the whole distance is immaterial.—Detroit & B. C. R. Co. v. McKenzie, 43 Mich. 609.

§ 84. ——In action for unlawful discrimination.

¶ 210. Plaintiff sued defendant railway for unjust discrimination against his business under Comp. L. 1897, § 6266. The declaration alleged that defendant gave a rival bus company the exclusive privilege of going upon its trains to solicit business, and gave a free pass for such purpose. It did not allege that said rival paid anything for the privilege. Held, that the demurrer to the declaration should be sustained.—Dingman v. Duluth, S. S. & A. Ry. Co., 164 Mich. 328.

§ 85. Pleas; special defenses.

¶ 211. Failure by a carrier to plead the so-called "5 day" provision for filing claim for damages is a waiver of that defense.—Tobin v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 192 Mich. 549.

¶ 212. In order to enable a carrier to prove a special contract changing or modifying its common-law liability, such contract must be pleaded.—Tobin v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 192 Mich. 549.

§ 86. Issues and variance.

Evidence that plaintiff road is part of "system" with which defendant dealt, see also post ¶ 237.

¶ 213. Where two railroad companies are sued on a joint contract for transportation, evidence as to which was in default is immaterial.—Sisson v. Cleveland & T. R. Co., 14 Mich. 489.

¶ 214. In an action of assumpsit in the circuit court by a shipper against a carrier to recover the difference between the amount paid under a tariff published by defendant and that designated by the Railroad Commission held that the question of the reasonableness of the exactions could not be considered.—Fletcher Paper Co. v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 198 Mich. 469.

¶ 215. A declaration in an action by a shipper against a common carrier of goods for injuries to goods while in transit, is sufficient to support a recovery where it alleges the delivery of goods to defendant, a common carrier, for shipment, the acceptance of the goods by defendant, the breach of duty to deliver the goods safely at destination, that through defendant's negligence they were wholly lost, damaged, and destroyed, and not delivered to a connecting carrier, or to plaintiff at destination "or elsewhere," and where the proof shows that after a long wait for the goods at destination, plaintiff directed them to be returned to the original shipping point, where they were offered to him in a damaged condition.—Reason v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 150 Mich. 50.

¶ 216. If plaintiff in assumpsit counts upon the common-law liability of common carriers to carry safely, he must prove all the circumstances necessary to create the liability; and if he fail to show that the property was delivered to, and accepted by, the company under circumstances which made it their duty to assume the care and custody of the property in its reception, transportation and delivery, he fails to prove the contract alleged.—Michigan Southern & Northern I. R. Co. v. McDonough, 21 Mich. 165.

¶ 217. In an action in tort to recover for the negligence of a carrier in transporting goods, the plaintiff is not required to prove a contract. The burden of proof is on the defendant to show any provision of the contract which excuses liability.—Bonfiglio v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 125 Mich. 476.

¶ 218. One who sues a common carrier for injury to goods must show affirmatively that defendant received them in good order.—Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Kirkwood, 45 Mich. 51.

¶ 219. A carrier's obligation to carry safely what he received safely is independent of the question of negligence; but in the absence of proof that goods were delivered to him or delivered safely, any presumption that he received them goes behind his duty and enters into the origin of the contract for carriage, since there is nothing for the contract to act on until the goods come into his charge, and until that is proved the contract is not.—Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Kirkwood, 45 Mich. 51.

¶ 220. One who relies upon the authority of an employee of a common carrier to waive the right to prepayment of demurrage charges before delivery of the cars has the burden of showing authority.—McEachran v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 115 Mich. 318.

¶ 221. A carrier sued in trover for the value of goods which it has allowed an officer to take from its possession cannot show such taking as a defense unless it shows also that the officer had a legal right to take them by virtue of his writ.—Gibbons v. Farwell, 63 Mich. 344.

¶ 222. In an action against a terminal carrier for damages to goods shipped it cannot be assumed that the damage was done while in the hands of the defendant rather than while in the hands of the initial carrier.—Rolfe v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 144 Mich. 169.

¶ 223. Where goods are transported by successive carriers and an action is brought against the terminal carrier for damages to the goods, it is not enough to show that the goods were delivered to the initial carrier in good condition, but it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that they were in good order when received by the defendant.—Rolfe v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 144 Mich. 169.

¶ 224. Where goods are received by a carrier for shipment to a point beyond its own line, and after their arrival at their destination the shipper directs that they shall be returned, and upon their return they are received by him in a damaged condition, the burden of proof is upon him to show that they were received by the initial carrier from the connecting carriers, upon the return trip, in good condition, where the initial carrier has shown delivery by it to a connecting carrier, in good condition, upon the outgoing trip.—Reason v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 150 Mich. 50.

¶ 225. Where a carrier receives goods for transportation by itself and connecting carriers to a point beyond its termination, the burden of proof is upon it to show that it has delivered the goods to the succeeding carrier uninjured.—Reason v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 150 Mich. 50.

§ 88. ——As to negligence.

¶ 226. In a suit by a railroad to recover of a shipper for the burning of a car assigned to defendant, the burden of proof of negligence primarily rests with plaintiff.—Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co. v. L. Starks Co., 172 Mich. 270.

¶ 227. Where an action against a carrier is based upon the destruction by fire, through the carrier's negligence, of a package delivered to it for transportation, such negligence must be proved; mere proof of an accident does not establish negligence.—Smith v. American Express Co., 108 Mich. 572.

¶ 228. In a suit by a railroad to recover of a shipper for the burning of a car assigned to defendant, negligence cannot be presumed but must be proved, and the mere fact of the accident is not sufficient to impose liability.—Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co. v. L. Starks Co., 172 Mich. 270.

¶ 229. If unusual conditions cause unavoidable delay in the transportation of goods properly prepared for shipment and in good condition, preventing performance of the duty of the carrier to transport safely and with reasonable dispatch, the burden of proof is upon the carrier to show that its negligence did not cause or contribute to the loss or injury to the goods.—A. F. Young & Co. v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 201 Mich. 39.

¶ 230. In an action by a shipper against the initial carrier for damages for negligence of a connecting carrier in delaying shipment and failing to properly ice the fruit, the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show that the fruit was not iced as provided by the contract.—Perkett v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co., 191 Mich. 106.

¶ 231. Where two railroad companies are sued on a joint contract for transportation, it is immaterial which one was in default, and evidence on that subject is irrelevant and immaterial.—Sisson v. Cleveland & T. R. Co., 14 Mich. 489.

¶ 232. Where eggs transported in a refrigerator car, which they partially filled, were placed by the carrier in its warehouse at the point of destination, and, remaining uncalled for for several days, were frozen, it was not proper for the carrier to show that its warehouse was like others in not protecting such property from freezing.—Burroughs v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 67 Mich. 351, affirming lower court by equal division.

¶ 233. Hay was shipped from Sheboygan to Escanaba, and there taken by a railroad company, which carried it to Marquette, where it was found to be wet and injured. The company was sued for damages. Held, that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiffs and that proof of its condition at the port of previous shipment was not to be resorted to unless more direct evidence was lacking. But if admitted, it was held proper cross-examination to inquire into the mode of its transshipment, the condition of its storage, the weather, and the condition in which it reached the place where the company received it.—Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Langton, 32 Mich. 251.

¶ 234. Evidence tending to show that goods were in good condition when loaded on the car, and that the car was in good condition when receipted for by defendant's road, in an action against such carrier for damages to such goods while in transit, would also tend to show that the goods when such car was received by defendant were in the same condition as when shipped.—Modern Match Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 140 Mich. 570.

¶ 235. In an action by a shipper against a carrier for injury by freezing to an interstate shipment of potatoes because of delay in transportation, it is competent to show, as bearing upon the question of unreasonable delay in transit, not only the actual time consumed in the particular case, but the distance and usual time required and taken for such transportation.—A. F. Young & Co. v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 201 Mich. 39.

¶ 236. In an action by a shipper against the initial carrier for damages for delay in shipment and improper icing of fruit due to the negligence of a connecting carrier, the certificates of the Commissioner of Health at the point of destination showing the condemnation of fruit, some shipped by other persons than the plaintiff, but also inferentially the fruit which he shipped, and all of the fruit being included in the same shipment, is admissible.—Perkett v. Manistee & N. H. R. Co., 191 Mich. 106.

¶ 237. In an action by a railroad company to recover for demurrage charges, where it is sought to recover such charges due to other companies, parol evidence that plaintiff and such other railroads are parts of what is called the "Grand Trunk Railway System" is incompetent unless it shows what will amount to an assignment of the charges to plaintiff, since the so-called "system," even if incorporated and capable of suing and being sued, could not, simply by reason of such fact, recover such charges due to the various railroads composing it.—Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co. v. Owosso Sugar Co., 192 Mich. 533.

§ 90. Sufficiency of evidence.

See also ante ¶ 73.
Bare proof of accident or loss, see ante § 88.
Of liability for improper charges incurred, see also ante ¶ 119.

¶ 238. Although it devolves upon a common carrier to show affirmatively the terms of any contract which lessens his common-law liability, yet the fact is to be proved, like any other, by any pertinent evidence. If in writing, the writing must be shown; but if by parole, there is no rule which requires any different proof from that which would establish any other contract. The jury must be satisfied from the evidence that a certain contract exists; and, if satisfied, that is sufficient.—American Transp. Co. v. Moore, 5 Mich. 368. Affirmed in 24 How. 1, 16 L. ed. 674.

¶ 239. The agent of the O. railroad on receipt of goods to be forwarded gave a dray ticket, signed by himself, reading: "Pittsburgh, Nov. 1, 1864. To O. & P. R. R. Rec'd of F. Bros., in good order [description of goods] for M. I. M. & Co., Detroit. To Mansfield." A shipping bill was also given to the same time, specifying Mansfield as destination. Held that the dray ticket, standing by itself, was not evidence of an obligation of the carrier to transport the goods to Detroit, but only showed a duty to keep the goods safely and to redeliver them or account for their value.—Fleming v. Mills, 5 Mich. 420.

¶ 240. In an action by a bank as an assignee of a bill of lading for a car of produce against a railroad company to recover damages for negligence in shipment and in delivering the car to a third person without requiring the delivery of the original bill of lading properly indorsed, where it appeared that the defendant was informed by an agent of the consignor before delivery of the produce that the bill of lading with the draft attached had been indorsed to the plaintiff and was in a bank of the city to which the produce was shipped for collection, and that such agent had no authority or control over them, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that there was a wrongful delivery of the produce.—First Nat. Bank of Allegan v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 195 Mich. 1.

¶ 241. The nonexistence of ice in the bunkers of a fruit refrigerator car may not be established by evidence that there could not have been any ice in the car, and that if there was ice in the car, cold air would strike the limbs of a person upon entering the car, where the bunkers could easily be examined.—Perkett v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co., 191 Mich. 106.

¶ 242. In an action by a shipper against the initial carrier for damages for delay in shipment and improper icing of fruit alleged to be due to the negligence of a connecting carrier, evidence held insufficient to establish improper icing.—Perkett v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co., 191 Mich. 106.

¶ 243. In an action by a shipper against a carrier for damages for the freezing of produce alleged to be caused after an unreasonable delay, evidence held insufficient to establish that the produce was not frozen before the delay had become unreasonable.—Lardie v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co., 192 Mich. 77.

¶ 244. In an action for damages for freezing of produce alleged to be due to delay in shipment, held that any finding that if the produce had reached its destination within the time required it would not have been frozen would be mere conjecture.—Barber v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 197 Mich. 643.

¶ 245. Where an interstate shipment of potatoes in refrigerator cars is shown to have been delivered to the carrier at the point of shipment in good condition and properly loaded for transportation in the winter time, and it arrived at its destination in bad condition, with some of the potatoes frozen, some wet, and some rotten, if unreasonable delay in dispatching the shipment is shown, the condition of the goods at their destination might fairly raise the question, in absence of any proof by the carrier, whether the latter fulfilled the duty imposed upon it by Comp. Laws 1915, § 8176, to exercise that degree of care in the transportation and safe-keeping of goods intrusted to it which a reasonably careful man would exercise in regard to similar goods of his own.—A. F. Young & Co. v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 201 Mich. 39.

¶ 246. In an action by a railroad company to recover for demurrage charges, where plaintiff sought to recover for such charges accruing to other railroads, which, like itself, formed part of the so-called "Grand Trunk Railway System," it is not error to refuse to direct a verdict for plaintiff, although there is in evidence a letter from defendant to such "system" informing it that defendant is withholding payment of its charges against defendant pending settlement of a claim for delay in transporting beets, such letter being at most a promise to pay what defendant owed to such "system" on condition of the settlement of its claim, and being addressed to the "system," and not to plaintiff, was not an admission that it owed plaintiff anything.—Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co. v. Owosso Sugar Co., 192 Mich. 533.

§ 91. Questions of law and fact.

In general, see Trial, VI.
As to damages, see Damages, XII.

¶ 247. Where a shipper had adopted the habit of leaving his goods on the station platform until they were ready for shipment and then notifying the agent of their being so ready, the question whether in the case in question the agent had been so notified and whether the goods were in the possession of the defendant as a common carrier, was for the jury.—Stapleton v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 187.

¶ 248. The question of a carrier's negligence in handling a car in which matches were loaded, was for the jury, in an action against such carrier for damages to such goods while in transit, where the evidence tended to show that the matches were packed in air-tight cartons, that such cartons were packed in pine boxes securely nailed, and that the matches could not have ignited unless these boxes were broken open, and the matches scattered, that the car containing the matches was in good condition when receipted for by defendant road, but that after coming into defendant's possession, and prior to reaching its destination, the two couplers at either end of such car were cracked so that they had to be replaced.—Modern Match Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 140 Mich. 570.

¶ 249. In an action against a railroad company by the assignee of a claim of the consignee of a shipment of goods for damages for negligent performance of the contract of carriage resulting in a shortage of goods received by plaintiff's assignor, where it appeared that the freight bill, with an admission thereon of shortage signed by an agent of the carrier, was introduced in evidence, but that the seal of the car was intact when the car was delivered to the consignee; that all of the goods were not removed during the day and there was no evidence that the car was sealed during the night following the first day, and the shortage was not discovered until the goods reached the warehouse of plaintiff's assignor, held that it was a question for the jury whether there was a shortage which was due to the negligent performance of defendant's contract.—Oceana Canning Co. v. King, 195 Mich. 628.

§ 92. ——Delay and reasonableness of time.

¶ 250. The alleged negligence of a carrier in failing to make prompt delivery of a box, held, under the evidence, to be a question for the jury.—A. E. Wood & Co. v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 184 Mich. 672.

¶ 251. In an action for damages caused by delay in transportation of a shipment of potatoes against the receivers of a railroad, the question as to whether delivery was made in a reasonable time held for the jury.—Loveland & Hinyan Co. v. Waters, 192 Mich. 680.

¶ 252. In an action for damages for delaying cars loaded with peach baskets required by plaintiff in its business, evidence held to present a question of fact as to whether the cars were moved with reasonable dispatch, which question was properly submitted to the jury.—Fremont Canning Co. v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 180 Mich. 283.

¶ 253. In an action for damages for delay in delivering a car loaded with cans required by plaintiff which was engaged in the peach canning business, it was shown that the car was placed on a siding at a distant point inaccessible to plaintiff and was not moved to plaintiff's siding until two days later, and that by reason of the delay food intended to be placed in the cans was greatly depreciated in value, held that the question of defendant's negligence was for the jury.—Fremont Canning Co. v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 180 Mich. 283.

¶ 254. In an action against a railroad company for failure to furnish refrigerator cars as provided by contract between plaintiff and defendant, evidence held to present a question of fact as to whether such cars were furnished within a reasonable time as required by Public Acts 1909, No. 300, § 8, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 6531.—Fremont Canning Co. v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 180 Mich. 283.

§ 93. ——Place of injury; connecting lines.

In live stock shipments, see post § 108.

¶ 255. The question of whether goods had been delivered to a connecting carrier is one for the jury, upon conflicting evidence.—Reason v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 150 Mich. 50.

¶ 256. In an action against a carrier for injury to perishable fruit by insufficient icing, where the bill of lading provided for re-icing as often as necessary to keep the car thoroughly iced, the question as to whether any injury occurred while the cars were upon defendant's road was for the jury, where there was some testimony tending to show that the cars were insufficiently iced when furnished, of which fact plaintiff had no knowledge until too late to remedy the difficulty, and where there was also evidence of delay.—Johnson v. Toledo, S. & M. Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 596.

¶ 257. Defendant carrier received a car of potatoes from plaintiff, with instructions to notify the consignee of their arrival. In making the transfer to the connecting carrier, defendant failed to include such instructions to notify in the waybill. After many delays, unexplained by the evidence, on the route of the connecting carrier, the goods arrived at the place of consignment and remained upon the track four days before the consignee was notified. There was evidence of damage from decay, but there was no evidence what part of said damage was incurred while the potatoes were en route by the connecting carrier and what part was incurred in the period between the time of their arrival and the time the consignee was notified. Held, the court properly directed that plaintiff could recover only nominal damages.—L. Starks Co. v. Manistee & N. E. R. Co., 165 Mich. 518.

¶ 258. Plaintiff shipped goods by freight from St. Louis to Flint, Mich. By mistake of defendant railroad the car was taken to Utah. Before it reached Flint, plaintiff left and made his home in Detroit. He asked defendant's agent in Detroit to have the goods sent to Detroit when they reached Flint, or to intercept them and have them sent directly to Detroit. This the agent agreed to do. The agent did not intercept them. Upon their arrival at Flint plaintiff was notified and ordered them carried by another railroad to Detroit, where they arrived in damaged condition. Plaintiff offered no evidence to show whether the damage occurred before the arrival at Flint or on the way between Flint and Detroit. Held, there was no contract with defendant for transportation from Flint to Detroit, and a verdict should have been directed for it.—Sheehy v. Wabash R. Co., 169 Mich. 604.

§ 94. ——Contributory negligence.

¶ 259. Whether a person engaged in the millinery business was negligent in failing to accept from a carrier a box labeled "shoes," which did not have any mark indicating the consignor, held properly submitted to the jury in an action against the carrier for loss occasioned by the delayed delivery of a box of velvets, where the plaintiff claimed that the box first tendered was not the one subsequently delivered.—A. E. Wood & Co. v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 184 Mich. 672.

¶ 260. Whether a milliner was negligent in ignoring notices from a carrier of the receipt of a box marked "shoes" which did not bear the name of the consignor, held properly submitted to the jury in an action against the carrier for loss occasioned by a delayed delivery of a box of velvets, where the plaintiff claimed that the box referred to in such notices was not the one subsequently delivered.—A. E. Wood & Co. v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 184 Mich. 672.

§ 95. Instructions.

General law of instructions, see Instructions. Instructions on damages, see Damages, XII.

¶ 261. Where an action for an injury to goods transported by successive carriers is brought against one of them, it is error to charge that if the goods were delivered in good order to the first carrier it is inferable, in the absence of evidence, that they continued so until received by the defendant.—Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Kirkwood, 45 Mich. 51.

¶ 262. In a suit by a railroad against a shipper for negligently causing a car assigned to it to be destroyed by fire, the court charged that after plaintiff had made a prima facie case of negligence the burden was on defendant to show that it used reasonable care in setting up and firing a stove therein to keep potatoes from freezing. Defendant introduced evidence to the effect that it was necessary and customary to maintain fires in stoves in such cases; that this was known and permitted by plaintiff; that the stove used was the usual one, was sound and was carefully set up; and that due care was used in firing and caring for same. Held, the instruction was sufficiently favorable to plaintiff to prevent a reversal of a verdict and judgment in defendant's favor.—Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co. v. L. Starks Co., 172 Mich. 270.

¶ 263. In an action for damages for failure to furnish refrigerator cars as provided by contract between plaintiff and defendant railway company, instructions held fairly to submit the case to the jury.—Fremont Canning Co. v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 180 Mich. 283.

¶ 264. A request to charge the jury that by contract of carriage the liability of defendant was limited to five dollars for each hundredweight carried, was properly refused where the only evidence of such limitation of liability was the unexplained clause in the bill of lading, "O. R. Rel. $5 per cwt. Henry Reason, Shipper, per M. Jacobs," and where it appeared that Jacobs did not in fact sign, and the authority of Jacobs to sign was denied.—Reason v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 150 Mich. 50.

III. CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK.

§ 96. In general.

General law and regulations of all carriers, see ante I.

Burden of proving character of carrier, see post § 107.

¶ 265. Railroad companies are not, by the common law, common carriers of live stock, and can only make themselves such by assuming to convey it as common carriers.—Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co. v. McDonough, 21 Mich. 165; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Perkins, 25 Mich. 329.

¶ 266. One who has never assumed or offered to carry chattels of a certain class—e. g., live stock—except upon special terms exempting him from all the important duties and liabilities of a common carrier, cannot be classed among common carriers of property of that kind, or be made amenable in the character of a common carrier as to such property.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Perkins, 25 Mich. 329.

¶ 267. A charter passed in 1846, binding a railroad company to take upon itself the business of a common carrier, did not impose the duty of carrying cattle and live stock; and the company could not, therefore, be held liable as common carrier for the transportation of such property, except by special contract to that effect, or by professing or holding itself out to the public or to plaintiff as doing that kind of business in the character and with the risks of common carriers. The burden of proof of such contract or of such holding out would be upon the plaintiff; and the mere fact that defendants were in the habit of transporting this kind of property does not, of itself, raise any presumption that they had assumed the common law duties and responsibilities of common carriers of such property.—Michigan Southern & Northern I. R. Co. v. McDonough, 21 Mich. 165.

Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Perkins, 25 Mich. 329.

¶ 269. Whether live pigeons would, at common law, be freight for an express company acting as common carrier, quaere.—American Merchants' Union Exp. Co. v. Phillips, 29 Mich. 515.

§ 97. Duties and liabilities of carrier.

Feeding and watering and caring for animals, see post § 99.
Particular liabilities, see also post §§ 101-103.
Preference in right to cars and movement, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8116.

¶ 270. The obligation to furnish suitable cars fit for the carriage of horses is absolute without reference to the fitness or fidelity of agents or officers, subordinate or otherwise, or the silence of the special contract for carriage, unless the party with notice of the defect assented to their use.—Great Western R. Co. v. Hawkins, 18 Mich. 427.

¶ 271. The fact that railroad companies hold themselves out to the public as carrying live stock for all alike, on the same special terms as to care and risks (different from those of common carriers), would not make them common carriers as to such care and risks, though, in other respects, their liability should be the same as in the case of other property generally; and their obligation to furnish proper cars, and properly to make up and run their trains, would be the same, and the provisions of their charter against partiality would apply.—Michigan Southern & Northern I. R. Co. v. McDonough, 21 Mich. 165.

¶ 272. A railroad company, in carrying live stock, is not chargeable with the common-law liability of a common carrier, but is only bound to transport with ordinary prudence, skill and care, and with reasonable dispatch —Heller v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 109 Mich. 53.

¶ 273. A railroad company transporting live stock is not chargeable with the common-law liability of a common carrier, and is bound only to transport the stock with reasonable dispatch.—McKenzie v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 137 Mich. 112.

Liability of carrier for injury to live stock from defective or unsuitable cars or loading facilities, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 349-355.
Liability of carrier for loss of or injury to live stock as result of delay in transportation or in furnishing cars, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 521-539.

Right of carrier to delay shipment of live stock after accepting same because of doubt as to sufficiency of certificate of health, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 1008-1009.

§ 98. Contracts and limitations on liability.

Necessity of stop to allow watering assumed by shipper, see post § 100.
Provision for claim before suit as part of contract, see post § 104.
Contract obnoxious to federal statute relating to watering and care in transit, see post ¶ 291.
Burden of proof of limitations, see post § 107.
Statutory right to limit, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 8248, 8334.

¶ 274. Provision in a bill of lading, that a shipper of a carload of cattle is at his own sole risk and expense, to load, care for, and feed and water the stock, and limiting the liability to negligence by the contracting carrier on its own road, is not contrary to public policy.—Hengstler v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 125 Mich. 530.

¶ 275. A common carrier's liability does not attach to a railway company that has contracted to move a menagerie in the latter's own cars, controlled by its own agents, and, though operated by railway employees, run upon a time schedule to suit the menagerie. And a stipulation that the railway company shall not be liable for injuries to the menagerie caused by want of care in thus moving it may be upheld.—Coup v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 56 Mich. 111.

¶ 276. Cattle were delivered to a railroad company for immediate shipment. Two days afterwards the company delivered a contract for carriage with restrictive clauses. In an action for damages caused by unreasonable delay, held, that the contract would be the measure of the obligation of the company from the time it was given, but would not merge any liability the company might have incurred by unreasonable delay previously,—there being nothing in the terms indicating such an intent.—Cleveland & T. R. Co. v. Perkins, 17 Mich. 296.

¶ 277. A contract for the carriage of live stock which exempts the railroad company from responsibility for losses and damages "in loading, unloading, conveyance and otherwise," whether arising from negligence, misconduct or otherwise, does not exempt the company from the necessity of furnishing suitable cars; and a loss in consequence of defective cars the company is liable for.—Hawkins v. Great Western R. Co., 17 Mich. 57; Great Western Ry. Co. v. Hawkins, 18 Mich. 427.

¶ 278. A contract of a railroad to carry a carload of cattle does not impose upon the company the duty to feed and water them when its express provisions put that duty on the shipper.—Hengstler v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 125 Mich. 530.

¶ 279. The words "or from causes beyond their control" in a contract for the shipment of live stock providing that the carrier should not be liable for the injury to live stock from "any or either of the following causes to wit: overloading, crowding upon one another, kicking or goring, suffocating, fright, burning of hay or straw or other material used for feeding or bedding, or by fire from any cause whatever, or by heat, cold or by changes in weather, or for delay caused by stress of weather, by obstruction of track, by riots, strikes or stoppage of labor, or from causes beyond their control" should be construed as referring to the word "delay."—Slider v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 194 Mich. 581. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

¶ 280. In an agreement with a carrier for the transportation of cattle the owner agreed to take and assume "all and every risk of injuries which the animals or either of them may receive in consequence of any of them being wild, unruly, vicious, weak, escaping, maiming or killing themselves or each other, or from delays," etc., and "risk of any loss or damage which may be sustained by reason of any delay, or from any other cause or thing in, or incident to, or from or in the loading or unloading of the stock." Such agreement held to refer to injuries to the animals caused by delay, etc., and to loss or damage by reason of delay in loading and unloading, and to have no reference to other losses which the delay of the carrier might cause.—Sisson v. Cleveland & T. R. Co., 14 Mich. 489.

¶ 281. The mere statement of an agent that a carload of cattle could be shipped through to the destination is not an agreement to be liable for the neglect of a connecting carrier.—Hengstler v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 125 Mich. 530.

Limitation of liability of carrier as applied to shipment of live stock, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 718-731.

§ 99. Care, feeding and watering in transit.

Assumption of duty by shipper, see post § 100.
Liability for injury while unloaded, see post § 102.
Pleading negligence, see post § 106.

Person riding on pass to care for stock, as passenger, see post § 113.

¶ 282. It may be said that the duty of drenching or showering stock which is being transported by a common carrier, is part of the actual duty of transportation.—Wallace v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 633.

¶ 283. Whether an express company transporting live birds, either as a common carrier or as an ordinary carrier for hire, would not, in the absence of express agreement to do so, be impliedly bound to supply them with food and water, so far, at least, as was necessary for their preservation, quaere. A refusal to charge, in a suit to recover its freight charges, that the company was not required to feed and water the birds in the absence of the agreement to do so, and the submission to the jury of the fact of not feeding and watering to be considered as going to show actual neglect, held not error.—American Merchants' Union Exp. Co. v. Phillips, 29 Mich. 515.

Liability of carrier for injury to or death of live stock due to heat, see note, 1 N. C. C. A. 581-587.
Negligence of carrier incidental to the dipping of live stock in accordance with quarantine laws, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 281-288.

§ 100. ——Duty assumed by shipper or caretaker.

Evidence to show that caretaker was passenger, see post § 217.
Sufficiency of evidence of denial of opportunity, see post § 107.

¶ 285. It is the custom of shippers of live stock to send a caretaker with the stock, and, in the absence of an agreement on the part of the carrier to perform the duties of a caretaker, a shipper assumes all risks arising from his failure to comply with such custom.—Heller v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 109 Mich. 53.

¶ 286. The provision that "the stock is to be loaded, unloaded, fed, watered and otherwise cared for, while in the cars, by the shipper or owner," does not mean that the duty is to be performed by the shipper while the train is in motion, and without being afforded an opportunity by the company to perform it, but, if said provision should be given any force, it creates a fair inference that the company will afford the shipper the opportunity to perform the duty which it has seen fit to impose upon him.—Smith v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 100 Mich. 148.

¶ 287. Where a railroad company accepts horses for shipment over its road under a contract which provides that they are to be "loaded, unloaded, fed, watered and otherwise cared for, while in the cars, by the shipper or owner, and at his expense and risk," the company, as a bailee for hire, having control of the cars in which the horses are placed, is bound at least to furnish the shipper an opportunity to give the animals the care which they may require.—Smith v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 100 Mich. 148.

¶ 288. Where the shipper of live stock sends a caretaker with the stock, the railroad is not chargeable with neglect to afford an opportunity to feed and water the stock, where no request for such opportunity is made by the caretaker.—McKenzie v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 137 Mich. 112.

§ 101. Liability for loss, injury or delay.

Of general freight carriers, see ante II, E. Measure of damages, see Damages.

¶ 289. A statute requiring a railroad company to carry freight from its depots and way stations in the order in which it is received, when desired by the owner, is not violated by delaying the transportation of stock awaiting shipment at a way station and ready when the train passed, but which was not ready when the train was made up, and which could not be taken without the employment of an extra engine sent on at night for that purpose. The company are bound only to provide means to meet the ordinary exigencies of the business of their road, and are not obliged, owing to a sudden and unavoidable exigency arising from accident, to put another train upon the route.—Michigan Southern & Northern I. R. Co. v. McDonough, 21 Mich. 165.

Liability of carrier for damages to live stock due to defective or inadequate car accepted from connecting carrier, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 483-492.

Liability of carrier of live stock for loss or damage, due to insecure yards, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 763-778.

Liability of carrier for loss or depreciation in value of live stock awaiting shipment, in transit, or awaiting delivery after transportation, because of confinement in crowded, unsheltered, or otherwise insanitary yards, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 826-846.

§ 102. ——Injury while unloaded incident to transportation.

¶ 290. A duty rests upon the carrier to prevent the escape of animals unloaded for some reason incident to the transportation.—Snyder v. King, 199 Mich. 345.

¶ 291. Where an interstate shipment of horses is unloaded at an intermediate point for the purpose of being watered and fed as required by the federal statute, 34 Stat. L. 608, such unloading is incident to the transportation, and, notwithstanding a prejudicial provision in the uniform live stock contract under which the horses are shipped, recovery of damages for injuries sustained by the horses after being unloaded at such intermediate point cannot be defeated on the ground that they were suffered when the horses were not being actually transported, a contract not being capable of overriding a federal statute.—Snyder v. King, 199 Mich. 345.

¶ 292. In an action aaginst a carrier for damages for injuries to an interstate shipment of horses resulting from their escape from the stock pen, at an intermediate point, into which they were unloaded for the purpose of being watered and fed as required by the federal statute, held that it was not error to deny defendant's motion for a directed verdict, sought on the grounds that there was no negligence in handling the horses at the intermediate point and that plaintiff's loss resulted from the nature of the animals themselves.—Snyder v. King, 199 Mich. 345.

§ 103. ——Excuses; act of God.

In general shipments, see ante § 40.

¶ 293. Shippers of live stock assume the risk of unavoidable accidents and delays.—McKenzie v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 137 Mich. 112.

¶ 294. A carrier is not liable for injuries to stock in transit where the injury is due to an act of God and not to the negligence of the carrier.—Tobin v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 192 Mich. 549.

¶ 295. A railroad company is not liable for delay in the transportation of a car of live stock due to a washout caused by heavy rains where it acted promptly in repairing the track.—McKenzie v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 137 Mich. 112.

¶ 296. Before a carrier can be absolved from liability for damage to stock in transit as the result of an act of God, it must appear that the circumstance relied on as an act of God was the sole, proximate cause of the damage.—Tobin v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 192 Mich. 549.

¶ 297. In an action to recover for damage to stock while in transit, where the defense is that the damage was due to a severe storm, which was an act of God, it cannot be said to appear that the storm was the sole proximate cause of the damage sought to be recovered for, where it appears that there were delays in transportation which were not accounted for.—Tobin v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 192 Mich. 549.

§ 104. Rights of action and person entitled to sue.

¶ 298. Live stock was transferred to the plaintiff while in possession of a railroad company for transportation. In an action against the company for unreasonable delay it was claimed by defendants that they were liable only in respect of such delay as had occurred after the transfer was made on their books. Held, that they were liable from the time when they had actual notice of the transfer. —Cleveland & T. R. Co. v. Perkins, 17 Mich. 296.

§ 105. Claim and presentation of same before suit.

¶ 299. The so-called "5 day" provision for filing a claim for damages under a contract for the transportation of stock, is part of a special contract limiting the carrier's common-law liability.—Tobin v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 192 Mich. 549.

¶ 300. There was a substantial compliance with a contract of carriage requiring a verified claim for damages for injury to a shipment of stock to be made within a specified time after unloading to the tariff manager of the carrier in a certain city before a claim would be paid or an action could be brought, except as to the verification, where, upon delivery of a shipment of horses to a shipper at the point of destination which was other than the city where the tariff manager was located, and upon tender of a receipt to the shipper for signature, he, before signing it, amended it by inserting over the words "in apparently good order," the words "stock damaged as per statement attached," and in such attached statement the horses were numbered and a detailed report of the injury to each one set forth.—Slider v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 194 Mich. 581. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

¶ 301. In an action against a carrier for damages for injuries to an interstate shipment of horses held that the report of plaintiff's claim made by defendant's agent at the point of destination was, under the circumstances, a substantial compliance with the requirement of the uniform live stock contract under which the horses were shipped that in the event of the accrual of damages a verified claim therefor be made in writing within five days from the time the stock is removed from the car.—Snyder v. King, 199 Mich. 345.

¶ 302. Evidence that a carrier received an unverified claim for damages from a shipper of stock, with a promise to give the matter prompt attention as soon as certain discrepancies were explained, and without any other objection than that the amount claimed was unreasonable, justifies the finding of a waiver of the requirement of its bill of lading that, in order to maintain a claim for damages to stock, a verified statement thereof must be served within five days after the removal of the stock from the cars.—Soper v. Pontiac, O. & N. R. Co., 113 Mich. 443.

¶ 303. The provision of a bill of lading that no claim for damages to the stock in question should be made unless filed within five days, was waived where, although the claim was filed one day late, it was returned to the shipper's agent to have the freight bill attached, which, having been done, the claim was placed with the carrier's agents, who after examination and further correspondence, declined to make payment, but not upon the ground of the claim having been filed too late.—Wallace v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 633.

Duty to give notice of injury to live stock by carrier notwithstanding unreasonableness of stipulated period. See note, 11 N. C. C. A. 541-546.

Pleading in actions on general carriage, see ante §§ 81-85.
Making claim before suit, see ante § 105.
Pleading, evidence, instructions, and jury questions on damages, see Damages.

¶ 304. Whether plaintiff in an action for negligent carriage of live stock can recover for a specific negligent act, known to him at the time of bringing suit, without alleging the same in his declaration quære.—Heller v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 109 Mich. 53.

¶ 305. The fact that the declaration in a suit by a shipper of horses to recover the value of one of the horses, which he claims died by reason of want of care, feeding, and watering, charges both delay in transporting the horses, and failure to furnish the shipper an opportunity for feeding and watering them, will not warrant the contention that, as neither of said causes would alone have occasioned the death of the horse, it is necessary for plaintiff, not only to prove both, but to show that defendant omitted to perform its duty to plaintiff in both particulars, and therefore, if there is no liability on its part for delay of trains, that one of the essential elements of the proximate cause of the death of the horse cannot be charged against defendant, and the case must fail.—Smith v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 100 Mich. 148.

§ 107. Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence.

In actions on general carriage, see ante §§ 87-90.
Presumption, see also post ¶ 317.
Evidence of character of carrier, see also ante ¶ 268.
Evidence of waiver of claim for damages, see also ante ¶ 302.
General law of evidence, see Evidence.

¶ 306. Under a declaration in case against a company for violating the duties of a common carrier in its transportation of live stock, and charging the company as a common carrier only, proof is essential that the company has the character of a common carrier of such stock.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Perkins, 25 Mich. 329.

¶ 307. It is incumbent upon the plaintiff in an action for injuries to live stock during shipment to show what injury, if any, resulted after the act of negligence by the company upon which the claim for recovery is based, where it appears that most, if not all, of the injury was done before such act.—Heller v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 109 Mich. 53.

¶ 308. Where, in an action of tort to recover for negligent damage to stock in transportation, based on the common-law liability of the carrier, the plaintiff makes out a prima facie case, it is incumbent on defendant to show a special contract changing or modifying the common-law liability.—Tobin v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 192 Mich. 549.

¶ 309. In an action by a shipper to recover from an express company the value of a bull calf that broke from its crate and escaped, the conduct of the bull at the time it escaped being material, evidence is admissible by the plaintiff as to the disposition of the bull while on his farm.—Deake v. United States Exp. Co., 172 Mich. 451.

¶ 310. In an action in tort to recover for negligent damage to stock in transportation, based on the common-law duty of the carrier, plaintiff makes out a prima facie case when he shows a delivery in good order to the carrier, its subsequent delivery in bad order by the carrier, together with delay in transportation and failure to feed.—Tobin v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 192 Mich. 549.

¶ 311. In an action by a shipper against a carrier for the death of hogs through delay and failure to water externally, where the defendant claimed that it did not appear whether the damage occurred while the car was being transported by the defendant or later while in charge of another road, the jury might have drawn the inference that defendant was responsible for the injury from the fact that the delay of the defendant was during the most trying time of the day.—Wallace v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 633.

¶ 312. In an action for damages for delay in transportation of live stock against a carrier, statements by defendant's station agent that defendant had acquired control of a connecting line whereon the delay was caused, do not prove that the said connecting line was not a carrier responsible alone for the acts of its servants, and for the service it gave freight shippers.—Goehrend v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 146 Mich. 497.

¶ 313. Testimony of a shipper of a carload of cattle that he spoke to the conductor and brakeman about feeding and watering whenever he had the chance, and that he told them the cattle would need water and feed, and they told him they could not give it to him, is not sufficient to fasten liability on the initial or connecting carrier where the bill of lading puts the burden of caring for the stock on the shipper and the evidence shows an 8 hour lay-over in one town, where it might have been done.—Hengstler v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 125 Mich. 530.

§ 108. Questions for jury and instructions.

Instructions as to duty to feed and water, see also ante ¶ 283.
Directing verdict on negligence, see also ante ¶¶ 284, 292.

¶ 314. The question of the negligence of a carrier to drench or shower certain hogs which were being carried, was for the jury, although the bill of lading provided that the shipper was to load, take care of, feed and water the stock during transportation, and that neither the carrier nor a connecting carrier was to be under liability or duty with reference thereto except in the actual transportation; and although the shipper did not accompany the stock, although given transportation for the purpose; it appearing that the conductor knew that the shipper was not on the train, and that such shipper could have done nothing in the way of drenching or showering the hogs had he been present.—Wallace v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 633.

¶ 315. In an action by a shipper against a carrier for the death of hogs through delay in delivery at the stock yards and failure to shower the hogs while in transit, where the testimony as to the negligence of the defendant was conflicting, and there was room to infer both delay and failure to properly shower, the question was one for the jury.—Wallace v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 633.

¶ 316. The case should go to the jury where a carrier was sued for delay in transporting animals and failure to feed and water them or provide means for so doing, also for breach of the statutory duty (Comp. L. 1897, § 11742) not to carry them continuously for more than 28 hours without unloading, rest, food and water, and where there was evidence that the delay and damage occurred after delivery to the L. E. railroad at a junction point, but there was evidence that the L. E. railroad was controlled by and a part of defendant's line, and there having been no routing or any connecting line named in the contract which simply undertook to transport from place of origin named "to destination if on the carrier's line of railroad, otherwise to the place" of connection; since it could not be said as matter of law that the injury did not occur on defendant's line under such proof.—Goehrend v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 146 Mich. 497.

¶ 317. Where freight charges for carrying live pigeons were sued for, and neither pleadings nor evidence indicated in what character the plaintiff carried them, it was held no error to refuse charges based on the assumption that common carriers are not liable for injury to live animals in the course of transportation; also, that the plaintiff could not complain of being held to the liability, at least, of ordinary bailees for hire.—American Merchants' Union Exp. Co. v. Phillips, 29 Mich. 515.

IV. CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS.

A. IN GENERAL; REGULATIONS; DUTY TO PUBLIC.

§ 109. In general; duty to receive and carry.

General law and regulations of carriers, see ante I.

Carriage of baggage, see post V.

¶ 318. Any one, no matter what his character is or has been, presenting himself for transportation to a common carrier, is, upon paying his fare, entitled to be transported, provided there is nothing in his condition or conduct when he presents himself, to justify his exclusion.—Meisner v. Detroit, B. I. & W. Ferry Co., 154 Mich. 545.

¶ 319. It is not proper to exclude a blind person simply on account of his blindness, if he is competent to care for himself.—Wilson v. Detroit United Ry., 167 Mich. 107.

§ 110. Inception of the relation; who are passengers.

Evidence as to character, see post § 217.

Delivery to attach liability for baggage, see post § 246.

Person buying ticket solely to have baggage carried, see also post ¶ 826.

¶ 320. The acceptance of a passenger by a carrier need not be direct nor express to create the relation of carrier and passenger, but it must be something from which it can fairly be implied.—Ramonas v. Grand Rapids Ry. Co., 194 Mich. 69.

¶ 321. One who runs and boards a moving interurban car need not introduce himself or be introduced to the carrier's agent, or be recognized by the carrier's agent before he becomes a passenger.—McKenzie v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry. Co., 195 Mich. 218.

¶ 322. Plaintiff engaged in an altercation in the public street with a police officer while on his way to defendant's depot for the purpose of taking a train. He then picked up his grips and went to the door of the depot, handed defendant's baggage master fifty cents, and without entering turned back and continued the altercation with said policeman, who after calling the depot watchman to his assistance arrested plaintiff. Plaintiff's apparent purpose in handing the fifty cents to said baggageman was to apply same on the purchase of a ticket, but no ticket was in fact sold to him. Held, he was not a passenger of defendant so as to render defendant liable for its watchman's part in arresting him.—Ruman v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 168 Mich. 651.

Existence of relation of passenger and carrier as dependent upon prepayment of fare, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 288-298.

Liability for injuries to intending passengers, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 432-450.

Liability of railroad company to prospective passenger struck by train or car, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 758-789.

Liability of street railway company to prospective passenger struck by car, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 817-827.

§ 111. ——Persons on improper trains.

¶ 323. Since railroad companies may prohibit the carriage of passengers upon their freight trains, or prescribe the conditions upon which they may ride thereon, a lumber scaler could not become a passenger on a log train by making an arrangement with the conductor to permit him to ride, contrary to a rule of the company known to both.—Greenfield v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 557.

¶ 324. The existence of the relationship of passenger and carrier cannot be implied where a person, not familiar with the English language, but possessing the ordinary powers of observation, who has been to an amusement park where a miniature railway is operated carrying passengers and has seen the amusement concessions operated, goes to such park at a time when such railway is not being operated, sees men congregated about the railway, some of whom are eating dinner, and knows that they are employees, and that the ticket office is closed, that no tickets are being offered for sale, and no efforts being made to collect fare, and, who, instead of consulting the engineer about the price of admission or fare, or asking him when he would be ready to take on passengers for the day's business, simply asks him about making up steam, and is not invited to board the train by anybody, but is told by the engineer that when he was ready to take on passengers he would let him know, and who boards such train with employees who are on their way to work on another part of the railway, and is injured.—Ramonas v. Grand Rapids Ry. Co., 194 Mich. 69.

§ 112. ——Workmen traveling free or on passes.

Nonliability to person unlawfully traveling free on logging train, see post ¶ 431.

¶ 325. Where plaintiff, who was employed by defendant in a town where he resided, was ordered to work at the same wages at a town some distance away, being given a passbook which enabled him to ride upon defendant's railway between his home and his place of work, which book was used by him for that purpose, the inference is that the book was a part of the consideration for plaintiff's services, and therefore it was not furnished gratuitously, and plaintiff was not being carried gratuitously on it, and an agreement on the back exempting defendant from liability, is not binding.—Eberts v. Detroit, Mt. C. & M. C. Ry., 151 Mich, 280.

¶ 326. Ignorance of the fact that he was being wrongfully carried without payment of fare on a railroad train, will not relieve a person from the effect of a violation of Public Acts 1909, No. 300 (How. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 3360-3365), prohibiting the furnishing of free transportation to passengers.—Van Auken v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 182 Mich. 331.

¶ 327. The conductor of a logging train cannot bind his employer by inviting a person to ride thereon in contravention of the published schedule of fares, and of Public Acts 1909, No. 300 (How. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 3360-3365), prohibiting the furnishing of free transportation.—Van Auken v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 182 Mich. 331.

Employee of street railway company as passenger while being carried to or from work, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 165-174.

Liability of carrier for injuries to government postal employees, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 197-222.

§ 113. ——Caretakers accompanying shipments.

¶ 328. A person accompanying stock on a drover's pass, is a passenger for hire, and he is not bound by a stipulation releasing the carrier from liability for negligence.—Weaver v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 139 Mich. 590.

¶ 329. Under a contract giving a shipper the right to have an employee accompany a shipment of stock, a person actually put in charge of, and accompanying the stock is an "employee" though he has not previously been employed by the shipper and receives no compensation other than the free transportation.—Weaver v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 139 Mich. 590.

¶ 330. "Bona fide employees" of a shipper of stock as used in instructions to the agents of the carrier will be construed as meaning "Parties actually in charge of and accompanying within named stock," where the latter expression is used in the contract of carriage.—Weaver v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 139 Mich. 590.

¶ 331. Where a contract by a shipper for the shipment of stock contained the expression "Parties actually in charge of and accompanying within named stock," and instructions to the carrier's agents on the back of the contract specified "bona fide employees" of the shipper, "bona fide employees" will be held to mean the same as the expression used in the contract.—Weaver v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 139 Mich. 590.

Liability of carrier for injury to shipper accompanying shipment, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 649-674.

§ 114. Continuance and termination of the relation.

Continuance of relation until time to alight and be clear of cars, see also post § 183.
Continuance of relation until passenger has passed clear of unsafe place at point of alighting, see post § 184.
Effect of tardiness in leaving train due to sleeping, see also post ¶ 483.
Termination of initial carrier's relation when change is made to connection, see post ¶¶ 814, 815.
Ejectment or order to leave train as making one trespasser, see post ¶ 381.

¶ 332. The relation of common carrier and passenger continues to exist while the latter is alighting from the train.—Serviss v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 169 Mich. 564.

¶ 333. In the case of a street railway, ordinarily, the relation of carrier and passenger terminates as soon as the passenger alights and the railway no longer owes him the duties of care of a carrier to a passenger.—Spangler v. Saginaw Valley Traction Co., 152 Mich. 405.

¶ 334. The relation of passenger and carrier continues while the passenger is transferring from one car to another, he having been furnished a ticket enabling him to do so, when a transfer from one street car to another is part of a continuous trip.—Wilson v. Detroit United Ry., 167 Mich. 107.

¶ 335. Passengers who have alighted in safety from motor cars running on railroad tracks at a country crossing and at a point in the public highway from which they can depart where and as they please, thereafter cease to be passengers, and become merely travelers upon the highway.—Switzer v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 190 Mich. 35, 16 N. C. C. A. 198.

¶ 336. A passenger who has just landed from a steamboat is not so identified with the steamboat company as to make the company solely liable for an injury suffered by the passenger from another quarter immediately afterwards.—Malmsten v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 49 Mich. 94.

Status of passenger leaving train for refreshments, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 716-723.

§ 115. General duty to passengers.

To prevent personal injuries, see post IV, E.
Towards children and infirm or disabled persons, see also post § 150.
Duty towards free passengers, see post § 152.
In regard to cars, facilities and stops, see post IV, C, IV, E.
In regard to carrying passenger and ejection, see post IV, D.
In regard to tickets and fares, see post IV, B.
In taking on or setting down passengers, see post IV. E, 5.
Protection from other passengers or carrier's servants, see post § 187.
Right of passengers to be in stations and cars, see post IV, C, D.
Duty of passengers to know ordinary incidents of travel, see post § 188.
Pleading, evidence, questions of fact, and instructions in passenger's actions for injuries, see post IV, E, 8.
Instructions as to care required, see post §§ 233-237.

¶ 337. In determining the duties of conductors, and the rights of passengers, the methods generally adopted by common carriers to carry on business successfully must be regarded.—Frederick v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 37 Mich. 342.

¶ 338. Railway passenger carriers fulfil their duty if they furnish and conduct their road in the manner generally found and believed to be safe by prudent railway companies.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537.

Liability for injury to dead body, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 1002-1009.
Duty of carrier towards dead body of passenger dying at sea, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 89-98.
Liability of carrier growing out of transportation of dead bodies, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 235-256.

§ 116. Carrier's regulations.

Of hackmen at stations, see ante § 8.
Against travel on freight trains, see post § 130.
Duty to prevent riding in unsafe place, see post § 131.
Ejection for breach of regulations, see post IV, D.
Pleading regulations, see post § 208.
Rules and waiver of them as jury question, see post § 221 et seq.
Power of carrier to regulate, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8243, "Ninth" par.

¶ 339. Passengers on railroad cars are not interested in the internal affairs of the company, nor are they required to know the rules or regulations made by the directors of the company for the control of the actions of its agents and management of its affairs.—Hufford v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 64 Mich. 631.

¶ 340. The right to be carried by a common carrier of passengers is a right superior to the rules and regulations of the conveyance, and it cannot be affected by them; but the accommodation of passengers, while being transported, is subject to such rules and regulations as the carrier may think proper to make, provided they be reasonable.—Day v. Owen, 5 Mich. 520.

¶ 341. Rules and regulations must have for their object the accommodation of passengers generally; and they must be of a permanent nature, and not made for a particular occasion or emergency.—Day v. Owen, 5 Mich. 520.

Right of carrier to make reasonable rules and regulations in the transportation of its passengers, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 982-996.

Rule of carrier requiring passengers to exhibit tickets before entering trains, see note, 7 N. C. C. A. 1099-1104.

B. CONTRACTS, TICKETS AND FARES; LIMITING LIABILITY.

§ 117. In general; contract for carriage.

Acceptance of passenger by carrier, see ante § 110.

Stamping, dating and signing, see post § 125.

Coupon ticket as separate contracts with right to stop over en route, see post § 124.

Transfers and tickets for connecting lines, see post § 239.

What facilities and trains must be furnished under the contract, see post IV, C.

Acquiescence in riding on trains not within contract, see post § 364.

Regulation and reasonableness of rates, see ante § 3; and see Public Service; Railroads, I; Street Railroads, I.

Right to eject for want of proper ticket, see post IV, D.

Pleading payment or tender of fare, see post §§ 142, 146, 147.

Evidence as to honoring of ticket issued by predecessor, see post ¶ 403.

Prohibition of free passes, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8113 (a).

¶ 342. A contract to carry a child as a passenger is established where a father asked for tickets for his child to a village at which there was no station and, pursuant to custom, was given a ticket by the agent to a station of a similar name two miles distant, and such ticket was accepted by the conductor.—Moss v. Detroit & Mackinaw Ry. Co., 188 Mich. 1.

Duty of carrier to change money presented in payment of fare, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 877-889.

§ 118. Special contracts.

Commutation tickets, dating and signing, see post § 124.

Contract for particular stop, see post §§ 132, 133.

Breach of contract, see post § 145.

Right of action for breach of contract, see post § 145.

Statutory sanction for reduced and special rates, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8350.

¶ 343. The passenger and ticket agent of defendant railway made a contract to carry plaintiff and his party promptly from Detroit to Washington, upon the regular train, to arrive there at the time required, guaranteeing the connection at Buffalo. Held, the contract was within the scope of the agent's authority.—Hayes v. Wabash R. Co., 163 Mich. 174.

Liability of carrier for failure to furnish special train or other exclusive accommodation, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 777-779.

§ 119. Nature, necessity and sufficiency of tickets.

For through or local travel, see post § 122.

Extra fare for payment on train, see post § 126.

Duty to show ticket or evidence thereof, see post § 137.

Duty to pay fare to prevent ejection, see post § 138.

Burden of proof and evidence in action for ejection, see post § 143.

Necessity to check baggage, see post § 246.

Parol evidence to prove terms of contract, see Evidence, V, A.

¶ 344. As between conductor and passenger the latter's ticket is conclusive evidence of the extent of his right to travel, and he must produce it when called on, as the evidence of his right to the seat he claims.—Frederick v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 37 Mich. 342; Hufford v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 53 Mich. 118.

¶ 345. A passenger ticket "good on any train" does not give the right of riding on a through freight train without a permit, where the company's rule forbids; and the conductor may eject a person who attempts to ride.—Thomas v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 72 Mich. 355.

¶ 346. In order to show that a contract of carriage evidenced by a mileage book issued by another company has been assumed by a defendant carrier, evidence that it had been honored for several months, is admissible.—Johnson v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 153 Mich. 65.

§ 120. ——For travel on special rates.

¶ 347. Conceding the right to so contract, a contract entered into between a village and an interurban railway company, whereby the passenger rates anywhere on the line are fixed at 1½ cents per mile is enforceable and any person may claim the benefit without being required to purchase a ticket.—Coy v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. Ry., 125 Mich. 616.

§121. Opportunity and place to buy tickets.

Statutory provisions, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8246.

¶ 348. Under a street railway franchise providing for the sale of tickets on the cars good either way between points in a village to a certain city, in strips of five at a reduced rate, and providing that tickets be kept upon each car, the company is required to have such tickets for sale on its cars at points other than within the territorial limits of such village.—Rice v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. Ry. Co., 122 Mich. 677.

¶ 349. Under a provision in a franchise that family tickets "entitling the purchaser or any member of his immediate family to ten rides from any point in said township to and from the city of Pontiac and vice versa," shall be sold, the meaning is that every one has a right to purchase a family ticket at the place where he has a right to board the cars for passage, and it is not a compliance therewith to sell tickets only at one terminal.—Township of West Bloomfield v. Detroit United Ry., 146 Mich. 198.

§ 122. Through, local and zone rates and tickets.

Power of Michigan Central railroad, see ante § 3.

Coupon tickets and right to stop over, see post § 124.

Franchise rates for street railways, see also Street Railways, I.

Statutory rates, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8243, "Ninth" par.

¶ 350. A passenger on an interurban car is entitled to ride from one town to another for the aggregate of the fares for the different townships, fixed by contracts between the railway company and the various townships and cities through which he rides, regardless of the general mileage charge sought to be imposed by the company, and regardless of rates of fare fixed for villages inside the said townships, and subject to township regulations because inside.—Coy v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. Ry., 125 Mich. 616.

¶ 351. A street railway company being obligated by a village franchise to accept a certain fare per mile along its road to or from such village, was bound to accept such fare from passengers to or from such village, although the franchises of other villages through which such passenger passed, provided for a different rate.—Vining v. Detroit, Y., A. A. & J. Ry., 133 Mich. 539.

¶ 352. A ticket issued by a street railway company for passage from a village to another city, is a contract binding upon the street railway company, and being unrestricted and unlimited, additional fare cannot be exacted from the passenger because of the fact that he is a through passenger and did not get on the car at the village referred to, but at a point further away.—Kissane v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. Ry., 121 Mich. 175.

¶ 353. A street railway company, organized under Pub. Acts 1893, No. 12, which provides for maintenance of a road upon conditions agreed upon by the company, and townships through which the road passes (§ 13), which company is also granted a franchise from a village situated wholly within a township, granting to the company the right to charge one and one-half cents per mile for carriage of passengers, provided that no passenger shall be carried for less than five cents for any distance, is not authorized to charge an extra fare for riding through the village where the franchise granted by the township stipulates the amount to be charged for passage through the township.—Kissane v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. Ry., 121 Mich. 175.

¶ 354. A street railway company, organized under Pub. Acts 1893, No. 12, which provides for maintenance of a road upon conditions agreed upon by the company, and townships through which the road passes (§ 13), is bound by such agreements, and where such company operates under franchises from several townships, permitting transportation for a certain sum for passage through each township, it cannot exact an additional fare for passage through a village situated wholly within one of such townships, even though the franchise granted by such village stipulates that no person shall be carried any distance for less than the additional sum sought to be collected.—Kissane v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. Ry., 121 Mich. 175.

Right of passenger to make journey by stages for purpose of taking advantage of local fares less than through fare, see note, 13 N. C. C. A. 967-968.

§ 123. Fractional fares and distances.

¶ 355. How. St., § 3323, subd. 9, which authorizes railroad companies to regulate the time and manner in which passengers and property shall be transported, and the tolls and compensation to be paid therefor, but provides that such compensation for transporting any passenger and his or her ordinary baggage, not exceeding a given weight, shall not exceed two, two and one-half or three cents per mile, according to the gross earnings per mile of each road, will not permit a charge for a fraction of a mile, unless it is so large a fraction as to make the charge of one cent or more not in excess of the rate per mile fixed by the statute.—Zagelmeyer v. Cincinnati, S. & M. R. Co., 102 Mich. 214.

¶ 356. Under How. St., § 3323, subd. 9, fixing railroad passenger rates at three cents per mile, the utmost which could be charged for a distance of 6.48 miles was 19 cents, the fraction over being less than one-half of 1 cent.—Chamberlain v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 122 Mich. 477.

¶ 357. A street railway company which placed its own construction upon the provisions of its franchise requiring it to sell a strip of five tickets for fifty cents for the fare between a village and a city, by dividing each ticket into halves for use at intermediate points, had no right to demand more than 5 cents for the remainder of the trip from a passenger who had used a half ticket at such intermediate point and had demanded a strip of 5, which the conductor did not have on hand.—Rice v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. R. Co., 122 Mich. 677.

§ 124. Coupon and return tickets.

Stamping, dating and identification, see post § 125.

¶ 358. A person bought tickets at a railroad agency in Buffalo, one from Buffalo to Stratford in Canada, and the other from Stratford to Detroit over another road. The two tickets were printed on one paper. He used the first; stopped over at Stratford for two months, and then continued his journey to Detroit. On offering the second ticket for his passage it was refused because of the delay. Held, that the tickets were distinct contracts for separate journeys, and, as they contained no restrictions, the validity of the second was not affected by the delay.—Brooke v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 15 Mich. 332.

¶ 359. A return coupon is not evidence to conductor of the holder's right to finish out the remainder of the going portion of the trip, where the first conductor mistakenly took up all the going coupons, leaving the passenger without any token of his right to ride from a change station to destination.—Van Dusan v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 97 Mich. 439.

§ 125. Stamping, dating, signing and identification.

Ejection for failure to have ticket stamped and dated and signed, see post § 136.

¶ 360. Where the right to a return passage upon an excursion ticket was conditioned upon presentation of the ticket to defendant's agent at Chicago, its dating and stamping by him, and the affixing of plaintiff's signature to a printed statement on the back of the ticket, as evidence that he was the original purchaser, held, that the condition was reasonable, and that it was a condition precedent to plaintiff's right to such return passage, and that the conductor to whom the ticket was presented was not called upon to investigate as to plaintiff's identity.—Edwards v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 81 Mich. 364.

¶ 361. A commutation book bore date of issue June 8, 1909, the date of expiration was properly punched July 9, 1909, but was improperly written and printed on the back as of June 9, 1909; held that it should have been received when presented for passage on June 28, 1909.—Humphrey v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 166 Mich. 645.

§ 126. Extra charge for payment on train.

See also ante ¶¶ 347, 357.

Extra charge for through travel, see also ante ¶ 352.

¶ 362. A railroad company cannot impose, as a penalty for not purchasing a ticket before entering its car, so large a sum that the total fare collected on the train exceeds the maximum rate allowed by statute.—Zagelmeyer v. Cincinnati, S. & M. R. Co., 102 Mich. 214.

§ 127. Limitations of liability.

Effect of failure to read time limit on transfer slip, see post § 239.

Notice of limitation to own lines, see post § 240.

¶ 363. A carrier may impose such restrictions touching its liability while carrying passengers on a logging train, as it may see fit.—Van Auken v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 182 Mich. 331.

Effect of limitation of railroad tickets to particular trains, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 416-424.

Effect of clause in free pass purporting to relieve carrier from liability for personal injuries, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 549-565.

C. TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES, ROUTE AND STOPS.

§ 128. In general.

Liability for personal injuries to passengers, and duty and negligence causing such injuries, see post IV, E.
Duty to have crew or attendants, see post §§ 166, 172-174.
Operating at uneven speed or with jolts and jerks, see post § 167.
Duty to afford accommodations, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8244.

¶ 364. Where a conductor permits a passenger to ride upon an expired ticket, or upon tickets good only upon certain trains, common carriers are not estopped by these acts, though often repeated, to thereafter deny the passenger's right of transportation, contrary to the terms of his contract.—Johnson v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 153 Mich. 65.

§ 129. Cars and accommodations.

Right to eject for riding on wrong train, see post § 135.
Condition for safety of passengers, see post §§ 162-164.
Liability for failure of connecting line to furnish agreed accommodations, see post § 240.

¶ 365. Where the franchise given by a township to a street railway corporation contained a provision that the passenger cars should be "supplied with suitable appliances for a suburban railway, insuring the comfort, convenience and safety of its passengers" in an action to compel the corporation to comply with the provisions of the franchise, a finding by the jury that there were no toilet rooms or water tanks sustains the contention that the cars were not supplied with suitable appliances for a suburban railway to insure the comfort and convenience of passengers.—Township of West Bloomfield v. Detroit United Ry., 146 Mich. 198.

Liability of carrier for injury to or death of passenger due to failure to heat car or waiting room, see note, 1 N. C. C. A. 393-397.

§ 130. Travel on freight trains.

Person holding ticket "good on any train," see also ante ¶ 345.
Limiting liability, see ante § 127.
Care required of passengers, see post § 190.
Variance in action for ejectment, see post ¶ 396.
Permission to ride as jury question, see post § 221.

¶ 366. A rule prohibiting conductors of freight trains from allowing persons to travel as passengers thereon without permits is reasonable and valid.—Thomas v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 72 Mich. 355.

¶ 367. Railroad companies may prohibit the carriage of passengers upon their freight trains, or prescribe the conditions upon which they may ride thereon.—Greenfield v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 557.

¶ 368. Railroad companies may, through a long continued, open and notorious disregard of their rules by their employes, waive the enforcement of rules regarding riding on freight trains.—Greenfield v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 557.

§ 131. Place to ride.

Negligence in operating cars with reference to passengers not seated or riding out of ordinary manner, see post IV, E, 4.
Care required in operating cars with passengers on running board, see post § 165.
Duty to prevent child from riding in wrong place, see also post ¶ 426.
Contributory negligence in choosing wrong place, see post §§ 194-196.
Placing invalid on cot in baggage car, see post ¶ 561.

¶ 369. Street railway companies must use safe vehicles, and must not permit persons to ride in unsafe places on their cars.—East Saginaw City Ry. Co. v. Bohn, 27 Mich. 503.

¶ 370. A street railway company may prohibit passengers from riding upon the platform, or give notice that those who ride there must do so at their own risk, and until they adopt some such regulation and notify the public, they are liable for injuries resulting from their own negligent acts to patrons exercising reasonable care riding upon the platform.—Upham v. Detroit City R. Co., 85 Mich. 12.

¶ 371. Where the interior of a street car is crowded it is necessarily contemplated that passengers thereafter received shall ride upon the platform.—Larskowski v. Detroit United Ry., 193 Mich. 408.

¶ 372. A corporation which operates a logging railroad only as incident to its business and authorizes the conductors of its trains to receive passengers and furnishes them with tickets to be given upon payment of fare, which has no passenger cars, no train schedule, and does not solicit passenger traffic, and whose instructions are that persons carried must ride in the caboose and not elsewhere, owes no duty to any person to provide for his safety when riding anywhere other than in the caboose, and is not liable for an injury to a person sustained while riding on a flat car, although the conductor had instructed him to ride there, the conductor being expressly prohibited from allowing passengers to ride there, and his orders to the person injured not being within the scope of his agency.—Boisen v. Cobbs & Mitchell, 147 Mich. 429.

§ 132. Time tables and information.

Penalty for misinformation, see post § 147.
Penalty for failure to carry as held out, see post § 147.
Notice of change to avoid penalty, see also post § 147.
Calling trains and calling stations and stops on trains, see post §§ 175, 179.
Reliance by public on working time table, see also post ¶ 420.
Admissibility of time tables in action for breach, see post ¶ 413.

¶ 373. Railway passengers have a right to rely, until differently informed, on the information received by them from ticket agents in answer to their inquiries as to the stoppages of trains. But they must not disregard reasonable means of information.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Pierce, 47 Mich. 277.

¶ 374. Passengers about to embark upon a boat and with little time to spare are justified in assuming, if they do so in good faith, that they may safely follow the directions of the officers of the boat in getting on, unless there is very obvious danger in doing so. And if it takes an expert to define the duty of the officers, the presumption in the passenger's favor is all the stronger.—Clinton v. Root, 58 Mich. 182.

¶ 375. Railroad companies may change their time tables, and take off and put on trains, and all that is required under Comp. L. 1897, § 6235, which provides a penalty for failure to transport according to contract without legal or just excuse, is that reasonable notice be given of such changes.—Van Camp v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 137 Mich. 467.

§ 133. Stations and stops.

Right to rely on information as to stops, see ante § 132.
Penalty for failing to stop at station, see post § 147.

¶ 376. Railway passengers are entitled to remain in the waiting-room at a station as long as they have occasion to do so, and commit no offense against the good order of the place and reasonable regulations made to govern it; they are not bound to leave it on being ordered out by the keeper for any such indecorum as spitting on the floor, and the refusal to go on being ordered will not excuse the commission of an assault and battery upon them to compel them to.—People v. McKay, 46 Mich. 439.

¶ 377. A railway company has power, subject to liability for damages for any breach of contract involved, to determine for itself what trains shall stop at particular places.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Pierce, 47 Mich. 277.

¶ 378. A railway conductor cannot be required by a passenger to deviate from his regular stops on the latter's statement of an alleged agreement with the company conflicting therewith.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Pierce, 47 Mich. 277.

¶ 379. That a regular train has already taken on more passengers than it can properly accommodate, and that others are waiting at a regular station to board the train, rendering it, in the conductor's judgment, unsafe to stop, does not constitute a "legal or just excuse" for a failure to discharge a passenger having a ticket for such station, within How. St., § 3324, providing that a railroad company, in case of its failure, without a legal or just excuse, to deliver a passenger at his destination, shall be liable to a penalty of $100.—Hoyt v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co., 112 Mich. 638.

D. EJECTION OF PASSENGER AND BREACH OF CONTRACT.

§ 134. In general; grounds for ejection.

On connecting line, see post § 240.
Duty to hear passenger's explanation, see post § 140.
Personal injuries to passenger, see post IV, E.
Statutory grounds, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 8297, 8298.

¶ 380. A conductor has a right to eject a passenger who fails to produce a ticket which is apparently good upon its face or to pay cash fare.—Brown v. Rapid Ry. Co., 134 Mich. 591.

Ejection of passenger for disorderly conduct, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 1025-1028.
Right of carrier to eject passenger for refusal to pay child's fare, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 1060-1064.

§ 135. ——Person on wrong train.

See also ante ¶ 345.

¶ 381. One entering a train which frequently stopped at the desired destination, although not scheduled to stop there, cannot be considered a trespasser until the conductor has notified him that the train would not stop there and that he must detrain at another station or go to the next station beyond.—Baldwin v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 128 Mich. 417.

§ 136. ——Irregular or invalid ticket.

Ticket required for riding through special fare zone, see also ante § 122.

Duty to hear passenger's explanation, see post § 140.

Invalidity of transfer kept too long, see post § 239.

Questions for jury, see post § 144.

¶ 382. The conductor of a railroad train was not called upon to investigate as to a traveler's identity, and the company was not liable in tort for his ejectment from the cars, where such traveler presented to the conductor for the return passage an excursion ticket, which contained a provision agreed to in writing by the purchaser that it was conditioned upon presentation of such ticket to defendant's agent in Chicago, its dating and stamping by him, and the affixing of purchaser's signature on the back, where such condition had not been fulfilled and such traveler refused to pay his fare.—Edwards v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 81 Mich. 364.

§ 137. Duty to show ticket or evidence of right.

See also ante ¶¶ 344, 359.

¶ 383. A railway passenger who, having in his possession evidence of the fact that he has once paid his fare (e. g., a mileage book from which the proper mileage has been regularly detached), wilfully neglects to produce the same upon his fare being again demanded by the conductor in apparent good faith, cannot recover for his ejection from the train in consequence of his refusal to comply with such demand.—White v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 107 Mich. 681.

¶ 384. Where a passenger receives a check from the conductor on the surrender of his ticket, and goes into another car, and upon his fare being demanded, fails to produce the check, claiming that none was given him, and, on his refusal to return to the other car for identification, is ejected from the train, he cannot recover damages of the railroad company for such ejection.—Lucas v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 98 Mich. 1.

§ 138. Duty to pay fare demanded.

Effect of demand for too much fare, see post § 139.

¶ 385. Although if the railroad ticket is apparently good the passenger has a right to rely on it and refuse to leave the train, if the conductor requires him to do so as an alternative to paying his fare, the safer way is to pay the fare and afterwards hold the company responsible for the refunding of the money so paid and for compensation for any trouble he may be put to in getting it.—Hufford v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 53 Mich. 118.

¶ 386. Whatever a railway passenger's remedy against the company for damages arising from its refusal or failure to take him to his destination as agreed through its ticket agent, he has no right, without paying additional fare, to stay on the train after he is notified by the conductor that it will not stop there, and the additional exaction will be an element of the damages to which he may be entitled.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Pierce, 47 Mich. 277.

¶ 387. The rule requiring the passenger to pay a second time, if he has the money, in compliance with his duty to minimize defendant's loss, should not be extended so as to compel him, if he has not the money, to go among his friends or acquaintances upon the train and endeavor to borrow it at the risk of refusal and humiliation.—Light v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 165 Mich. 433 (Hooker, J., dissenting.)

¶ 388. Where a passenger in a street car which stops before arriving at his destination is told by the conductor to get off and take the next car and does so, but presents to the conductor of the second car no evidence except his own statement of his right to ride in that car without payment, and is therefore ejected, he cannot recover damages for an unlawful ejectment; it was his duty to pay his fare and seek redress for violation of contract to convey him to the end of the line.—Mahoney v. Detroit Street R. Co., 93 Mich. 612.

§ 139. ——Demand for excessive fare.

¶ 389. One who tenders the legal fare to the conductor of a passenger train, and is ejected because of his refusal to pay the customary fare, which is in excess of the amount legally demandable, may recover the actual damages sustained by reason of his ejection, although he had knowledge of the custom of the company, and had frequently paid the higher rate of fare. He is not relegated to his remedy of paying the fare demanded and then suing to recover the excess.—Chamberlain v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 110 Mich. 614.

¶ 390. A railway passenger who either produces a ticket which, as between the conductor and himself, entitles him to passage, or stands ready to pay the fare legally demandable, can recover substantial damages for being evicted from the car on his refusal to pay an unauthorized demand.—Zagelmeyer v. Cincinnati, S. & M. R. Co., 102 Mich. 214.

§ 140. Statement or explanation by passenger.

As to agreement to stop at certain place, see ante ¶ 378.

¶ 391. Where a passenger has bought from an authorized agent of the company a ticket covering the distance between two points, and tells the conductor that he has paid his fare to the agent who gave him the ticket presented and told him it was good, it is the conductor's duty to accept the statement of the passenger until he finds out it is not true, no matter what the ticket contained in words and figures or other marks.—Hufford v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 64 Mich. 631.

¶ 392. A passenger resisting ejection cannot compel a railroad conductor to accept without question, and without opportunity to investigate, his oral statement that he has paid his fare.—Mahoney v. Detroit St. R. Co., 93 Mich. 612.

¶ 393. In transferring from one street car to another, it is the duty of passengers to secure evidence of payment of fares, and a conductor is under no legal obligation to accept their statements that they have paid such fares.—People v. Detroit United Ry., 154 Mich. 514.

¶ 394. Defendant's conductor after collecting plaintiff's cash fare, threw the receipt therefor on the floor. Later he attempted to collect the fare again and upon plaintiff's refusal to pay twice ejected him from the car without giving plaintiff a chance to explain. The conductor had a duplicate receipt in his pocket which would have thrown light on the fact of payment by plaintiff if the conductor had stopped to examine same. Held, defendant was liable in a suit for damages.—Burnham v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 168 Mich. 55.

§ 141. Mode, time and place of ejection.

Liability for injury to drunken men put off of train and wandering back into danger, see also post ¶ 485.

¶ 395. A carrier of passengers is not required by the common law to put out a trespasser at one place rather than at another; and while the law will not permit a person to be wantonly exposed to peril, there is no rule which requires any consideration to be shown for the mere convenience of a wrong-doer.—Great Western Ry. Co. of Canada v. Miller, 19 Mich. 305.

¶ 396. The conductor of a train represents the company in its management, his position being similar to that of the master of a ship; and in the expulsion of a passenger from the train he will be regarded as acting in the line of his employment. But for any aggravations that may arise out of his wantonness and malice the responsibility of the company is not the same as his.—Great Western Ry. Co. of Canada v. Miller, 19 Mich. 305.

Duty and liability of carriers in regard to ejection of passengers from cars, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 998-1034.

§ 142. Actions for wrongful ejection; pleading.

Liability for personal injuries to passenger, see post IV, E.

Right to sue on breach of contract, see also post ¶ 410.

Actions for breach of contract, see post § 146.

Penal actions, see post § 147.

Evidence and questions of fact, see post §§ 143, 144.

Damages and the measure thereof, and pleading, evidence and instructions on damages, see Damages.

¶ 397. Whether an action for breach of contract might not lie for ejecting a passenger who had paid for a ticket to a certain point, but had been given one to a shorter distance, quaere. But it must not be based on the conductor's refusal to respect a correct ticket, if he really respects the ticket presented for the distance it covers.—Frederick v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 37 Mich. 342.

¶ 398. Where a declaration in an action against a railroad company for ejection from a train charges that plaintiff, lawfully riding as a passenger, was wrongfully put off by the conductor, and where the evidence shows that plaintiff, through the station agent's fault, was riding on the freight train without a proper permit, the variance is fatal.—Thomas v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 72 Mich. 355.

§ 143. ——Burden of proof and evidence.

¶ 399. One who alleges that he was unlawfully ejected by a carrier, after presenting a mileage book for the payment of his fare, is bound to show that he had a valid mileage ticket, good for transportation according to its terms, over defendant's road.—Johnson v. Michigan United R. Co., 153 Mich. 65.

¶ 400. In an action by a passenger for ejection on refusing to pay an excessive fare, where the exact distance was in dispute, the files and records in a prior suit between the same parties in which the distance was admitted, were properly admitted as they went to show that an excessive fare was being demanded after defendant knew by the ruling in that case what the limit was it could charge between the points in question.—Chamberlain v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 122 Mich. 477.

¶ 401. Plaintiff was one of a party of ball players for whom tickets were bought by their manager. Plaintiff's home was one station beyond that of the other players and he was put off by the conductor when attempting to ride beyond the stopping place of the other players. In response to a telegram from plaintiff the defendant's agent where the tickets were bought telegraphed plaintiff that one of the tickets sold was to plaintiff's station. At the trial defendants practically admitted that such ticket was sold. Held, it was not prejudicial error to admit the ticket in evidence at plaintiff's instance.—Light v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 165 Mich. 483.

¶ 402. The right of a passenger who was ejected from a street railway car after having presented a ticket which on its face entitled her to ride on the defendant's car, could not be defeated by testimony that the defendant, by advertisement, had sought to limit the time for the use of the ticket, where plaintiff had no knowledge of either the advertisement or the limitation.—Carney v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 659.

¶ 403. Where a carrier refused to honor a mileage ticket, and ejected a passenger, evidence that the passenger had previously traveled over defendant's road frequently, and that the validity of his ticket had not been questioned, is sufficient to sustain a verdict, on the theory that the contract evidenced by the mileage ticket, which was not on its face issued by defendant, had been assumed by defendant.—Johnson v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 153 Mich. 65.

§ 144. ——Questions of law and fact, and instructions.

¶ 404. In an action against a street-railway company for personal injuries sustained by reason of defendant's conductor forcibly ejecting plaintiff from the car, where the ticket presented by plaintiff to the conductor could not be used after a certain hour, and the testimony is in sharp conflict as to whether plaintiff presented his ticket before or after such hour, the case was properly submitted to the jury.—Scheer v. Detroit United Ry., 155 Mich. 561.

¶ 405. Plaintiff claimed that he was unlawfully ejected from railroad train by conductor while in possession of ticket entitling him to passage, which ticket, owing to his having fallen asleep, he did not have an opportunity to present, although, upon his regaining consciousness while being taken out of the car, he told the conductor he had a ticket. The questions involved held to have been properly submitted in the charge to the jury.—Ferguson v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 98 Mich. 533.

¶ 406. Where, in an action for unlawful ejection from defendant's train there was no evidence that the conductor gave orders to eject plaintiff, it was error to instruct the jury that if it should find that the conductor, or any other employee of defendant, acting under the conductor's orders, ejected plaintiff, or compelled him to alight, from the cars while they were in motion, as he testified, and if he was thereby injured, defendant was liable.—Brassel v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co., 101 Mich. 5.

¶ 407. A declaration for wrongful ejectment from one of defendant's trains averred that the conductor and a brakeman forcibly ejected plaintiff from and off the moving cars, throwing him with violence from the platform of the cars to the ground, and plaintiff testified that he was pushed or shoved off while the train was in motion. The jury was instructed that unless it should find that plaintiff was shoved or pushed, or in some way forcibly ejected, from the train while it was in motion, as alleged in the declaration and claimed in plaintiff's testimony, he could not recover. Held, that the jury should not have been left, as they were under said instruction, to find that plaintiff was "in some way" forcibly ejected from the train while it was in motion, other than that shown by the evidence and alleged in the declaration, but that the instruction should have limited them to the precise manner in which the act was committed.—Brassel v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co., 101 Mich. 5.

¶ 408. In an action for a wrongful ejection from defendant's train of a passenger presenting a ticket requiring his identification as purchaser upon request, it appeared that plaintiff's description was incorrect, but the declaration did not count on the misdescription, being based upon an unreasonable enforcement of the reasonable regulation requiring identification. Held, that an instruction that "If there was any mistake in the description of the plaintiff on the ticket, it was a mistake for which the defendant was liable," and "Defendant cannot limit its liability for the negligence of itself or its agent by any contract contained in the ticket purchased by plaintiff, upon which he was seeking transportation" condemned the defendant for negligence not declared upon and furnished ground for a verdict against it whether the regulation was reasonably enforced or not, and were therefore prejudicial.—Pierson v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 149 Mich. 167.

§ 145. Breach of contract; failure to carry as agreed.

Breach by connecting line, see post § 240.
Actions for loss of baggage, see post §§ 255-258.

¶ 409. Where a railway passenger is not in fault in starting on a particular train, he has a right of action against the company for damages arising from its refusal or failure to take him to his destination as agreed through its ticket agent.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Pierce, 47 Mich. 277.

Liability of carrier for failure to transport passenger on through ticket, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 709-716.

§ 146. ——Actions, pleading and evidence.

Form of action, see also ante ¶ 410.

¶ 411. In declaring against a common carrier of passengers for a refusal to carry, it is necessary to aver that the plaintiff offered, or was ready and willing, to pay the fare.—Day v. Owen, 5 Mich. 520.

¶ 412. A passenger suing for failure of a railroad to transport according to contract, where reasonable notice of a change in the time table has been given by the railroad but the agent has misinformed him, must count upon the common-law liability of the carrier, and can recover only actual damages.—Van Camp v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 137 Mich. 467.

¶ 413. Plaintiff made a contract with defendant railway's proper agent, by which the latter guaranteed to carry the former to Washington by a certain day and hour. In a suit for breach of this contract, held, the schedules and time tables of defendant were not admissible to show the agent's lack of authority or his credibility, or to show the time trains were scheduled to arrive.—Hayes v. Wabash R. Co., 163 Mich. 174.

§ 147. Penalties and actions for same.

Excuse for failure to stop, see also ante ¶ 379.
Penal actions and procedure in general, see Penalties.

(1 Mich. Dig. 51)

¶ 414. The penalty of $100 provided in How. St., § 3324, for a railroad company's failure to transport a passenger, is recoverable by a person who, having a ticket, went to a flag-station at night intending to take a train that was accustomed to stop at each station when signaled to do so, but which did not stop for him though the usual signal was given. It was a sufficient offer to become a passenger.—Freeman v. Detroit, M. & M. R. Co., 65 Mich. 577.

¶ 415. Comp. L. 1897, § 6235, providing a penalty for failure of a carrier to transport a passenger according to contract, does not apply where reasonable notice of a change in time table has been given to the public, though the agent of the railroad misinforms the passenger, and hence such passenger can recover only actual damages.—Van Camp v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 137 Mich. 467.

¶ 416. The penalty under Comp. L. 1897, § 6235, for failure to transport according to contract, may be recovered from a railroad where the passenger inquired of the agent and was informed of a connecting train and was shown a time table showing such train, but upon arriving at the junction point learned that this train had never been put on, and it appeared that notice of this change had been sent to some of the agents but no showing was made that the notice had been received by the agent who gave the information and sold the ticket.—Van Camp v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 137 Mich. 467.

¶ 417. No recovery can be had under Comp. L. 1897, § 6235, for the penalty provided for failure to transport a passenger by a common carrier where the mistake in selling a ticket for use on a train which had been discontinued was the error of the local agent.—Geer v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 142 Mich. 511.

¶ 418. A railroad company is not liable to a penalty for failing to deliver a passenger at a station where, owing to drifting snow, to the darkness, and to a freight train being close behind, it seemed to the engineer and conductor safer to stop about three-quarters of a mile beyond the station than in front of it.—Reed v. Duluth, S. S. & A. R. Co., 100 Mich. 507.

¶ 419. In an action for failure to transport under Comp. L. 1897, § 6235, where there was a mistake in selling a ticket for use on a train which had been discontinued on a proper notice of a change in schedule and a public countermand of the old schedule issued ten days before the sale of the ticket the company is not liable for the penalty, and any instruction which leaves it to the jury to pass upon the question of what countermand of a time table would be reasonable is error.—Geer v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 142 Mich. 511.

¶ 420. A working time table designed for the use of employees alone and not intended for use in furnishing information to the public, which on its face states it was in no case intended for public information nor as an advertisement of the time or hours of any train, and that the railroad company reserves the right to vary them at pleasure, is not for the information of the public, and it was error in an action for failure to transport under Comp. L. 1897, § 6235, to refuse to give an instruction that it was not for such public information, and any information which the plaintiff may have obtained therefrom either directly or from statements of defendant's agent does not bind defendant, and cannot be considered in determining the verdict.—Geer v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 142 Mich. 511.

Of connecting lines, see post § 242.
General rule as to, see Negligence, III.

¶ 423. In an action by a passenger against a street railway for injury caused by a collision of the car in which he was riding with a heavy ice wagon, the plaintiff may recover upon a showing that the motorman was negligent though the driver of the ice wagon was also negligent.—Thurston v. Detroit United Ry., 137 Mich. 231.

¶ 424. Where a passenger in a street car is injured by the collision of a team with the car at a cross street, he may recover if the motorman was negligent, even though the driver of the team was also negligent.—Sloan v. Detroit United Ry., 172 Mich. 68.

§ 150. Children and infirm or disabled passengers.

Duty of carrier to receive blind or infirm persons, see ante § 109.

In taking on or discharging, necessity of assistance, see also post §§ 172-174.
General rules of negligence toward persons not ordinarily self-helpful, see Negligence, I.

¶ 425. The caution required of a child riding on a railroad train is according to his maturity and capacity, to be determined in each case by the facts and circumstances; and the degree of discretion in avoiding danger depends upon the child's age and knowledge.—Ecliff v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 64 Mich. 196.

¶ 426. A command from the conductor of a street railway car to come inside the car, addressed to a child who is riding in an exposed position, and is not of sufficient discretion to take care of itself, is not enough to exempt the railway company from responsibility for the child's safety, but obedience to the command should be compelled by the company's servants. A street railway company can plead no exemption from responsibility for the safety of such young children as it receives as passengers, unless, perhaps, when the proper guardian of the child is present. The company is required to act towards the passenger in view of his age, capacity, and the circumstances.—East Saginaw City Ry. Co. v. Bohn, 27 Mich. 503.

Liability of carrier for injuries to child passengers, see note, 7 N. C. C. A. 1029-1039.
Duty and liability of carrier towards sick passengers, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 299-310.
Duty of carrier towards blind passenger, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 175-182.

§ 151. Drunken passengers.

Duty in discharging passengers, see also post § 174.

¶ 428. The employees of a railroad company, unless they know that a passenger is under the influence of liquor, are not bound to use any more care for him than for any passenger in the usual condition.—Strand v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 67 Mich. 380.

¶ 429. The fact that the conductor of a street car knows that a person who is standing on the running board outside of the car is intoxicated imposes upon him the duty to exercise care in passing by such person for the purpose of collecting fares.—Kingston v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 112 Mich. 40.

Duty and liability of carrier with respect to intoxicated passenger, see notes, 5 N. C. C. A. 621-634; 15 N. C. C. A. 502-519.

§ 152. Passengers riding free or not in ordinary way.

Care required in operating car with passengers on running boards, see post § 165.

¶ 430. The same extreme care is to be exercised by common carriers in carrying free passengers as in carrying those who pay their fare.—Flint & P. M. Ry. Co. v. Weir, 37 Mich. 111.

¶ 431. Where an employee of a logging company was killed while riding on the defendant's logging railway without paying fare, on the assumption by himself and the employees of the defendant that there was an agreement between the logging company and the defendant company to carry free the employees of the former company, there can be no recovery, since the deceased was riding in violation of Public Acts 1909, Act No. 30 (How. St., 2d Ed., §§ 3360-3365), forbidding the furnishing of free transportation.—Van Auken v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 182 Mich. 331. (Bird, Kuhn and Ostrander, JJ., dissenting.)

§ 153. Attendants and escorts of passengers.

Injury to persons boarding trains to assist or meet passengers, see notes, 8 N. C. C. A. 630-648; 16 N. C. C. A. 335-349.

2. Stations and Platforms.

§ 154. General duty and care required.

Duty in general and under contract as to facilities for travel, see ante IV, C.
Joint stations, see post § 241.
In taking on and setting down passengers, see post IV, E, 5.
Moving other trains on station tracks when passengers are entering or alighting, see post § 185.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see post § 216 et seq.
Instructions and requests, see post §§ 233-237.

¶ 433. The high degree of care required of common carriers of passengers, in transporting them and in the construction and care of their vehicles for that purpose, is not required by the law in the construction and maintenance of their platforms and station grounds, only reasonable care to be determined by the surroundings, the situation, and the probable dangers being required.—Crowe v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 142 Mich. 692.

¶ 434. Reasonable care in the construction and maintenance by common carriers of passengers of platforms and station grounds, is a relative term, to be determined by the surroundings of each case and the dangers to be apprehended and avoided.—Crowe v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 142 Mich. 692.

Liability of railroad company as carrier for injuries caused by animals shipped or kept on premises, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 445-459.

§ 155. Approaches to and exits from stations.

From stops made by motor cars at country highway crossings, see post ¶ 480.
Leaving or approaching by wrong route as contributory negligence, see post § 203.
Evidence as to negligence, see post § 211, ¶ 617.

¶ 435. Plaintiff, who had been a passenger on defendant's train, left its depot on a dark and rainy night, and fell into an unguarded hole on its grounds that was close to the culvert of a diagonal cross-walk used generally by the public whereon he was walking. Defendant had constructed another and safer path, but most of the travel went over the way used by plaintiff, and defendant had never objected to its use. Held, that plaintiff could recover for injuries received.—Cross v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 69 Mich. 363.

¶ 436. Where a railroad company has reasonable facilities for travel between its station platforms and the public highway, it is not liable to one who, seeking to reach the highway by way of the railroad track, is injured by falling into a cattle-guard, though a usual course of travel was followed.—Sturgis v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 72 Mich. 619.

¶ 437. A railway company which neglects to provide reasonably safe and convenient means of ascending its station platform, and which with full knowledge of the facts permits an unsafe means to be provided—such as an unfastened plank reaching from the platform to the path commonly used by the public—is liable for an injury sustained from the falling of the plank, the same as if it had itself set up and maintained the dangerous way.—Collins v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co., 80 Mich. 390.

¶ 438. A passenger who sustained injury by slipping upon ice which had formed on a beaten path which made a short cut from defendant's railroad station, the use of which path defendant had permitted to passengers, was entitled to recover, although there was a safer crushed stone walk which the passenger might have used.—Lemon v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 136 Mich. 647.

§ 156. Platforms and places to alight.

Duty to provide assistance where there are no platforms, see also post § 172.
Protection of passengers from crowding, see post § 186.
Contributory negligence, see post §§ 191, 198-203.
Boarding on wrong side as contributory negligence, see post §§ 543, 545.
Evidence as to negligence, see post § 211 et seq.
Negligence in condition as jury question, see post § 222.
Instruction on want of lights, see post § 233, ¶ 756.

¶ 439. The traveling community cannot be supposed ignorant of the necessity and use of depot platforms, and passengers must conform to the reasonable business arrangements of the railways. When a railroad company has a safe and commodious platform and other facilities for safely entering and leaving the cars on the depot side of the track, the omission to have the opposite side similarly provided is not negligence.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Coleman, 28 Mich. 440.

¶ 440. In an action by one for injuries sustained while alighting from a train by stepping into a hole at least six inches lower than the surface and a foot to two feet across and containing a chunk of cinders about six inches long by two or three inches wide, the maintenance of such a hole in a station platform constitutes a negligent defect.—Crowe v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 142 Mich. 692.

Liability of railroad company for injury to prospective or departing passenger caused by obstruction on station platform, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 995-1017.
Injury to passenger stepping in space between platform of station and step of car, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 1069-1095.
Liability for injury to prospective passenger on station platform by crowded condition of same, see note, 14 N. C. C. A. 168-179.

§ 157. ——Street railway stops.

Adjacent condition of track or surroundings, see post § 161.
Duty of carrier in setting down passengers to choose proper place or assist passenger, see post §§ 172, 184.
Contributory negligence, invited stops, see post § 201.
Instructions as to ridge near alighting place, see post § 235, ¶ 779.

¶ 441. It is not the duty of a street railway to provide a street in course of repaving with a platform level with its rails for approaching passengers from the opposite side of the street or to abandon the use of its customary stop at that place, where the state of the paving work has left a smooth bed of concrete awaiting the laying of paving bricks, so that the rails extend above that level to the thickness of the bricks.—Sweet v. Detroit United Ry., 141 Mich. 650.

¶ 442. The slipping of an approaching passenger's foot as he was about to step over a street car rail and the catching of his toe thereby on the projecting rail was the cause of his fall, and not the failure of the street railway to provide a platform level with the top of the rail during paving of the street and while the concrete base for the pavement was awaiting the bricks which would bring the street level up to the rail-top, all the surroundings being familiar and lighted and the passenger having seen the rail and voluntarily tried to step over it in making a crossing.—Sweet v. Detroit United Ry.; 141 Mich. 650.

3. Tracks, Trains and Equipment.

§ 158. Care, inspection and condition in general.

In operation and management of trains, see post IV, E, 4.
Duty and care in taking on or discharging passengers, see post IV, E, 5.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see post § 26 et seq.
Want of safety appliances as evidence of negligence, see post § 213.
Negligence as jury question, see post § 223.
Instructions and requests, see post § 234.
Instruction on "inspection," see post ¶ 771.
Police regulations for safety of trains and operations, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8200 et seq., and also see Railroad Commission Act, Comp. L. 1915, chap. 155.

¶ 443. A carrier owes to its passengers a high degree of diligence and care in their transportation and such care involves the character of the rolling stock.—Howell v. Lansing City Elec. Ry. Co., 136 Mich. 432.

¶ 444. A street railway company is not required to furnish its road with new cars, nor is it liable for using old ones, but in either case must keep them in good repair, and fit for use, so as not to endanger the safety of passengers.—Wormsdorf v. Detroit City R. Co., 75 Mich. 472.

¶ 445. A street railway company is not an insurer of safety. It does not contract that there are no unknown defects in its cars and appliances not discoverable by the use of reasonable means; but it does contract that except for such defects its cars and appliances are safe.—Gerlach v. Detroit United Ry., 171 Mich. 474.

¶ 446. Where, in an action for personal injuries caused by defective appliances, inspection is relied on as a defense, it should be as thorough as the dangers incident to the business make necessary.—Rouston v. Detroit United Ry., 151 Mich. 237.

§ 159. Notice or knowledge of defects.

Notice as predicate for negligence generally, see Negligence, I.

¶ 447. It is the duty of a street railway company to exercise reasonable care in selecting horses for use on its cars, and to take reasonable steps to ascertain whether they are safe for such use; and the company is chargeable with whatever knowledge a driver may have acquired or discovered with respect to the character or disposition of the horses driven by him in the course of his employment, and before an accident caused by a breach of said duty.—Noble v. St. Joseph & B. H. St. R. Co., 98 Mich. 249.

§ 160. Cars and equipment furnished by or bought from others.

¶ 448. Railway companies buying rolling stock from reputable manufacturers are not chargeable with negligence in accepting material on such inspection as is usual and practicable, without discovering concealed defects; they cannot be held to warrant their cars.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537.

¶ 449. A railroad company could not evade its duty to a passenger to see that the cars which were running over its road, were properly equipped, in good condition and properly managed, by showing that it had a contract with another company to do it.—Robinson v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 135 Mich. 254.

§ 161. Tracks and roadbed and surroundings.

Negligence in manner of running over bad or dangerous tracks, see post § 169.

Liability for injury from rails and timbers at unusual place where passenger is discharged, see post § 184.

Contributory negligence in riding on running board without looking for projecting structures within line of travel, see post ¶ 556.

Sufficiency of evidence as to condition of track being cause of accident, see post § 219.

Negligence as jury question, see post § 223.

¶ 450. It is negligence in a railroad company to allow coal-bins so close to its track that persons upon an excursion car cannot safely stand, while passing them, upon the running board that stretches along the side of such a car.—Dickinson v. Port Huron & N. W. Ry. Co., 53 Mich. 43.

¶ 451. The mere piling of dirt or clay on or near a street railway track, for use in ballasting the track where it has been undermined by a washout, is not negligence on the part of the company.—Noble v. St. Joseph & B. H. St. R. Co., 98 Mich. 249.

Injury to passenger by rock rolling or falling into car, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 505.

Liability for injury to passenger on passing train injured by explosion near track, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 74-86.

§ 162. Steps, platforms and cars.

Open door as proximate cause of injury due to lurch, see also post ¶ 470.

Care required in operating cars with persons on running boards, see post § 165.

Riding on platforms or steps as contributory negligence, see post § 195.

Tool equipment for passenger cars, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8394.

Heating equipment, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8397.

¶ 452. It is the duty of street car companies to allow their passengers an opportunity to get on and off the cars, and the starting of the car while the passenger is so doing is negligence; but such act does not render defective the construction of a car that under other circumstances is reasonably safe.—Werbowisky v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 86 Mich. 236.

¶ 453. A passenger who voluntarily jumps on or off from a moving street car does so at his own peril, and such a construction of the car as is only unsafe in view of such conduct cannot be said to be defective.—Werbowisky v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 86 Mich. 236.

¶ 454. Plaintiff, upon alighting from a street car after dark, was injured by having her foot caught by a rope which had been attached by a trespasser to the rear of the car. It appeared that the rope had been so attached for at least some minutes and while the car traveled a mile and a half, but that it had not been discovered on account of the darkness. There was evidence that a rope had once been found similarly attached but this had not been brought to the notice of the conductor on this car. Held, that the company was not guilty of negligence in failing to discover and remove the rope.—LaFond v. Detroit Citizens' St. Ry. Co., 131 Mich. 586.

¶ 455. A railroad company which placed its dining car at the rear of a train and invited its passengers to go to and from it, was bound to provide them safe passage from one car to another.—Robinson v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 135 Mich. 254.

¶ 456. Negligence in permitting the fastenings of the door of a vestibule between sleepers to be defective, would not consist of failure to repair within a reasonable time after the defects became known or ought to have been known, where an inspection before the train was made up would at once have revealed the defective condition of the door.—Robinson v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 135 Mich. 254.

¶ 457. The use of a standard car consisting of three steps of the height and construction such as in common use by railroads is not negligence on the part of a railroad although there are also four step cars with a difference in height of about eight inches, but which cars had not been in use on this particular road for three or four years.—Crowe v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 142 Mich. 692.

Injuries to passengers caused by overcrowding of street cars, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 993-1005.

Duty to keep doors of vestibule of car closed, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 686-602.
Liability for injury to passenger caused by doors, gates, windows, rails, etc., see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 618-630.
Injury to passenger caused by closing of door of car, see note, 1 N. C. C. A. 232-250.
Liability of carrier for injury to passenger caused by act of employee in closing door of car, see note, 1 N. C. C. A. 239-243.
Injuries to passengers by reason of vestibule or trapdoors which have been opened or raised at times or in a manner inappropriate for the reception or debarkation of passengers, see note, 13 N. C. C. A. 764-780.
Injury to one on steps of vestibuled car, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 680-681.
Liability of carrier for injury to passenger on platform of vestibuled car or train, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 688-694.
Passengers injured by gates or other appliances on steps or platforms of cars, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 142-148.
Injury to person tripping over fender or other attachment of street car, in approaching to board car or in leaving after alighting, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 518-533.
Injury to passenger by baggage or obstruction in aisle of car or falling from rack, see note. 2 N. C. C. A. 346-362; 5 N. C. C. A. 27-30.
Injury to passenger by parcel in passageway or falling from rack in car, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 363-366.
Injury to prospective or departing passenger struck by object thrown or falling from train or car, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 673-682.
Liability of carrier for injuries to passengers from missiles or objects thrown or falling into or from cars, see note. 6 N. C. C. A. 819-824.
Liability of carrier for injury to passenger struck by object falling or flying into car, see note, 15 N. C. C. A. 170-181.

§ 163. ——Accumulated snow or ice.

Evidence as to ice at other times, see post ¶¶631, 632.

¶ 458. If snow and ice are tracked into the vestibule of defendant's street car during a round trip a reasonable opportunity is afforded defendant company to remove it and it is its duty to remove the accumulation before starting on another trip where the car is stationary at the end of the route when the trolley pole is changed and the conductor and motorman change places.—Dorrance v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 175 Mich. 198.

¶ 459. The failure of a railway company to keep the platform and steps of a passenger car free from snow and ice during the continuance of a heavy storm, does not amount to negligence.—Meyer v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 180 Mich. 516.

Injury to passenger by ice or snow on platform or steps of train or car, see note, 13 N. C. C. A. 470-488.

§ 164. Make up of trains; mixed trains and freight trains.

Duty to passenger riding elsewhere than caboose, see also ante ¶ 372.
Limitations of liability, see ante § 127.
Care required in operation, see post § 168.
Care required of passenger, see post § 190.
Cars loaded with logs in train, propriety of instructions, see post § 234.
Cars in front of passenger cars, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8300.

¶ 460. In an action for injury caused by the improper loading of logs upon flat cars attached to the passenger car in which plaintiff was riding, it was held that defendant could not discharge its liability to plaintiff by showing that its agents inspected the cars before starting out on the trip, if in fact the train was not in proper condition with respect to the safety of the passengers.—Keating v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., 104 Mich. 418.

¶ 461. Passengers upon freight trains are expected to recognize the difficulty of handling freight trains of varying length, upon roads of varying grade without concussions; and they assume the risks incident to the methods of the business, where the crew handles the train with the highest degree of care which good railroading requires and permits under the circumstances.—Moore v. Saginaw, T. & H. R. Co., 115 Mich. 103.

¶ 462. One who takes passage on a freight train accompanying a car of stock, assumes the risk of the ordinary jarring, jolting and jerking incident to the making up and distributing of such train.—Frohriep v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 131 Mich. 459.

4. Operation and Management of Engines and Cars.

§ 165. In general.

Particular objects of care, see post §§ 166-170.
Making up trains, proper cars to be in rear, see ante § 164.
In taking on or discharging passengers, see post IV, E. 5.
Necessity of higher care under crowded conditions, see post ¶ 516.
Moving trains on tracks adjacent to tracks where passengers are embarking or alighting, see post § 185.

Care and duty to passenger discovered in peril after being negligent, see post § 205.
Pleading excessive speed, see post § 208.
Evidence as to negligence, see post § 211 et seq.
Overcrowding as evidence of negligence, see post, ¶ 626.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence, and questions for court and jury, see post § 216 et seq.
Bare fact of derailment as evidence of negligence, see post ¶ 650.
Negligence as jury question, see post § 224.
Negligent collision as jury question, see post § 225.

¶ 463. A railroad engineer who, in violation of the rules and regulations of the company, and without an order from the train dispatcher, attempts to run his engine from one station to another, and comes into collision with a train belonging to the same company, is still in the line of his employment, and the company is liable for the consequent injury to a passenger upon the train.—Fitzsimmons v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co., 98 Mich. 257.

¶ 464. The negligence of a railroad company in causing a slight collision near the station is not the proximate cause of injuries sustained by a passenger while jumping from a flat car over which he has followed other passengers in departing and alighting from the damaged and stationary train some time after the collision.—Vandercook v. Detroit, G. R. & W. R. Co., 125 Mich. 459.

¶ 465. Where a street car company operating open cars, which are entered from running boards on the side, permits a passenger to ride upon one of the running boards because of the crowded condition of the car, it is under the duty of operating the car with the highest degree of care so as not to injure the passenger while in such position.—Murphy v. Manistee Ry. Co., 194 Mich. 595.

Injury to passenger by the making of flying switches or the kicking of cars, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 653-657.
Liability of carrier for personal injuries sustained in derailment of train or car, see note, 5 N. C. C. A. 698-715.
Liability of street railroad company for injury to passenger occurring out of collision with railroad train, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 933-948.
Liability of railroad company for personal injuries to passenger caused by condition of rails due to heat or cold, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 215-220.
Injury to one on running board of street car caused by contact with vehicle, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 696-707.

§ 166. Crew, attendants or watchmen.

Duty to afford assistance to passengers boarding or alighting, see post § 172.
Qualifications and experience required of trainmen and operating servants, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8403 et seq.

¶ 466. That a street railway company has been accustomed to have conductors on its cars the entire length of its road except for a short time before injury to a passenger does not show that it is its duty to keep a conductor upon its car the whole distance at all times, nor is there any such duty unless required by statute or ordinance, or by the terms of the contract under which the company exercises its franchises.—Gardner v. Detroit Street R. Co., 99 Mich. 182.

§ 167. Jerks, jolts and uneven speed.

In freight and mixed trains, see post § 168; see also ante ¶ 462.
Changing speed and sudden starts while passengers are boarding or alighting, see post IV, E, 5.
Evidence of jerking and rebuttal thereof, see post ¶ 630.
Negligence as jury question, see post § 224.
Jerks as cause of accident, court or jury question, see post § 221 et seq.

¶ 467. Sudden acceleration of a street car nearing a crossing would not make the company responsible, even if it were established that the accident was caused by such acceleration of speed, if it was properly due to the application of power, or the removal of the brake, to enable the car to reach the usual stopping place.—Etson v. Fort Wayne & B. I. R. Co., 110 Mich. 494.

¶ 468. An electric car approached a station with no intention on the part of its operatives to stop there, and near by the station was a switch. The motorman decreased the speed in approaching and increased it after passing the switch, so that plaintiff was jerked off the car. Held that, leaving out of consideration the duty of the company to stop its car at the station to let plaintiff alight, the mere decrease and increase of the speed did not amount to negligence by defendant.—Schultz v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 158 Mich. 665. (Blair, C. J., and Moore and Montgomery, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 469. After entering a street car plaintiff, standing, held to a seat until a passenger moved to make room for her, and then turned to sit down, the car meanwhile having been set in motion. At that moment the car was stopped suddenly, but not with unusual abruptness, and plaintiff fell forward and was injured. No one else in the car suffered from the sudden stop. Held, a verdict was properly directed for defendant, no negligence being shown.—Ottinger v. Detroit United Ry., 166 Mich. 106 (Moore, J., dissenting).

¶ 470. The proximate cause of the death of a passenger riding on the back platform of a pay-as-you-enter car because of the crowded condition of the car, who is thrown through the door of the car, which is open, contrary to custom, as the result of a sudden jerk of the car and the lurching of the crowd, and killed, is the negligent leaving open of the car door.—Larskowski v. Detroit United Ry., 193 Mich. 409. (Brooke, J., dissenting.)

Passengers thrown from street car rounding curve, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 698-708.
Liability for injury to or death of passenger caused by lateral motion of car rounding curve, see note, 10 N. C. C. A. 334-341.

§ 168. Mixed trains and freight trains.

Care required in making up trains and arranging cars, see ante § 164.
Care required of passenger, see post § 190.
Entering too soon as contributory negligence, see post ¶ 548.
Contributory negligence in choosing insecure seat, see post ¶ 550.
Burden of proof and shifting, see post § 210.
Negligence as jury question, see post § 224.
Instructions, see post § 233.

¶ 471. In the handling of a freight train carrying passengers as an accommodation, if less than the highest practicable degree of care is bestowed upon the management of the train, it is negligence; and, if a passenger is injured thereby, without being in fault himself, the company is liable.—Moore v. Saginaw, T. & H. R. Co., 115 Mich. 103.

¶ 472. One who takes passage on a freight train cannot insist upon the same equipment as is usual upon regular passenger trains. He will be presumed to understand that different cars, couplings, and brakes are used, and that cars must be coupled and shifted in the course of yard work at the various stations; that jars and jolts are incident to the ordinary management, and necessarily affect the equilibrium of persons standing in the car.—Moore v. Saginaw, T. & H. R. Co., 115 Mich. 103.

¶ 473. Common carriers of passengers, especially where they are running freight cars only a short distance behind passenger cars, and up and down steep inclines, are required to exercise a very high degree of care in seeing that their appliances are in proper condition, and are properly managed.—Rouston v. Detroit United Ry., 151 Mich. 237.

Right of passenger on freight or mixed train to recover for injuries caused by jerks or jolts, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 1096-1117.

§ 169. Running over defective or dangerous places.

Over crossings, see post § 170.
Sufficiency of evidence, see post § 216 et seq.

¶ 474. Where a street railroad is not responsible for the condition of its roadbed due to the failure of a city to make repairs to the foundation, it is chargeable with notice of such condition, and in the operation of its cars is required to exercise the care made necessary by conditions.—Bury v. Detroit United Ry., 198 Mich. 447.

¶ 475. The motormen of street cars approaching on opposite tracks, on which derailments have occurred, should govern their cars with reference to all known conditions which make for danger for the loads carried and each observe the other approaching car. —Bury v. Detroit United Ry., 198 Mich. 447.

¶ 476. While perilous forest fires were raging about the town of Metz, defendant sent its train to the rescue. Plaintiff's decedent got aboard. The train pulled south and after going some miles approached a point where the fires and smoke were closely approaching the track. Defendant's engineer attempted to pass the point, the rails spread, and the passengers, including plaintiff's decedent, and the engineer, were killed. Held, no negligence of the defendant could be predicated upon its duty not to take the decedent away from a safe place or not to carry him into a dangerous one or upon its duty to warn the decedent of approaching danger.—Konieczny v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 164 Mich. 66.

§ 170. Crossing other tracks or highways.

Approaching other street car at crossing discharging passengers, see post § 185.
Passenger misled by slowdown at crossing into assuming that station was reached, see also post ¶ 497.
Evidence as to negligence, see post § 211 et seq.
Negligence as jury question, see post § 225.
General duty at crossings, see Railroads, VIII, C, D; Street Railways, IV.
Operation at railroad crossings, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8303.

¶ 477. The establishment of an interlocker system does not relieve an engineer from the duty of looking out for trains with-

¶ 494. 'A railroad company is not obliged to notify passengers at an intervening railway crossing, merely because it has announced the succeeding station as such; and it has a right to expect that passengers will sit in the cars until stations are called, or, if they do not, that they will inform themselves of their whereabouts.—Minock v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 97 Mich. 425.

¶ 495. In an action by an adult passenger who was riding on a vestibuled train for damages for injuries received as a result of his stepping off the train at a dark place while the train was still in motion, but after the station had been called and the vestibule door opened, held that the defendant was not guilty of negligence.—Hooker v. Blair, 189 Mich. 278.

§ 180. Misleading stops and starts.

¶ 496. To run a railroad train beyond the usual stopping place at the station before coming to a standstill, or to pause after it is brought to a stop, for a period necessary to reverse the motion so as to back to the usual stopping place, is not negligence unless the stop is so made and for such a length of time as to indicate that it is an invitation to passengers to alight, and the movement backward is made without warning while they are alighting in response to such invitation.—Sherwood v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 82 Mich. 374.

¶ 497. A train approaching a station where there was a crossing of railway tracks stopped, as required by law, several hundred feet from the crossing before proceeding to cross the track. The name of the station had just been called, and a woman passenger hurried to the door to alight. The train was not at its proper point for landing passengers, and as she climbed down it started to go on to the depot platform, and she fell and broke her ankle. The conductor and brakeman did not know she had left her place in the car, and it did not appear that anything was done that was out of the usual course. The accident happened by daylight. Held, that the injury to the passenger was purely accidental, unless the passenger was herself negligent, and that the company was not liable since there is no legal liability for purely accidental injuries.—Mitchell v. Chicago & G. T. Ry. Co., 51 Mich. 236.

Liability for personal injury to person attempting to board street car brought to standstill at point not a regular stopping place, see note, 16 N. C. C. A. 100-109.

§ 181. Carrying beyond station.

See also ante ¶¶ 484, 496.

Setting down before reaching station, see also post ¶ 519.

Pleading and variance, see post § 604.

As jury question, see post § 227.

¶ 498. A carrier's negligence in carrying a passenger beyond his station and misinforming him as to where he was, was held not to be the proximate cause of an accidental injury suffered by him after he had ascertained his situation and while he was approaching the right road.—Lewis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 54 Mich. 55.

Liability for injuries to passengers carried past destination, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 664-673.

§ 182. Slowing down and suddenly starting or stopping.

To pass switch, see also ante ¶ 468.

Contributory negligence, see post § 199.

Pleading negligence, see post § 208.

Questions for jury, see post § 226.

¶ 499. Plaintiff, a passenger in an electric car, left her seat and went to the door to alight, in expectation that the car, which had slackened in its speed, would stop at a station. Held, that it was not negligence in the motorman of the car, in ignorance of plaintiff's intention, to heighten its speed.—Schultz v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 158 Mich. 665.

¶ 500. When a passenger has reached the platform of a train in his efforts to alight and finds the train moving, it is negligence to cause the train to be so suddenly stopped as to throw the passenger down, when no reasonable effort has been made to secure his safety.—Smalley v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 131 Mich. 560.

¶ 501. A railway passenger, after the name of the station was called, went to the platform while the train was slacking up, and asked the conductor if it would stop there for water. The conductor said it would. The passenger then got upon the lower step of the platform, and when the train stopped at the usual landing-place tried to step off. But immediately, and without any notice or signal, the train started with a jerk and drew up at the water-tank, a few feet further on, throwing the passenger to the ground and severely injuring him. Held, that he had a right of action against the railroad company.—Wood v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 49 Mich. 370.

§ 183. Premature or sudden start while alighting.

While preparing to alight, see also ante § 182.

Starting while passenger was trying to resume place left by mistake, see also ante ¶ 492.
Contributory negligence, see post § 198.
Pleading and variance, see post §§ 208, 209.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see post § 216 et seq.
As jury question, see post § 226.
Instructions and requests, see post § 235.

¶ 502. Passengers upon a street car are entitled to sufficient time in which to get off, and until the passenger is free from the car the carrier's duty is not discharged.—Finn v. Valley City Street & C. R. Co., 86 Mich. 74.

¶ 503. It is the duty of street railway carriers to allow passengers an opportunity to get on and off of cars, and the starting of the car while the passenger is doing so is negligence.—Werbowisky v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 86 Mich. 236.

¶ 504. A railroad company is required to stop its train at a station a sufficient time to permit passengers, moving with reasonable promptness and speed, to alight, and if the train is crowded this fact may be considered in determining what is a reasonable time.—Smalley v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 131 Mich. 560.

¶ 505. It is the duty of street car operatives not to start a car which has stopped under circumstances inviting passengers to alight, who have signalled for a stop, until it is seen that they have safely alighted or that no one is in the act of alighting.—Selby v. Detroit Ry., 141 Mich. 112.

¶ 506. For a street car to start suddenly while a passenger is alighting at a regular alighting place and the car has stopped there for that purpose is negligence.—Burke v. Bay City Traction & Elec. Co., 147 Mich. 172.

¶ 507. A street railway owes to a passenger the duty of stopping its car long enough to enable a passenger to alight, and get away, so as to be out of danger from the movements of the car.—Hazen v. Bay City Traction & Electric Co., 152 Mich. 457.

¶ 508. In a suit for personal injuries against defendant street railway for starting up its car while plaintiff was alighting, thereby causing her injury, it is not necessary in order to establish defendant's negligence to show that the start was unusually sudden or violent.—Dykstra v. Grand Rapids, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 165 Mich. 13.

¶ 509. The time of stoppage required of a street car must be such as to enable the passenger attempting to get on or off to reach a place of safety, either on the street or in the car, before it is started.—Beattie v. Detroit United Ry., 158 Mich. 243.

¶ 510. When street cars have stopped for such a time that anyone capable of entering or alighting with reasonable celerity ought to have done so, the conductor, in the absence of notice to the contrary, may rely somewhat upon the presumption that the purpose of bringing the cars to a stop is accomplished.—Keeley v. City Electric Ry. Co., 168 Mich. 79.

¶ 511. Passengers are entitled at a stopping place to a reasonable time in which to get off after the car has stopped, and the duty of the carrier is not discharged until the passenger, alighting with reasonable expedition and exercising due care, with given time to exercise it, is free from the car.—Tuttle v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry. Co., 193 Mich. 390.

Liability of carrier for injuries to passengers alighting from trains and street cars, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 457-478.

§ 184. Proper place or conditions for alighting.

Condition of place or of surroundings of roadbed, see ante §§ 156, 157, 161.
Trailing rope or object after cars, see ante § 454.
Contributory negligence in getting in crowds, see post ¶ 541.
Contributory negligence in alighting at wrong place, see also post § 201.
Evidence of conditions at other times, see post § 212.
Questions for jury, see post § 226.
Wrong place as jury question, see post § 227.

¶ 513. A street car company owes the duty of seeing that the place of alighting is safe.—Spangler v. Saginaw Valley Traction Co., 152 Mich. 405.

¶ 514. Where a passenger alights from a street car at night, in a dark place, near a dangerous excavation in a street recently smooth and level, and no proper warning is given of danger, the company's duty does not terminate the moment of alighting, but it is liable for injury to plaintiff by falling into the excavation in crossing the street, and the facts support a judgment against defendant.—Spangler v. Saginaw Valley Traction Co., 152 Mich. 405.

¶ 515. The rules about alighting at unusual and irregular stops on ordinary steam railroads with regular stations have little or no application to street railways.—Selby v. Detroit Ry., 141 Mich. 112.

¶ 516. It seems that crowded conditions of traffic at night with many cars in service and forced stops at irregular places entail a higher care and watchfulness to avoid injury to passengers attempting to alight from street cars.—Selby v. Detroit Ry., 141 Mich. 112.

¶ 517. A place where a passenger on a street car is invited to alight is not unsafe though at such alighting place there is a depression in the pavement 12 inches by 12 inches in area and 3 inches in depth.—Fuller v. Detroit United Ry., 176 Mich. 135.

¶ 518. Where a railroad train pulls up at a platform so that nothing but the forward end of the smoking car is at the platform, passengers in the rear cars, especially ladies, are not bound to go through the smoker to alight; and if, in consequence of the position of the train, they are injured in getting off from the car in which they have been riding, it is the fault of the company.—Cartwright v. Chicago & G. T. Ry. Co., 52 Mich. 606.

¶ 519. When defendant's train stopped at a coal chute some distance from the station to which plaintiff, a passenger, was bound, and the conductor informed plaintiff that he would have to "take his chances" and would have to get off there because the train would not stop at the station, defendant, being obliged to furnish safe and convenient egress, was liable for an injury to plaintiff from an obstruction of timbers lying on its premises which the darkness prevented him from seeing and over which he fell.—Burnham v. Wabash W. R. Co., 91 Mich. 523.

¶ 520. A railroad company is negligent towards a passenger who is injured by alighting, upon a brakeman's invitation and unwarned at a point beyond where the station platform extends, and by slipping on a rail hidden by snow.—Mensing v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 117 Mich. 606.

§ 185. Moving trains or cars on adjoining tracks.

Contributory negligence, see also post ¶ 542.

Contributory negligence of passenger and neglect of last clear chance, see post §§ 202, 205.

¶ 521. A railroad which has provided a station room and platform for those who desire to depart from or enter its trains, is not liable for injury to one who, intending to take a train but before its arrival, walked along a parallel track for the purpose of entering a car at the front of the train and was struck by a switch engine on such other track.—Spaven v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 130 Mich. 579.

¶ 522. A street car motorman operating a car on the same street in the opposite direction to other cars should not ignore the fact that he is approaching a car going in the opposite direction from which passengers are alighting.—Davis v. Saginaw-Bay City Ry. Co., 191 Mich. 131.

Injuries to intending passengers crossing before approaching train or car, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 435-438.

Passengers injured while crossing intervening tracks at station, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 447-449.

Liability of steam railroad carrier for injury to intending or departing passenger struck by train while standing or walking in space between tracks on which cars are moving, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 681-696.

Liability of steam railroad carrier for injury to intending or departing passenger struck by train while on station platform, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 718-727.

6. Protection of Passengers from Other Persons.

§ 186. In general; negligence of third persons.

Contributory negligence in getting in crowds, see also post ¶ 537.

Pleading negligence, see post § 208.

Burden of proof, see post § 210.

Evidence of other previous occurrences, see post § 212.

Questions for jury, see post § 228.

¶ 523. A railroad company is not primarily liable for the negligence of the mail agent, but it does owe the duty of not permitting dangerous habits of the agent in delivering heavy packages from the car in such manner as to endanger persons lawfully on its premises to continue; and evidence of such a practice continued for a considerable time is notice to the company.—Shaw v. Chicago & Grand Trunk R. Co., 123 Mich. 629.

¶ 524. Defendant railway had a platform in an amusement park where it stopped to take on passengers. Owing to the crowds, the cars often stopped in a sandy place west of the platform. Plaintiff, in rushing with the crowd on the sand to take the car, was pushed under it, and injured. Held, that it was open to the jury to find the defendant negligent in not providing a sufficient guard to prevent such an accident.—Cousineau v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co., 152 Mich. 48.

Liability of carrier for injury to passenger by setting of brakes by fellow passengers, see note, 13 N. C. C. A. 451-457.

§ 187. Protection from assault or attack.

Who are passengers, see ante § 110.

Ejection from station or car without warrant or with excessive force as criminal assault, see Assault, § 8.
Misconduct of passenger as justification for assault, see Assault, ¶ 14.

¶ 525. While the liability of a carrier to passengers carried for hire for tortious acts of servants is absolute, and that for the acts of strangers or fellow passengers is relative, contingent and qualified, if the servant of the carrier has or should have knowledge that the condition or actions of a passenger threatens the safety of other passengers, or that mischief is to be reasonably apprehended, the duty to exercise the highest degree of care to insure the safety of passengers at once arises failing in which the carrier is liable for damages.—McWilliams v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 146 Mich. 216.

¶ 526. It is the duty of a carrier to protect its passengers against injury from the wilful misconduct of its employees, whether acting within the scope of their employment or otherwise.—Johnson v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. Ry., 130 Mich. 453.

¶ 527. A street railway company was not responsible for an attack upon a passenger riding from its amusement park, by a deputy sheriff appointed to preserve order at such park and on the cars returning therefrom, where such officer acted solely in his capacity as an officer, and not under the direction of the conductor of the car, although the expense of such police protection was borne by the company.—Foster v. Grand Rapids Ry. Co., 140 Mich. 689.

Liability of carrier for injury to passenger growing out of intoxication of fellow-passenger, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 96-100.
Liability of carrier for injury or indignity to passenger by police officer not in its employ, see note, 11 N. C. C. A. 1025-1035.

7. Contributory Negligence of Passenger.

¶ 528. Every one is bound to know that a railway conductor has no general power to run his train except in conformity to the schedule.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Pierce, 47 Mich. 277.

¶ 529. Railway passengers are presumed to know the every-day incidents of railway travel, and it cannot be expected that they will be put under restraint or treated like children.—Mitchell v. Chicago & G. T. Ry. Co., 51 Mich. 236.

¶ 530. A passenger on a railroad car should not incur that which would impress the mind of an ordinarily prudent man with a belief of danger. If the danger would not be apparent he is not negligent in acting on that assumption.—Strand v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 64 Mich. 216.

¶ 531. A passenger's negligence in going to the platform of a car while it is still moving does not affect his right to recover for an injury suffered in properly alighting after the train has stopped.—Wood v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 49 Mich. 370.

Failure of passenger to protect himself during altercation on car or train as contributory negligence, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 379.

§189. Age, infirmity or drunkenness as factor.

Duty of carrier towards children or infirm persons, see ante § 150.
Duty of carrier towards drunken persons, see ante § 151.
Sufficiency of evidence, see post § 216 et seq.
Question for jury, see post § 230.
Instructions, see post § 237.

¶ 532. A passenger cannot recover against a railroad company for injuries received in alighting from a train, if his being under the influence of liquor at the time contributed to the injury.—Strand v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 67 Mich. 380.

¶ 533. The caution required of a child riding on a railroad train is according to his maturity and capacity, to be determined by the circumstances in each case; and the degree of discretion in avoiding danger depends upon the child's age and knowledge.—Ecliff v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 64 Mich. 196.

§ 190. Care required in riding on freight trains.

Risks assumed by passenger, see also ante ¶¶ 461, 462.

¶ 534. The court is not justified in holding a passenger on a freight train guilty, as a matter of law, of negligence contributing to injuries received by him from the shunting of cars against the one in which he was riding, on the ground that he failed to guard against the danger, unless it clearly appears that he did not take the precautions usually exercised by ordinarily prudent men under the same circumstances.—Moore v. Saginaw, T. & H. R. Co., 115 Mich. 103.

§ 191. Approaching and boarding trains.

Right to rely on information given by servants of carrier, see ante § 132.
Entering too soon, see post § 193.
Getting on from wrong side, see also ante ¶ 512.
Leaving waiting rooms to board train before time, see also ante ¶ 521.
Getting on when in motion, see post § 192.
Instructions and requests, see post § 237.

¶ 535. A passenger at a railroad station, who, upon seeing his train approaching, walks along the platform, knowing it to be insufficiently lighted, towards the place where he thinks the train will stop, and who, in the darkness, steps off the platform upon the track, and is struck by the engine, is guilty of contributory negligence, precluding a recovery against the railroad company because of its failure to keep the platform properly lighted.—Bradley v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 107 Mich. 243.

¶ 536. Plaintiff was in charge of the semaphore signals and the switches at a railroad junction and upon completing his day's work was accustomed to taking a train for home at the junction station. When the train was due, and seeing a headlight which he thought was that of his train, he left the platform and walked up a parallel track, as was his custom, so as to enter a car next the engine, such track being 20 feet away with open space between upon which he could safely have walked. He proceeded without looking back, though he knew engines were liable to pass at any time, and when he had gone 100 feet he was struck by a switch engine which approached without blowing any whistle or ringing any bell. Held that he was guilty of such contributory negligence as precluded recovery, though the rules of the company required that switch engines take special precautions at the junction.—Spaven v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 130 Mich. 579.

¶ 537. A passenger was not guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law, where, in an action for personal injuries received by being thrown between the motor car and trailer of defendant company as its train was coming into the station of their amusement park, it appears that the person injured, a girl about 16 years old, and her girl companion, took a position in the front rank of the crowd waiting for the train, in an effort to get a seat for the return trip home, and that while so standing on the station platform, as the train was coming into the station, the crowd rushed forward pushing her between the cars of the moving train to her injury.—Cousineau v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co., 145 Mich. 314.

¶ 538. Plaintiff's deceased was going on foot along defendant railway's track, carrying a basket of goods. Upon reaching a point about 300 feet from defendant's station, he saw a car approaching at a point about 150 feet the other side of said station. He signaled the car to stop, setting down his basket on the track and taking his stand on the ties west of the track. Defendant's motorman did not stop at the station and continued full speed. After the car passed the station plaintiff's deceased again signaled the car to stop, but it kept right on. When the car was about fifty feet away, plaintiff's deceased bent over the rail to get his basket and was hit and killed. The accident occurred in broad daylight. In a suit by plaintiff administrator under the survival act, held, the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence and a verdict for defendant was properly directed.—Levy v. Houghton County St. Ry. Co., 164 Mich. 572.

¶ 539. An intending street car passenger who, with the intention of taking a west bound car on the southerly of two tracks in a city at a street intersection, where cars from the north were accustomed to turn by means of a "Y" on the northerly track, observes a north bound car standing still at a point where it was necessary that it be backed to the east in order that it may enter on the east track of the "Y" to proceed north, and perceives that there is no conductor on the rear platform of such car, as is required by ordinance to give warning to pedestrians and vehicles whenever the car is about to be backed, and proceeds to cross behind such car without again looking at the standing car, and is struck, is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.—McManigle v. Detroit United Ry., 193 Mich. 530.

¶ 540. An intending passenger who is thoroughly acquainted with a railroad crossing on a highway, having traveled over it weekly for two years, is guilty of contributory negligence where, on a bright day with abundant time to catch a motor car, and, with knowledge of wet and slippery conditions under foot, she catches her foot between a rail and a board plank constituting part of the crossing while on her way across the track to reach the point where she intended to take the car.—Switzer v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 190 Mich. 35, 16 N. C. C. A. 198.

¶ 541. Defendant's cars running into an amusement park were accustomed from time to time to stop in a sandy place west of the station platform, to take on passengers. Plaintiff, in rushing with the crowd upon the sand to take the car, was pushed under it, and injured. Held, that plaintiff was not, as a matter of law, contributorily negligent from the fact of her going upon the sand to take the car.—Cousineau v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co., 152 Mich. 48.

¶ 542. A decedent was guilty of contributory negligence when, while riding upon a bicycle towards the defendant's station with the intention of boarding a passenger train, she approached a spur track upon which an engine was backing, and in dismounting as she got close to the track was struck either by the engine or part of a reach thereon and killed; it appearing that decedent was familiar with the surroundings and knew that the engine did not run on schedule and was liable to come at any time, and where there was no occasion to stop and listen as sight alone would have given all the warning needed; and the fact that decedent's husband beckoned to her to approach after the conductor had promised to hold the train for her if she hurried up, did not relieve decedent from using the precautions required of any traveler. —Smith v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 136 Mich. 282.

¶ 543. Passengers have a right to a reasonably sufficient time to get off and on trains. But one who reaches the depot before the cars, and, having plenty of time to go upon the platform, deliberately waits upon the ground on the opposite side of the track, and attempts to get on board from that side, especially after dark, and is thrown off by the starting of the cars before she is securely on, is not free from contributory negligence. —Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Colman, 28 Mich. 440.

§192. ——Cars in motion.

Person boarding car in motion as passenger, see ante § 110.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see post § 216 et seq.

As question for jury, see post § 231.

¶ 544. Plaintiff's conduct in running towards an approaching train and in attempting to board such train was held not excused by his belief that he could reach a given point before the train reached it, or by his being so confused when he reached the train that his act in attempting to board it was involuntary.—French v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 89 Mich. 537.

¶ 545. A verdict for the defendant street railway company is sustained by evidence that the plaintiff's intestate was killed while boarding a moving car on the wrong side.—Thompson v. Citizens' St. Ry. Co., 125 Mich. 249.

¶ 546. Where a conductor of a street car, after being informed by plaintiff of his purpose to board the moving car, gives the starting signal and the speed of the car is increased, the plaintiff in attempting to get on at a point other than a regular stopping place assumes the risk of his attempt, but not of the negligence of the conductor in accelerating the speed.—Orth v. Saginaw Valley Traction Co., 162 Mich. 353.

¶ 547. Defendant's street car stopped at a railroad crossing. After going ahead to see that the track was clear, the conductor signaled the car to start, and swung on it as it came along. Plaintiff had told the conductor and signaled the motorman that he wished to get on, and attempted to board the car, just after the conductor. The latter gave the two-bell signal for starting the car, and its speed was increased. There was evidence, which was disputed, that the car was going six miles an hour when plaintiff, weighing some two hundred pounds, attempted to get on and was injured. Held, plaintiff was not as a matter of law guilty of contributory negligence.—Orth v. Saginaw Valley Traction Co., 162 Mich. 353.

§ 193. Entering a train too soon.

¶ 548. A passenger who enters the detached caboose of a mixed train carrying both passengers and freight, upon being informed by the conductor that the train would leave in a few minutes, is not guilty of contributory negligence in entering the caboose and taking a seat although the rest of the train is then backing towards it.—Stoody v. Detroit, G. R. & W. R. Co., 124 Mich. 420.

Liability for injury to passenger who has entered, or attempted to enter, train or car before same ready, see notes, 3 N. C. C. A. 121-127; 13 N. C. C. A. 558-564.

§ 194. Riding in wrong place.

Duty to prevent riding in unsafe place, see ante § 131.
Boarding on wrong side, see ante §§ 191, 192.
Taking wrong place at invitation or by leave, see post § 196.
Negligence in operating cars with respect to passengers not riding seated, see ante IV, E, 4.
Questions for jury, see post § 230.

¶ 550. A passenger who enters the caboose of a freight train while the door is still open so that he knows that the crew is still switching, and takes a loose seat intended for the conductor, instead of the fixed seats which were available, is guilty of contributory negligence, and cannot recover for injuries caused by being thrown from the chair by the impact of a car against the caboose.—Freeman v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 131 Mich. 544.

¶ 551. A person who is accepted as a passenger on a street car and required or permitted to ride on the platform is not guilty of negligence per se, and he does not assume all risks except the gross, wilful and wanton misconduct of the company.—Larskowski v. Detroit United Ry., 193 Mich. 409. (Brooke, J., dissenting.)

¶ 552. Where a passenger attempts to escape from a street car which has run off the track, and, while alighting, is injured either by a kick from one of the horses or by jumping from the car, the fact that the passenger was riding upon the platform of the car at the time cannot be said to have been the proximate cause of the injury, it appearing that the like attempt to escape would have been made had she been inside the car, and that such attempt was in fact made by inside passengers.—Noble v. St. Joseph, B. & H. St. R. Co., 98 Mich. 249.

Liability of carrier for injury to passenger riding in baggage car or compartment, see note, 10 N. C. C. A. 96-101.

§ 195. ——On platforms and running boards.

See also ante ¶ 551.
By leave or invitation of trainmen, see post § 196.
Care required of carrier in operating car with passengers on running board, see ante § 165.
Going on platform as proximate cause, see also ante ¶ 531.
Nonliability to person riding on platform or in wrong car when seats are provided inside passenger cars, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8313.

¶ 554. It is not negligence per se to ride upon the front platform of a street car, even though there is room within; and in the absence of regulations prohibiting such riding it is error to charge that it precludes recovery for an injury occasioned by the company's negligence; the question is for the jury.—Upham v. Detroit City R. Co., 85 Mich. 12.

¶ 555. A passenger who, by reason of the crowded condition of a street car and of the rear platform, is obliged to ride on the front platform, has a right to do so in the absence of regulation to the contrary, and in so doing is not guilty of negligence.—Archer v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 87 Mich. 101.

¶ 556. A passenger on an excursion train was allowed to leave one car and go into another to sell tickets. He had left his wife on the first car, which was an open one, the seats being reached from an outside running board instead of an inside aisle. The running board was used by the conductor and trainmen in passing from point to point. Held, that it was not necessarily negligent for the passenger to suppose that he also could use it safely, and try to do so in returning to the car where his wife was. And supposing it to be safe, as it should be, it was not negligence to omit to look out for structures so close alongside the track as to endanger persons who had to be on the running board while passing them.—Dickinson v. Port Huron & N. W. Ry. Co., 53 Mich. 43.

¶ 557. One riding outside a street car on the rear bumper, injured by being struck lightly by the car behind, is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law where no invitation, sanction, or custom is shown, the employees were instructed not to permit it, and the conductor testified that he had warned the passenger to wait for another car two or three minutes later.—Nieboer v. Detroit Electric Ry., 128 Mich. 486. (Moore J., and Montgomery, C. J., dissenting on the ground that the facts warranted the question of contributory negligence being left to the jury.)

¶ 558. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 6303, limiting liability to passengers riding on platforms, a passenger on a railroad train is not guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law, in leaving his standing position on a crowded passenger car on account of faintness due to conditions caused by the overcrowding and going upon the platform, where he lost consciousness and fell from the train.—Morgan v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 138 Mich. 626. (Hooker and Grant, JJ., dissenting on the facts.)

Risks assumed by passenger on running board of street car, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 700.

§ 196. ——By invitation or leave of trainmen.

Sufficiency of evidence, see post § 220.

¶ 559. It is contributory negligence for a passenger of ordinary common sense to sit on the driving-bar of a street car, even at the driver's invitation, if there is room for him inside the car.—Downey v. Hendrie, 46 Mich. 498.

¶ 560. A street car conductor is not guilty of negligence in requiring a boy to point out a person sitting in another part of the car who, the boy claims, has paid his fare, where such person is visible from the inside of the car, and there can be no recovery for injuries caused by the boy's unnecessarily going upon the running board to make the designation, and falling from the car.—Goodfellow v. Detroit United Ry., 155 Mich. 578.

¶ 561. Where an invalid was placed by her husband and brother, neither of whom was experienced in railroading, under the direction of defendant's baggageman and with the knowledge of defendant's conductor, both of whom were experienced railroad men, in defendant's baggage car upon a cot near a pile of trunks which, upon a sudden stopping of the train, toppled over upon and injured her, and there was room in the car for her to be placed so the trunks would not fall upon her, held that such invalid could not be held to have assumed the risk.—Tozer v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 195 Mich. 662.

¶ 562. Where an invalid, plaintiff's decedent, riding in defendant's baggage car was placed by defendant's baggageman, with the knowledge of defendant's conductor, both experienced railroad men, on a cot near a pile of trunks, which, upon a sudden stopping of the train by the engineer when he discovered something wrong with the engine, toppled over upon and injured the decedent, and, had she not been so placed one or more of the trunks would not have fallen upon her, held that the proximity of the cot to the trunks was the proximate cause of the injury, and due to the act of the baggageman.—Tozer v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 195 Mich. 662.

§ 197. Walking in moving cars.

¶ 563. A passenger's negligence in going to the platform of a car while it is still moving does not affect his right to recover for an injury suffered in properly alighting after the train was stopped.—Wood v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 49 Mich. 370.

¶ 564. A passenger expecting a car to stop for her to alight, is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law from the mere fact that she walks towards the door while the car is in motion, as it approaches the station.—Schultz v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 158 Mich. 665.

§ 198. Alighting from train or car.

Walking in train preparatory to alighting, see ante § 197.

Passenger tardy because fallen asleep, see also ante ¶ 483.

From moving car or after stop, see post §§ 199, 200.

Questions for the jury, see post § 230.

Instructions and requests, see post § 237.

¶ 565. It is not negligence in a railway passenger to leave a car at its rear end in the absence of any rule or general custom making the forward end the only proper place.—Cartwright v. Chicago & G. T. Ry. Co., 52 Mich. 606.

¶ 566. A passenger may assume that the place where he is invited to alight by the train brakeman is a safe place, the passenger being a stranger there.—Mensing v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 117 Mich. 606.

¶ 567. For a street car passenger to attempt to alight at a regular alighting place where the car came to a stop for the purpose of permitting the passengers to alight, cannot be said to be negligence as a matter of law.—Burke v. Bay City Traction & Elec. Co., 147 Mich. 172.

¶ 568. A passenger who in the daytime, in alighting from a street car at a point where paving is in progress, steps on and is thrown by loose paving block, is, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence, where the danger was as apparent to him as to those in charge of the car.—Whitmore v. Detroit United Ry., 185 Mich. 46.

¶ 569. A verdict is properly directed for the defendant in an action against a street railway company for injuries sustained by a passenger while alighting from a car in the daytime, by stepping on loose paving blocks in a street undergoing repair, where the danger was as apparent to him as to those in charge of the car.—Whitmore v. Detroit United Ry., 185 Mich. 46.

¶ 570. Where it is customary at a place where a street railroad crosses a railroad to stop the car while the conductor goes forward to ascertain whether the street car can make the crossing in safety and to allow passengers to get off at such point, a passenger who gets up before the car has come to a stop and goes to the back part of the car and comes back to a seat near the rear and waits until the car comes to a full stop, when she gets up and is injured while attempting to alight from the car as a result of the fact that she is not given a reasonable time to get off is not guilty of contributory negligence.—Kirkpatrick v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co., 195 Mich. 519. (Steere, Ostrander and Brooke, JJ., dissenting.)

§ 199. ——From moving train or car.

As question for jury, see post § 231.

¶ 571. In an action against an electric railway company for personal injuries, the evidence showed that the conductor at a certain point called out the name of plaintiff's destination; that the car soon came to a stop and plaintiff prepared to alight, but that when she was on the bottom step the car suddenly started, and threw her violently to the ground; that the accident occurred at night, and plaintiff could not see where she was alighting. Held, that plaintiff was not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence because this was not a regular stopping place, it being a point of junction with a railroad company, where for safety's sake, all of defendant's cars stopped.—Smith v. Detroit United Ry., 155 Mich. 466.

¶ 572. To attempt to alight from a moving street car is not negligence as a matter of law, such being a question for the jury, depending upon the circumstances, the most important of which is the rapidity of motion.—Burke v. Bay City Traction & Elec. Co., 147 Mich. 172.

¶ 573. It is negligence for a passenger to leap from a moving train for the mere purpose of getting off at a station where the train should stop, but does not do so, even though he takes that course in order to save others distress on account of his absence.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Bangs, 47 Mich. 470.

¶ 574. For a woman eighteen years old to alight from a train after it has passed her station, and is running at the speed of four miles an hour, is such contributory negligence as precludes recovery.—Jacob v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 105 Mich. 450.

¶ 575. In an action by an adult passenger against a railroad company for damages for injuries received as a result of his stepping off the train in a dark place after his station had been called and the vestibule door opened, but while the train was still in motion, held that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.—Hooker v. Blair, 189 Mich. 278.

§ 200. ——After stop or slowdown.

See also ante ¶ 497.

¶ 576. passenger who, in attempting to alight from a street car, has reached a point where it is difficult to turn back, is not negligent in continuing his descent after the bell has rung for starting, although in so doing he is thrown from the car by its being suddenly started before such descent is completed.—Lacas v. Detroit City R. Co., 92 Mich. 412.

¶ 577. After a train has stopped it is not negligence per se for a passenger, the brakeman inviting and assisting, to alight, though, while so doing, the train starts again, unless the speed is so great that the danger is obvious.—McCaslin v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 93 Mich. 553.

§ 201. Alighting at wrong or unusual place.

Duty to assist passengers, see ante § 172.

At rear end of car, see also ante ¶ 565.
Questions for jury, see post § 230.
Instructions, see post § 237.

¶ 578. It is proper as a matter of law for a passenger to assume an invitation to alight in the street opposite the middle of an intersecting way instead of waiting for a regular stop at the farther side of the crossing, where, having signaled for a previous stop and having been carried past, a further signal is given and the car stops apparently in response thereto, though in fact the conductor testifies that the stop was enforced by other cars ahead, which fact the passenger could not have known because it was night and the reasons for the stop could not be seen. —Selby v. Detroit Ry., 141 Mich. 112.

¶ 579. Defendant maintained pleasure grounds at a summer resort near the city in which it operated its road. For the more convenient carriage of passengers to and from the resort, its double track had been extended and formed into a loop at the resort terminus, and cinders had been spread on the side of the loop next to the resort, so as to form a safe landing place, from which a walk led to the pleasure grounds. Plaintiff, in attempting, after the car had come to a stop opposite said path, to alight inside the loop, fell and was injured. She sued the company, claiming that the cause of the accident was its negligence in permitting a ridge of earth to remain at a point where one alighting inside the loop would be likely to step upon its ledge, and slip backward, as she testified she did. Defendant insisted that, having provided a safe landing place on the side of the loop nearest the pleasure grounds, its full duty to passengers was performed. Held, that under the circumstances of the case, and in view of plaintiff's testimony that she had previously been helped off the car by defendant's conductors inside the loop, and of the common practice of passengers, as established by the testimony, to alight on either side of the cars indiscriminately, said cars being so constructed as to enable them to do so, and of the absence of any warning or notice to passengers to step off only on the side nearest the landing place, it cannot be said, as matter of law, that it was negligence for plaintiff to attempt to alight inside the loop.—Poole v. Consolidated St. R. Co., 100 Mich. 379.

§ 202. Crossing tracks on alighting.

See also ante ¶ 539.

Sufficiency of evidence, see post § 220.

¶ 580. A business man of intelligence and familiar with street cars, who after alighting from a street car crosses in the rear of the car and is struck by a car on the other track going the other way, is guilty of contributory negligence so as to bar recovery for injuries sustained.—Doty v. Detroit Citizens' St. Ry. Co., 129 Mich. 464.

¶ 581. Plaintiff alighted from a westbound street car running on the north track and stood until said car had proceeded some fifteen feet, when she looked to the west, was able to see down the tracks about 125 feet, saw no approaching car, and thereupon, without again looking for a car, proceeded to cross the street, and was injured while on the south track by an eastbound car. Held, she was precluded by contributory negligence from recovering.—Clark v. Detroit United Ry., 168 Mich. 457.

¶ 582. A street car passenger, upon alighting from a car on a street having two tracks, should, if he desires to cross the street, exercise reasonable diligence for his own safety to avoid a car coming from the opposite direction on the other track.—Davis v. Saginaw-Bay City Ry. Co., 191 Mich. 131.

¶ 583. A street car passenger of mature age and unimpaired faculties, who is reasonably familiar with the surroundings and of the use of double tracks by the street railroad, is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law when, after alighting from a northbound car on the north side of an intersecting street, although his view is unobstructed for 1,700 feet save by the car from which he alighted, he tries to cross the southbound track without getting into a position so that he could see an approaching southbound car.—Davis v. Saginaw-Bay City Ry. Co., 191 Mich. 131.

Gross negligence and last clear chance, see also post ¶ 587.

¶ 584. The plaintiff's intestate, a boy of eight years, in alighting with the plaintiff and others from a train at the depot was killed while running across a number of tracks and switches to reach the street, instead of going out by the way provided, through the depot. The people of the town were accustomed to go out the way the boy did and had worn a beaten path, but the railroad company had up signs warning against such acts. Held, the company had used due care and was not liable.—Perego v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 153 Mich. 225.

¶ 585. The jumping from the car of which the motorman had lost control, as it was turning a curve, by the passenger in question, would not have been contributory negligence, under the danger and excitement incident to an imminent collision.—Howell v. Lansing City Elec. Ry. Co., 136 Mich. 432.

Questions for the jury, see post § 232.

¶ 586. In an action for an injury caused by falling off the front rail of a street car, and being run over, the defendant's testimony, which was not contradicted, showed that the driver made every effort to rescue the plaintiff as he fell, and stopped his car as soon as he could. Held, that so far as running over him was concerned there was no question of negligence, on defendant's part, to go to the jury.—Downey v. Hendrie, 46 Mich. 498.

¶ 587. Where a boy eight years old in alighting from a train is killed while running across other tracks to reach the street, instead of going by the way provided, through the depot, the railroad company is not guilty of gross negligence by reason of the fact that the fireman who saw the boy and reasonably thought he had time to get across, did not warn the engineer to stop.—Perego v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 158 Mich. 225.

¶ 588. Where the plaintiff, who was standing on the rear bumper of an overcrowded street car, which suddenly stopped as it was leaving a switch, was injured by a collision with a slowly moving car, also just starting to leave the switch, the carrier is not liable, on the theory of the subsequent negligence of the motorman of the following car, who was aware of the plaintiff's danger, in not stopping it, where he used every possible effort to do so after the sudden stoppage of the preceding car, but by reason of the wet and slippery condition of the rails was unable to do so in time to prevent the collision.—Ruscyk v. Detroit United Ry., 180 Mich. 399. (Kuhn and Bird, JJ., dissenting, holding that the question of subsequent negligence, under the facts, was a question for the jury.)

¶ 589. Notwithstanding that the plaintiff, by riding on the rear bumper of an overcrowded street car, was chargeable with negligence, the carrier will be liable for injuries received by him in a rear end collision, if the motorman of the following car, after discovering the paintiff's danger, was grossly negligent in failing to make a reasonable effort to stop his car in time to avoid the collision.—Ruscyk v. Detroit United Ry., 180 Mich. 399.

¶ 590. Contributory negligence of a street car passenger who attempts to cross a street, after having alighted from a car, and is struck by a car coming from the opposite direction, will not prevent a recovery where the defendant knew, or ought to have known, of the precedent negligence of the passenger.—Davis v. Saginaw-Bay City Ry. Co., 191 Mich. 131.

General law of pleading, see Pleading.
Pleading damages, see Damages.
Necessity of specially pleading that assault on passenger was due to negligence in discovering that he was drunk, see also Assault, ¶ 76.

¶ 592. It is sufficient in pleading a carrier's rule or regulation to state the rule or regulation, that plaintiff comes within it, and aver its reasonableness. The facts upon which the party relies to establish its reasonableness need not be spread upon the record.—Day v. Owen, 5 Mich. 520.

¶ 593. Where the declaration in an action against a railroad company for injuries to a passenger alleges that the train started before the plaintiff had reasonable time to alight safely, it sufficiently avers that the train was negligently started while the plaintiff was in the act of alighting.—McCaslin v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 93 Mich. 553.

¶ 594. An allegation in a declaration in a personal injury case against a railroad, that the defendant "made a practice" of permitting a mail pouch to be ejected in a manner and at a place which subjected persons who might lawfully be upon the premises to hazard, implies knowledge on the part of the defendant, and is sufficient if not demurred to.—Shaw v. Chicago & Grand Trunk R. Co., 123 Mich. 629.

¶ 595. In an action by a passenger against a street railroad for damages for injuries sustained by plaintiff after alighting from a northbound car on the north side of the intersecting street and while attempting to cross the southbound track, as a result of being struck by a southbound car, a declaration alleging that defendant wholly and wantonly failed to give any warning of the approach of the car which did the injury; that the car was driven negligently and wantonly at an unreasonable and improper rate of speed; that by the gross negligence, omission and fault of defendant plaintiff was struck and injured, and further alleging with a videlicet that the car which injured plaintiff was traveling at the rate of 35 miles per hour, held to allege gross negligence.—Davis v. Saginaw-Bay City Ry. Co., 191 Mich. 131.

¶ 596. An averment in a declaration for personal injury "that while the plaintiff was standing at the door holding onto the hand railing on the end of the car, he became and was unconscious by reason of said foul and unwholesome air and fell from said train while the same was running at a high rate of speed and struck with great force on the ground," is sufficient to establish the chain of causation between the injury and the speed of the train.—Morgan v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 138 Mich. 626.

¶ 597. In an action for personal injuries, a declaration alleging that plaintiff was a passenger on defendant company's car, and that, such car being crowded, he was compelled to stand on the rear platform, and that defendant "caused to be suspended a live electric wire from the roof or ceiling of the car in a manner and at a place where passengers standing on the rear platform, as plaintiff was, would easily come in contact therewith; and that the wire suspended as aforesaid looked very much like the rope which is ordinarily and commonly suspended by the defendant on its motor cars for the purpose of raising and lowering the trolley arm on said cars, and, believing the wire aforesaid to be a rope, the plaintiff's hand came in contact therewith, and without any fault or negligence on his part and without contributing in any way thereto, he received, suffered and sustained a severe shock," etc., and "was unable to release his hands from contact therewith until relieved by the power being shut off," is not demurrable because it fails to state why he took hold of the wire, and is sufficient to sustain a judgment based thereon.—Hopkins v. Michigan Traction Co., 144 Mich. 359.

¶ 598. In a suit for personal injuries, the declaration charged liability against defendant railway because it slackened its speed and, while plaintiff was standing on the step waiting to alight, suddenly started up the car and threw plaintiff off. Held, the declaration was not bad because it failed to state specifically by what means the car was started, the implication being that it was started up by defendant's motorman.—Schultz v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 158 Mich. 665.

§ 209. Issues and variance.

Conformity of instructions to various theories, see post § 233.

General law as to issues requiring proof and as to variance, see Pleading, IX, X.

¶ 599. An ordinance prescribing qualifications of car drivers and conductors cannot be proved under a declaration for common-law negligence wherein the ordinance is not pleaded.—Gardner v. Detroit St. R. Co., 99 Mich. 182.

¶ 600. In a suit for personal injuries against a street railway for negligently starting a car and thereby throwing plaintiff to the ground and injuring her, it is immaterial if the car was in fact started negligently, whether it was the fault of the motorman or the conductor.—Krouse v. Detroit United Ry. Co., 170 Mich. 438.

¶ 601. The question of whether or not the conductor of a street car is acting within the scope of his authority in informing a blind man alighting from the car that the way is clear, becomes immaterial when the way was in fact clear at the time.—Wilson v. Detroit United Ry., 167 Mich. 107.

¶ 602. The question of the fitness of the place where plaintiff was put off the train is eliminated, in an action against the railroad for personal injury, where it appeared that plaintiff before the injury went to a place in a public and well frequented street 25 feet from the railroad.—Gaukler v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 130 Mich. 666.

¶ 603. A railway passenger trying to board the wrong train fell and was killed in consequence of the sudden movement of the train. Held, that there could be no recovery for the passenger's death as caused by the wrongful act, neglect or default of the railway company, on a declaration alleging it to have been the company's duty to receive and transport such passenger by that train.—Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Stark, 38 Mich. 714.

¶ 604. A declaration as for injury to plaintiff in being wrongfully put off the train at a place remote from the railway station will not support a recovery where the proof shows that the injuries suffered, which were very great, were mainly due to the passenger's being carried by but finally landed near the station so late that the carriage which had called for him had gone again, the driver supposing that he had not come, and when all places of shelter were closed, and all conveyances gone, it being after midnight, so that he was obliged, while suffering from fever, to walk home three-quarters of a mile in a freezing rain.—Harding v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 56 Mich. 628.

¶ 605. In an action by a passenger for injuries the declaration alleged that when the car started plaintiff was standing on the lower step of the car, but the proof showed that she stood near the door. Held, that the variance is immaterial, the gist of the action being that the train started while plaintiff was proceeding to alight.—McCaslin v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 93 Mich. 553.

¶ 606. In a suit for personal injuries plaintiff alleged in his declaration that as he was boarding defendant railway's car it started forward suddenly by means of a quick application of electricity. At the trial plaintiff testified that the car started slowly in the usual manner and, as he was reaching for the second step with his foot, made a sudden jerk. Held, the variance was not such as to call for a directed verdict for defendant upon plaintiff's refusal to amend.—Formiller v. Detroit United Ry., 164 Mich. 653.

¶ 607. In a suit for personal injuries against defendant street railway, plaintiff's declaration alleged that while in the act of alighting from defendant's car said car was carelessly and negligently started by defendant's agent before plaintiff had sufficient time to alight, and by means thereof plaintiff was jerked and thrown violently to the ground and injured. Plaintiff proved that as she was standing on the bottom step of the car, the car jerked, causing her to fall and be injured. Held, there was no fatal variance between the declaration and the proof.—Dykstra v. Grand Rapids, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 165 Mich. 13.

Right to assume that safe place to alight is chosen, see also ante ¶ 566.
In actions for loss of baggage, see post § 257.
General law of presumptions and burden, see Evidence, II.

¶ 609. In an action by a passenger against a carrier for personal injuries, the burden of proof rests upon the plaintiff to show negligence.—Thurston v. Detroit United Ry., 137 Mich. 231.

¶ 610. The burden of showing that plaintiff in an action for a railway injury was guilty of contributory negligence is upon defendant.—Guggenheim v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 66 Mich. 150.

¶ 611. A passenger hurt while alighting of her own accord from a train which, owing to an air-cock's turning so that the air-brakes failed to work, was moving beyond its station, cannot hold the company as negligent in failing to stop at the station—the burden being upon her to show that the air-cock turned through the company's negligence—or in failing to assist her to alight when the station had not been announced, or in a sudden starting of the train, not shown to have occurred while she was alighting.—Porter v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 80 Mich. 156.

¶ 612. In an action against a railroad for injuries sustained by a waiting passenger through the throwing of a mail bag from a passing train through a depot window, where it appeared that it was the practice of the mailing clerk to throw a mail bag in a negligent way from the train while passing the station in question, it was not necessary to establish notice to the carrier for plaintiff to show that the bag had previously struck at this precise place, and the question of negligence was for the jury.—Shaw v. Chicago & Grand Trunk R. Co., 123 Mich. 629.

¶ 613. In a personal injury action by a passenger against a carrier, the burden to show due care is shifted to the defendant if it appears that any part of the caboose in which the passenger was seated gave way and fell when one part of the mixed train in question backed with customary caution into the caboose, and if the train was backed with such force as to cause the part to give way, negligence is established to which proof of a properly constructed car would be no reply.—Stoody v. Detroit, G. R. & W. R. Co., 124 Mich. 420.

¶ 614. If other circumstances, with the fact that an accident has occurred, give rise to an inference of negligence, the inference may be rebutted by showing that the appliances of a street car are in proper condition and order, and that the servants of the carrier did all that a high degree of care required in the conduct of the business.—Bury v. Detroit United Ry., 198 Mich. 447.

¶ 615. Testimony as to the cost of rolling stock is irrelevant to the question of negligence in respect to a derailment caused by a defective axle in a car in the running of passenger trains.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537.

¶ 616. Proof of the general reputation of a street-car horse, among the drivers and employees of the company, as unsafe and unreliable, is admissible as tending to show the company's negligence in providing such an animal, and using it after the company knew or should have known its unfitness.—Wormsdorf v. Detroit City R. Co., 75 Mich. 472.

¶ 617. In an action for an injury occasioned by the falling of a plank used in lieu of a step from a station platform to the customary path, evidence as to how long and how much the path had been used by the public is competent.—Collins v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co., 80 Mich. 390.

¶ 618. In a suit against intersecting railroads for injury due to a collision, it is not error to refuse the defendants permission to introduce an order of the railroad commissioner approving the interlocker, and regulating the speed of trains, where the evidence is clear that both railroads habitually ignored the speed regulations of the commissioner.—Van Orman v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 152 Mich. 185.

¶ 619. Evidence with reference to a platform where passengers alighted on the night of an accident to a passenger who was injured while attempting to reach a stool in front of the car steps, held to be admissible as bearing upon the negligence of the parties.—Chisholm v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 187 Mich. 214, 11 N. C. C. A. 438.

¶ 620. Evidence as to the condition of the right of way at the point where a passenger alighted from a train, as to whether it was slanting or not, and as to what it was covered with, held admissible in an action for damages for personal injuries as bearing upon the negligence of the parties.—Chisholm v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 187 Mich. 214, 11 N. C. C. A. 438.

¶ 621. In an action against a street railroad to recover for the death of a passenger due to the car, in the vestibule of which deceased was riding, colliding with a car on the opposite track which became derailed, held that evidence that it was the duty of the city to relay foundations for the track and that it had refused to do so was admissible to explain the condition of the roadbed.—Bury v. Detroit United Ry., 198 Mich. 447.

¶ 622. More than ordinary speed is not necessarily evidence of negligence in running a train.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537.

¶ 623. In an action by a passenger for injuries received from the sudden backing of a train as she was alighting, the absence from the depot platform of conductors or trainmen to assist passengers in alighting may be testified to in order to show the surroundings, plaintiff disclaiming any right to recover for that reason.—Sherwood v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 88 Mich. 108.

¶ 624. It was not error to admit testimony as to the speed of the train and the absence of a bell cord, coupled with an instruction that the evidence could only be considered as bearing upon the question of whether it was negligence to load the cars in the manner in which they were loaded, having reference to these conditions.—Keating v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., 104 Mich. 418.

¶ 625. Testimony of a witness who got off a car at the same stop as did the plaintiff, held in an action for personal injuries competent to be considered for its bearing upon the plaintiff's assertion that the car had stopped and started up again before he had time to get clear of it in alighting therefrom.—Tuttle v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry. Co., 193 Mich. 390.

¶ 626. The acts of a street railway company in carrying passengers greatly in excess of the seating capacity of its cars, and in permitting them to stand on the platforms and steps are evidence of negligence.—Larskowski v. Detroit United Ry., 193 Mich. 409 (Brooke, J., dissenting).

§ 212. ——Conditions or acts at other times or places.

Testimony of fellow passengers, see also ante ¶ 625.

General rule as to res inter alios acta, see Evidence, III.

¶ 627. In an action for railway injury, defects in the track at other times and places than those of the accident cannot be shown in proof of negligence contributing to the injury.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537.

¶ 628. In a suit by a passenger against a railroad company for an injury caused several years before by alleged negligence in providing convenient means for getting on the cars in safety, evidence of the location and dimensions of the platform and other depot surroundings at the time of the trial, for the purpose of showing the state of things at the time of the accident, would be improper, unless it is also shown that there had been no change, or, if there had, how it had been made.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Coleman, 28 Mich. 440.

¶ 629. In an action for personal injuries against a railroad for suffering a mail bag to be thrown from a passing train through a depot window, where, as evidence that it was the practice of the mailing clerk to throw a mail bag from the train passing the station in question, a witness, against objection, was permitted to state that he saw a man struck by a mail bag on the platform, and where it developed on cross-examination that such occurrence happened about 13 years prior to the accident in question, such testimony was subject to be stricken for remoteness, but in the absence of such a motion, there was no error.—Shaw v. Chicago & Grand Trunk R. Co., 123 Mich. 629.

¶ 630. Plaintiff was injured while boarding a street car. He introduced evidence to show that the injury was due to the jerking of the car. Defendant put in evidence that its cars were equipped with a device to prevent jerking. Held, evidence that witnesses had experienced jerking on other cars of defendant was admissible in rebuttal.—Orth v. Saginaw Valley Traction Co., 162 Mich. 353.

¶ 631. In an action for injuries where it is alleged that plaintiff slipped on ice and snow in the vestibule of a street car, it is proper to admit testimony by one who was a passenger on the car on a subsequent trip as to the condition of the vestibule as he found it to show climatic conditions, that snow was tracked at the time in question and that it was congealing.—Dorrance v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 175 Mich. 198.

¶ 632. Where it is alleged that plaintiff slipped on ice in the vestibule of defendant's street car, it is prejudicial error to admit testimony by one who was a passenger on the car on a subsequent trip as to the condition of the car as he found it to show its condition at the time of the accident where there is no showing that the conditions were the same and it seems that they were not the same.—Dorrance v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 175 Mich. 198.

¶ 633. In a suit for negligence for injury sustained by passenger on a street car, testimony that the street car company after an accident separated the horses attached to its car, is incompetent for the purpose of raising a presumption that they were vicious, and that proper care had not been taken in selecting them.—Noble v. St. Joseph & B. H. St. R. Co., 981 Mich. 249.

¶ 634. Evidence as to where a passenger train stopped on former occasions held admissible in an action by a passenger against a railroad company for damages for personal injuries received while attempting to alight from the train as bearing upon the negligence of the parties.—Chisholm v. Ann Arbor Railroad Co., 187 Mich. 214, 11 N. C. C. A. 488.

§ 213. ——Violation or disregard of law or ordinance.

Breach of statute or ordinance as negligence or evidence of negligence, see Negligence, I, V, B.

¶ 635. Where an act designed to regulate the operation of street cars is intended for the protection of the general public, a failure to furnish appliances prescribed by it, is evidence of negligence, even without any express provision making the company liable for such omission.—Fortin v. Bay City Traction & Electric Co., 154 Mich. 316.

§ 214. ——On contributory negligence or to rebut it.

¶ 636. In an action for injuries received while alighting from defendant's moving car, plaintiff may testify, to show her reason for so alighting, that on a former occasion the car on which she had taken passage left the main line before reaching her destination, and was driven into defendant's barn, where on leaving it she was insulted by a man in said barn; that on the occasion of the accident the car again started for the barn, when she rang the bell, but the signal was disregarded; and that for fear of a repetition of her former experience she left the car and was injured.—Ashton v. Detroit City R. Co., 78 Mich. 587.

¶ 637. The fact that a passenger alighted from a train either upon the erroneous advice of a trainman that he had arrived at his destination or upon a misconception of the trainman's direction due to the passenger's deafness, is too remote to be considered upon the question of the passenger's contributory negligence in attempting to reboard the train after discovering his mistake.—Foley v. Detroit & Mackinac Ry. Co., 179 Mich. 586.

§ 215. ——As to ownership, control or operation of road.

Sufficiency of evidence, see post § 218.

¶ 638. Where the injury for which suit was brought occurred January 2, 1892, and where defendant admitted it was in possession of the road April 1, 1892, a mortgage dated May 15, 1893, given by defendant, had no tendency to show that defendant was in possession of the road at the time of the accident.—Williams v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co., 102 Mich. 537.

¶ 639. On the question whether the operating or the owning corporation was in possession of the road at the time of the accident, it is proper to show that the accident occurred on the railroad and that the ticket was purchased of the operating company through the agent at that place; and for this purpose testimony of the passenger as to the purchase, the name of the agent, and as to her supposition that it was defendant's station and the ticket over defendant's road, and the agent's testimony that the place of injury was "on the company's ground" is admissible even if not specific that defendant was the company in possession at the time of injury.—Williams v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co., 102 Mich. 537.

¶ 640. A traffic agreement between defendant and the corporation owning the road together with a mortgage made pursuant to that agreement and signed by the officers of both companies are admissible to show possession by defendant of the road at a later period when an accident occurred.—Williams v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co., 102 Mich. 537.

¶ 641. A passenger on a street car who wanted to smoke, and knew the driver, went to the front platform for the purpose. A large traveling trunk prevented his getting on the platform, and he stood on a lower step, hanging on by the driving-bar and the iron at the side of the car. He rode some distance, and after the car stopped and the horses were watered the driver told him to go to the rear platform if he wanted to smoke. He started a minute later to do so, but as he was stepping down and his foot was nearly on the ground, the driver let go the brake, the car started and he was thrown down and injured. Held, that in an action against the railway company for the injury these facts did not make out a cause of action.—Brown v. Congress & B. St. Ry. Co., 49 Mich. 153.

perienced men testified that it was impossible to start the train in question with a jerk as claimed by the plaintiff, where the defendant's records show that none of the men alleged to have been in charge of the train was in fact in the crew, the crew actually in charge testified that there was no such occurrence and the other accused employees testified that there never had been any such occurrence while they were in charge of the train.—Baldwin v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 128 Mich. 417.

¶ 643. Plaintiff was injured while alighting from a street car and alleged that the car was negligently started as she was alighting. She testified that the car was not in motion when she attempted to alight and her testimony was corroborated by other evidence. The conductor and six passengers testified that the car was in rapid motion Plaintiff recovered and defendant's motion for new trial on the ground that the verdict was not supported by the evidence, was denied. Held that the motion was properly denied.—Bartle v. Houghton County St. R. Co., 132 Mich. 290.

¶ 644. While perilous forest fires were raging about the town of Metz, defendant sent its train to the rescue. Plaintiff's decedent got aboard. The train pulled south and after going some miles approached a point where the fires and smoke were closely approaching the track. Defendant's engineer attempted to pass the point, the rails spread and the passengers, including plaintiff's decedent, and the engineer were killed. There was evidence that the engineer had drunk intoxicating liquor at Metz, but none that he was under its influence or that he was negligent. In a suit for negligent death, held, a verdict and judgment for defendant were proper.—Koniecany v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 164 Mich. 66.

¶ 645. Where the Supreme Court has held that a plaintiff is as a matter of law not entitled to recover against defendant owner of a dock for injuries sustained by her while crossing over private property in attempting to reach defendant's dock, the failure to establish defendant's negligence is not cured by proof on a second trial that a pathway over said private land could be seen from the point at which plaintiff started to cross.—Woods v. White Star Line, 165 Mich. 73.

¶ 646. In an action for personal injuries sustained by a woman in alighting from a railroad car, where plaintiff's claim was that defendant failed to exercise that measure of care incumbent upon it in the case of sick and infirm passengers, evidence held sufficient to warrant the jury in answering in the affirmative a special interrogatory as to whether defendant failed to exercise such care.—Steketee v. Waters, 193 Mich. 177.

¶ 647. In an action by a man 65 years of age against a street railroad company for damages for personal injuries sustained as a result of the sudden starting of a car while he was attempting to alight, evidence held sufficient to sustain the verdict.—Pawlicki v. Detroit United Ry., 191 Mich. 536.

¶ 648. A verdict for the plaintiff should be set aside and a new trial granted where the overwhelming weight of the evidence shows that the plaintiff's injuries were sustained while attempting to board a moving train from which he had just alighted in the night, at a point he supposed was a station stop.—Brown v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 183 Mich. 574. (McAlvay, C. J., Brooke and Kuhn, JJ., concurring in result only.)

¶ 649. In an action by an interurban car passenger against the railroad company for damages for personal injuries sustained while attempting to board one of defendant's cars, held that the evidence was sufficient to sustain a verdict for plaintiff.—Musliner v. Detroit United Ry., 197 Mich. 409.

¶ 650. Derailment of a car, in and of itself, is not evidence of negligence.—Bury v. Detroit United Ry., 198 Mich. 447.

¶ 651. In an action for the death of a street car passenger, due to a collision between cars going in opposite directions, one of which became derailed, evidence held to support an inference of negligence of defendant.—Bury v. Detroit United Ry., 198 Mich. 447.

¶ 652. In an action against a street railroad to recover for the death of a passenger due to the car, in the vestibule of which deceased was riding, colliding with a car on the opposite track which became derailed, evidence held insufficient to show such a condition of the roadbed as to warrant defendant in refusing to operate cars because of the failure of the city to repair the foundations.—Bury v. Detroit United Ry., 198 Mich. 447.

¶ 653. The testimony of the crew of a freight train that the shunting of cars, whereby plaintiff, a passenger upon the waycar, was injured, was done with the highest degree of care consistent with the practical handling of the train, is not necessarily conclusive that such care was in fact exercised.—Moore v. Saginaw, T. & H. R. Co., 115 Mich. 103.

§ 217. ——As to character of plaintiff as passenger.

See also ante ¶ 324.

¶ 654. A finding that a person accompanying a shipment of stock on a drover's pass was actually placed in charge of the shipment, is justified where there was evidence that, though he had not before been employed by the shipper, the latter told the agent of the carrier to give him a pass, and that he expected that if anything happened he would take hold and help, that he helped to load the stock and told the conductor that he was in charge and signed the statement to that effect, and that he wore overalls, and that in various ways he showed that he expected to earn his passage by doing what was necessary.—Weaver v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 139 Mich. 590.

§ 218. ——As to control or operation by defendant.

¶ 655. It may be inferred by the jury that a corporation, which had a contract right to take possession of a railroad and operate it on consideration of issuing bonds and improving the road, had taken possession where it had issued the bonds.—Williams v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co., 102 Mich. 537.

§ 219. ——As to cause of injury.

As to contributory negligence and causation, see post § 220.

Sufficiency to make jury question, see post §§ 221-232.

¶ 656. Where plaintiff seeking to alight from defendant's street car was thrown and injured by a sudden motion of the car, he could not recover in the absence of evidence tending to show the cause of the sudden motion or tending to show some neglect of duty on defendant's part.—Bradley v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 94 Mich. 35.

¶ 657. In an action to recover for an injury received while attempting to alight from defendant's street car, plaintiff's testimony was to the effect that she was in the act of stepping off the car when it started, that she was thrown back, that her clothing caught, that she pulled her skirt and a bolt came out from the platform, and that the bolt had no part in throwing her down aside from the jerking of the car. Held, that the jury had a right to construe the facts, and that there was room for it to conclude that plaintiff's clothing was caught upon the bolt without her knowledge, thus throwing her to the ground.—Tunnicliffe v. Bay Cities Consol. R. Co., 102 Mich. 624.

¶ 658. Evidence that a passenger upon an electric car platform, where he was standing preparatory to alighting at the crosswalk a few feet ahead, was thrown from the platform by a sudden jerk of the car, for which the company is not shown to have been in any way responsible, is insufficient to warrant a recovery against the company for the injuries sustained.—Etson v. Fort Wayne & B. I. R. Co., 110 Mich. 494.

¶ 660. Testimony by plaintiff that she started to alight from a street car, and while holding the rail with her left hand, with her foot out to step on the ground, she heard the bell ring, became insensible, and when she regained consciousness, found her left arm pulled out of its socket, clearly warranted the inference, by the jury, that the car started while she was alighting.—Bartle v. Houghton County St. R. Co., 132 Mich. 290.

¶ 661. Where a passenger was last seen alive when passing out of the front of one car to cross the vestibule into another car of a train which lurched considerably, and his dead body was found next morning lying near a switch which the train had just passed over, the manner of his death was not mere conjecture, but the fair inference was that he was thrown through the vestibule door by the lurching of the train.—Robinson v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 135 Mich. 254.

¶ 662. In an action by a street car passenger, where plaintiff claimed that as he was in the act of alighting the car started, and he held on and was thrown about 75 feet from the stopping place, and defendant claimed that plaintiff jumped from the car, the fact that plaintiff fell at the point in question was not conclusive that he jumped from the car, and the question was one for the jury.—Lucas v. Marquette, C. & P. I. Ry. Co., 136 Mich. 142.

¶ 663. Where a passenger on a street car, immediately upon ringing of the bell, arose, went to the edge of the car, put one foot on the step and the other on the platform and his hand on the rail, and was thrown from the car by a sudden jerk, he cannot recover for the injury sustained in the absence of evidence to show what was the cause of the sudden jerk.—Conroy v. Detroit United Ry., 139 Mich. 173.

¶ 664. In an action against a street railway company for personal injuries caused by a sudden jerk of the car which threw plaintiff to the ground from the platform of the car where he was standing preparatory to alighting at the next stop, testimony by witnesses that the jerk was caused by the sudden application of the brakes is not sufficient to show negligence where the witnesses did not see the motorman apply the brakes, but inferred the cause solely from the result.—Conroy v. Detroit United Ry., 139 Mich. 173.

¶ 665. In an action for personal injuries sustained by a passenger of an electric railway resulting from an alleged shock of electricity, there can be no recovery where there is no evidence as to what caused the injuries.—Dolbee v. Detroit, Y., A. A. & J. Ry., 144 Mich. 656.

¶ 666. Where it is alleged that plaintiff slipped on ice and snow and fell in the vestibule of defendant's street car held, that the jury were warranted in finding that plaintiff's fall was caused by her feet slipping from under her and not by the sudden stopping of the car.—Dorrance v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 175 Mich. 198.

¶ 667. Evidence that there were rotten ties in the vicinity where a train was derailed while running at a high rate of speed, held to sustain the allegations of a declaration of the defendant's negligence in an action against a carrier for injuries received by a passenger.—Marshall v. Wabash R. Co., 184 Mich. 593.

¶ 668. A verdict for the plaintiff in an action for injuries sustained by a passenger from the derailment of a train as the result of the rotten condition of the ties, held sustained by the evidence.—Marshall v. Wabash R. Co., 184 Mich. 593.

¶ 669. In an action by a street car passenger to recover damages for personal injuries sustained while plaintiff was attempting to alight from the car, where it appeared that plaintiff was a man 95 years of age and showed lapses of memory, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that the car suddenly started forward while plaintiff was attempting to step to the ground and before he was given a reasonable chance to get to a place of safety, resulting in his hand being caught in the handle and his being dragged along with the car for a considerable distance and becoming injured.—McKay v. Detroit United Ry., 195 Mich. 88.

§ 220. ——On contributory negligence.

As to cause of injury, see also ante § 219.

¶ 670. As between plaintiff's testimony that he was thrown to the street by the car driver's whipping up the horses while plaintiff was alighting and the testimony of a fellow passenger that plaintiff stepped off in an improper way clinging to the hand rail, further testimony by the fellow passenger that he "thought plaintiff was pretty full," and plaintiff's testimony that he was not intoxicated though he had taken two drinks that day, is material only as bearing on the probability that plaintiff's account of the cause of the accident rather than the other's was true.—Britton v. Grand Rapids St. R. Co., 90 Mich. 159.

¶ 671. Evidence held to show contributory negligence on the part of a blind man alighting from a street car preventing his recovery for injuries sustained by being struck by another car at a transfer point.—Wilson v. Detroit United Ry., 167 Mich. 107.

¶ 672. Where a plaintiff rushed along with a crowd to take a car, and was pushed under the car, and injured, and there was evidence that plaintiff had seized hold of the handle of the car while moving, it was not against the weight of the evidence for the jury to hold her guiltless of contributory negligence, since she may have seized hold to protect herself.—Cousineau v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co., 152 Mich. 48.

¶ 673. It must be presumed that a passenger on an open street car with seats extending crosswise, and which was entered from running boards extending along the sides of the car, was riding on the running board at the time of his injury with the permission and consent of the company where it appeared that passengers were frequently permitted to ride upon the running board and, at the time of his injury he was riding thereon because of the crowded condition of the car.—Murphy v. Manistee Ry. Co., 194 Mich. 595.

¶ 674. A passenger who has a through ticket calling for connections with another railroad at a certain point is not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to discover a train of the connecting carrier while on the premises of the connecting carrier and on an unlighted board crosswalk used for the transfer of passengers by both companies where, when she started across the walk under directions of the agent of the initial carrier, her view of the oncoming train was partially or wholly obscured by a large pile of snow and a building and she was not informed and did not know that the train was due or approaching at the time, and it appeared that the walk was laid flush with the rails and by reason of the darkness she did not discover the track as she approached it, that the train came into the station quietly without giving the usual warnings, and that the locomotive headlight was so dim that it might easily have been mistaken for a switch light.—Boyle v. Waters, 199 Mich. 478.

§ 221. Questions for court and jury; directing verdict.

Respecting particular acts and incidents of carriage, see post §§ 222-232.
In actions for loss of baggage, see post § 258.
General rules as to directing verdicts, see Directing Verdict.
Questions of damages, see Damages, XII.

¶ 675. In the absence of evidence showing that plaintiff jumped from the street car in question when a collision was imminent, there was no occasion to submit the question of her so jumping to the jury.—Howell v. Lansing City Elec. Ry. Co., 136 Mich. 432.

¶ 676. In an action for injuries to a passenger who was thrown or jumped from a car of which the motorman had lost control, where defendant claimed that plaintiff could not recover if she jumped, as the declaration alleged that she was thrown, there was no occasion to submit to the jury the question of her jumping, where plaintiff testified that she did not jump, and a witness testified that as the car turned a curve she was thrown against some one, and the testimony indicated that it was at this point that plaintiff was thrown from or left the car, and no one testified to having seen her jump.—Howell v. Lansing City Elec. Ry. Co., 136 Mich. 432.

¶ 677. The question as to whether a railroad company had waived its rule prohibiting passengers from riding on freight trains, was one for the jury in an action by a lumber scaler who was injured by the derailment of a train loaded with logs.—Greenfield v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 557.

¶ 678. In an action for personal injuries sustained by a lumber scaler while riding on a freight train, the question as to whether defendant had waived its rule prohibiting passengers from riding on freight trains, was properly submitted to the jury, where plaintiff testified that he had obtained about 30 permits to ride on such trains, but did not know that imperative instructions were issued against permitting passengers to ride on the trains; that he often rode without permits and had so ridden when the trainmaster was aboard, sometimes paying his fare in money and again by mileage, and where there was testimony from other witnesses that it was customary for persons to ride on these trains upon payment of fares, and where the fares and mileage collected were reported to the company.—Greenfield v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 557.

¶ 679. In an action for personal injuries sustained by being thrown to the ground through the starting of an interurban car while the plaintiff was alighting, testimony that the conductor called the station, that the car stopped, that passengers boarded the car, that passengers were in the habit of leaving the car at that place, that there was nothing to show that it was not a proper place to alight, is sufficient, though contradicted by other testimony, to go to the jury on the question of negligence and contributory negligence.—Richard v. Detroit, R., R. & L. O. Ry., 129 Mich. 458.

¶ 680. Plaintiff who was riding in the caboose of a freight train testified that he was lying half asleep on a narrow bunk with nothing to prevent his falling off, and that he suddenly found himself on the floor, having been jolted or shaken from the bunk, and then heard the cars bumping together. In an action to recover for the injuries sustained from the fall, held that such evidence was insufficient to show negligence and a verdict for defendant should have been directed.—Frohriep v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 131 Mich. 459.

¶ 681. In a suit for personal injuries against a railway company, the plaintiff testified that she approached the rear door to get off, and asked the conductor if he was going to stop, and he answered "Yes." The next thing she knew she was lying on the ground by the car. Held, that these facts with the other evidence, failed to prove any negligence of the conductor, and a verdict for the defendant was properly directed.—Snyder v. Michigan Traction Co., 154 Mich. 418.

¶ 682. Where a plaintiff, after alighting from a street car, is injured while crossing the street, by falling into an excavation made by the company, it is for the jury to say whether there was sufficient warning of danger, and whether plaintiff exercised proper care.—Spangler v. Saginaw Valley Traction Co., 152 Mich. 405.

¶ 683. Where defendant railway's car starts in the usual manner and, after plaintiff has stepped on the first step and is reaching with his foot for the next, makes a sudden jerk and plaintiff is injured, it is a question for the jury whether the accident was caused by said sudden jerk.—Formiller v. Detroit United Ry., 164 Mich. 653.

¶ 684. The evidence in an action for injuries sustained by a passenger from the derailment of a train, held sufficient to take the case to the jury.—Marshall v. Wabash R. Co., 184 Mich. 593.

¶ 685. Where an invalid passenger on defendant's railroad train was placed by defendant's baggageman for transportation on a cot in the baggage car with the knowledge of defendant's conductor, who collected full fare for such transportation, held that there was a proper case for the jury to determine the question of defendant's liability for injuries sustained by such passenger while being so transported.—Tozer v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 195 Mich. 662.

§ 222. ——Negligence respecting stations and platforms.

¶ 686. Plaintiff, a passenger on defendant's road, while alighting on the platform at its station, stepped on a nut and bolt about one and one-half inches long and was injured. Plaintiff offered no evidence as to how long the object had lain on the platform, where it came from, or how it got there. Said nut had no marked peculiarities and there was no evidence that the same had been used by defendant except plaintiff's general statement that he had seen such nuts around the tracks of railroads many times. Held, no evidence was offered sufficient to justify the trial court in leaving the question of defendant's negligence to the jury.—Serviss v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 169 Mich. 564.

¶ 687. In an action by a passenger against an initial and connecting carrier to recover for personal injuries received as the result of being struck by a train of the connecting carrier while on the premises of the connecting carrier on an unlighted crosswalk maintained by both carriers for transfer of passengers, held that it was a question for the jury whether it was necessary to light the walk so as to make it reasonably safe for passage and whether such duty had been discharged.—Boyle v. Waters, 199 Mich. 478.

§ 223. ——Condition of trains, tracks and equipment.

¶ 688. In an action of negligence against a street car company it was error for the court to submit to the jury the question of defendant's negligence in adopting a style of car which had apertures between the springs on each side of the car and the footboard where there was no testimony to show that the small openings or apertures were unnecessary, improper, dangerous, defective or not properly guarded, and it was almost impossible for a passenger in alighting or entering the car to put his foot into such an opening.—Werbowisky v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 86 Mich. 236.

¶ 689. In a collision case where there was testimony that the brake-rod on the car in which plaintiff was and of which the motorman lost control, had broken the day previous to that of the accident, and that it was repaired, that the brakeman had no reason to doubt the efficiency of the brake until he tried to use it, when it failed, and where it was found after the accident that the brake-rod was useless for want of a bolt; the question of negligence was properly left to the jury.—Howell v. Lansing City Elec. Ry. Co., 136 Mich. 432.

¶ 690. In an action for injuries sustained by a passenger by being either thrown or jumping from a street car of which the motorman had lost control, where there was testimony that the brake-rod had broken the day previous to the accident but was repaired and that the motorman had no reason to doubt its efficiency until he tried to use it, when it failed, and where it was found after the accident that the brake-rod was useless for want of a bolt, the circumstances might justify an inference of negligence, and the question of negligence was properly left to the jury.—Howell v. Lansing City Elec. Ry. Co., 136 Mich. 432.

¶ 691. It seems that a verdict for defendant should be directed in an action for injury to a passenger caused by a train being derailed, where the only evidence that the accident was due to defect in the track was that some rotten ties were found in the track, while there was overwhelming evidence that the ties were sufficiently good to make a first-class track, and there was strong and convincing evidence that the rail had been intentionally removed, tools for that purpose being found near which had been stolen from a toolhouse of another road near by, and suspicious characters having been seen soon after hastening away—Whipple v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 130 Mich. 460.

¶ 692. In a suit for personal injuries arising from the derailment and turning over of defendant's car in which plaintiff was a passenger, the plaintiff and others testified that soon after the accident he examined the track and found the rails spread, the ties rotten, and the spikes pulled out. Held, the court was in error in directing a verdict for defendant on the ground that there was no evidence of negligence to go to the jury.—Schulte v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 162 Mich. 76.

¶ 693. In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by the giving way of a handhold on defendant's car which was stopping on signal, and where plaintiff predicated his case not only upon the fact that the handhold pulled out and the accident happened, but upon evidence that the wood underneath was decayed, and that inspection would have disclosed this fact, the court is warranted in submitting to the jury the question of negligence of the defendant.—Gerlach v. Detroit United Ry., 171 Mich. 474.

¶ 694. Plaintiff, a man weighing over two hundred pounds, who was holding to the handhold of defendant's car when the car was stopping, was thrown to the pavement by the reason of the fact that the metal brackets which held the handhold in position gave way. Plaintiff's evidence in an action for damages tended to show defective condition of car and improper inspection. Defendant's evidence tended to show proper inspection and negligence on part of plaintiff. Held, that the case was one for the jury under proper instructions.—Gerlach v. Detroit United Ry., 171 Mich. 474.

§ 224. ——Management of cars and equipment.

¶ 695. In an action by a passenger who is injured by the falling upon him of a bed from the top of the car when the train bumped against the caboose of a mixed train, composed of passenger and freight cars, in which he was seated, the question of negligence in backing the freight cars against the caboose and whether such negligence caused the accident, are questions for the jury.—Stoody v. Detroit, G. R. & W. R. Co., 124 Mich. 420.

¶ 696. Plaintiff sued defendant to recover for injuries received, as he claimed, by reason of the improper loading of logs upon flat cars attached to the passenger car in which plaintiff was riding at the time of the accident. The testimony tended to show that some of the loads were higher than usual; that the bottom tier of logs was held on the car by means of stakes about 18 inches high, placed on either side of the logs; that the logs were piled in pyramid shape, the bottom tier containing five logs; that the top or cap log on one of the loads lay upon a log which was crooked at one end, and was held in place by a block placed under it, and a wedge driven into the bottom log; that by reason of the manner of loading, when shaken from its place, one of the logs rolled down, struck the switch timber, and broke it, moving the switch rails just as the train was half way over the switch, thus derailing all the cars which had not passed over the switch, including the one occupied by plaintiff, and causing the injury complained of. Held, that it was for the jury to say whether it was negligent to load the cars in the manner stated.—Kenting v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., 104 Mich. 418.

¶ 698. A case for the jury is made out by testimony in an action for personal injuries, by a passenger on a street car, that the switch between two intersecting railway lines is in a public place, not fastened, opened and closed by a small iron bar which was left on the ground near the switch, that the car approached at 15 miles per hour, that the motorman failed to notice the open switch and the plaintiff was injured.—Leslie v. Jackson & Suburban Traction Co., 134 Mich. 518.

¶ 699. In an action for personal injuries by a passenger of the defendant railroad where the injuries were alleged to have been received from a sudden jerking of the cars, held that the trial court properly directed a verdict for the defense without a submission of the case to the jury, in view of the fact that the evidence showed no jerking of the car which was not incident to the ordinary running of electric cars over suburban lines.—Quick v. Wyandotte & Detroit River Ry., 143 Mich. 443.

¶ 700. Plaintiff was injured by the derailment of a street car in passing a switch. The usual running time of the car was eight miles an hour. The rules of the defendant company required the slowing down of the car in passing switches. Plaintiff and another witness testified that the car was going full speed. Evidence that the streets were very muddy, and that a stick or root was seen near the switch after the accident, were introduced to show possible causes of the accident. Held, the trial court on the question of negligence properly refused to direct a verdict for defendant.—Niedzinski v. Bay City Traction & Electric Co., 160 Mich. 517.

¶ 701. In an action against a street railway company for injuries sustained by a passenger who was thrown from the platform of an electric car by a sudden jolt, due to the motorman's losing hold of the brake, while getting a new hold, he erroneously supposing the dog of the brake ratchet to be caught to hold it in place; it was a question for the jury whether the occurrence was a pure accident, or was due to a lack of skill on the part of the motorman, who was without experience.—Etson v. Fort W. & B. I. R. Co., 114 Mich. 605.

¶ 702. A passenger was entitled to reasonable protection against the dangers incident to the motorman's lack of knowledge that he could stop the car in question of which he had lost control, by reversing his motor, his brief tutelage, his failure to turn off the current and his loss of judgment in the emergency; and it was not necessarily a defense that he was confronted with an imminent and unexpected danger of collision causing him to lose his usual ability to control his car; and the question of negligence accordingly was for the jury.—Howell v. Lansing City Electric Ry. Co., 136 Mich. 432.

¶ 703. In an action for the death of a street car passenger who was riding upon the rear platform of a crowded pay-as-you-enter car with other passengers and was thrown out the open door while the car was moving as the result of a sudden jerk of the car and the lurching of the crowd against him, where it appeared that it was customary to keep the doors of the car closed while the car was running, held that it was a question for the jury whether defendant was guilty of negligence in leaving the door open while passengers were riding on the platform.—Larkowski v. Detroit United Ry., 193 Mich. 409. (Brooke, J., dissenting.)

¶ 704. In an action by a passenger in a launch for personal injuries received when he jumped from the launch to a dock and was crushed between the dock and the launch while hanging from a projection from the dock, where the emergency arose as the result of a sudden storm encountered after the launch had left shore, and plaintiff claimed that the master of the launch was inefficient and incompetent, and negligent in not keeping his boat away from the shore and dock, in shutting off the power and permitting the boat to drift against the dock, and in abandoning the boat and putting the plaintiff in a perilous position, which necessitated his jumping to escape being left alone in the boat, held, that the question of defendant's negligence was for the jury.—Gordon v. Drake, 193 Mich. 64. (Brooke, Ostrander and Kuhn, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 705. In an action by a street car passenger to recover damages for personal injuries sustained as the result of being swept off the running footboard of an open car by a pole along the right of way where it appeared that the pole was only 15 inches from the running board; that it inclined to the west, thereby bringing the upper portion thereof nearer the track; that the track was crooked, rough and uneven; that the car was driven at a high rate of speed and that by reason thereof it caused a lateral movement of the car, as well as an up and down motion, which brought the plaintiff into contact with the pole, and that no warning was given him of the danger, held that it was a question for the jury whether it was negligence to operate the car at the speed it was going over the tracks without at least warning plaintiff of the danger.—Murphy v. Manistee Ry. Co., 194 Mich. 595.

§ 225. ——Collisions.

¶ 706. Question of the motorman's negligence is for the jury in an action by a passenger against a street railway for injuries caused by a collision of an ice wagon with the car in which he was riding, where the testimony showed that the car was going down grade at high speed, that the horses and wagon approached the track while the car was 225 feet away and that the horses were on the track when the car was 40 feet away, and the car struck the front wheels of the ice wagon.—Thurston v. Detroit United Ry., 137 Mich. 231.

¶ 707. Plaintiff in a personal injury suit testified that in riding on a street car as it was approaching a crossing a team of horses came plunging down the street apparently out of the control of their driver; that the tongue of the wagon penetrated the car, causing her injury; and that the team was traveling some distance in view of the motorman before the car was struck. Held, a prima facie case of the motorman's negligence was established making it error for the trial court to direct a verdict for defendant.—Sloan v. Detroit United Ry., 172 Mich. 68.

¶ 708. In a suit against two intersecting railroads for injury due to a collision, it is for the jury, from the conflicting evidence, to decide which road was given the clear track signal, and whether the signals were changed by the towerman, suddenly, upon discovery by him of the danger.—Van Orman v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 152 Mich. 185.

¶ 709. In an action against a carrier for personal injuries caused by a collision between a passenger car and a freight car following it, the questions of defective air brakes, the thoroughness of inspection by the company's inspector, and the degree of care taken by the motorman are for the jury, where the latter knew the passenger car was ahead of him, and saw its lights within one thousand feet ahead, and where he shut off his current only as he started down the incline, in the direction of the passenger car, at the rate of fifteen miles an hour.—Rouston v. Detroit United Ry., 151 Mich. 237.

¶ 710. Plaintiff testified that he boarded a street car of defendant company; that the car collided with another ahead which had stopped to let off passengers; that the force of the collision threw plaintiff forward and injured him, and that the car ahead was pushed forward seventy-five feet by the impact. Held, that a prima facie case of defendant's negligence sufficient to go to the jury was made out.—Sewell v. Detroit United Ry., 158 Mich. 407.

¶ 711. Plaintiff, a passenger in a defendant's street car, was injured in a collision with a car ahead. The motorman of defendant company testified that he attempted to stop the car; that the air brake and hand brake gave out and the fuse burned out, leaving no way to control the car; that it was going five miles an hour; and that the head car was knocked twelve feet by the collision. The motorman's evidence was contradicted on some of these points. Held, it was a question for the jury whether the prima facie case of defendant's negligence had been rebutted, and a verdict for defendant should not be directed.—Sewell v. Detroit United Ry., 158 Mich. 407.

¶ 712. In an action for the death of a street car passenger due to a collision between cars going in opposite directions, one of which became derailed prior to the collision, where it appeared that the track was rough and wavy, held that it was a question for the jury whether either or both cars in meeting were handled with the high degree of care required by known conditions.—Bury v. Detroit United Ry., 198 Mich. 447.

§ 226. ——Negligence in taking on or setting down passengers.

Wrong place as jury question, see post § 227.

¶ 713. Reasonableness of the length of a stop to permit passengers to alight from a crowded car is a question for the jury on conflicting evidence.—Smalley v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 131 Mich. 560.

¶ 714. Whether a street railway company is negligent in not guarding its cars so as to prevent passengers from getting on or off the front platforms, is for the jury.—Archer v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 87 Mich. 101.

¶ 715. Whether it is negligence to stop a street car at a place unsafe for passengers to alight, is a question for the jury.—Whitmore v. Detroit United Ry., 185 Mich. 46.

¶ 716. In an action for personal injuries sustained by a passenger while alighting from an electric car evidence held to present an issue for the jury.—Tuttle v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry. Co., 193 Mich. 390.

¶ 717. In suit against a cable railway company for an injury to plaintiff while attempting to alight, plaintiff testified that he waited for the train, composed of a grip-car and one coach, to stop, and that when it had stopped, and while he was alighting, the conductor disconnected the coach from the grip-car, turned off the brakes on the coach, and jumped for the grip, whereupon the coach started in the opposite direction, in which there was a slight down grade, throwing plaintiff to the ground. Held, that the question of the probability or possibility of such movement of the car was for the jury.—Finn v. Valley City Street & C. R. Co., 86 Mich. 74.

¶ 718. A directed verdict for a street car company was reversed, where plaintiff, who had been directed by the conductor to go towards the platform while the car was in motion, was thrown from such platform by a sudden jerk of the car; as the question of negligence in so directing plaintiff was for the jury.—Hennessy v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co., 135 Mich. 29.

¶ 719. In an action for personal injuries sustained in alighting from a train it cannot be said as a matter of law that there was an absence of negligence on part of defendant's agents where it appeared from the evidence that the plaintiff, aged 55, with her brother, had boarded defendant's train at a certain station to go to the next station, and as the latter station was announced from the front door of the coach and as the train was slowing up the conductor entered, and the train stopped as he approached them, and he passed without taking their tickets, and she then went out and while on the platform or steps the train started with a jerk, and plaintiff was thrown to the ground and injured; there was no evidence as to the whereabouts of the conductor or brakeman when she attempted to alight, nor evidence that either of them knew she intended getting off there.—O'Dea v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 142 Mich. 265.

¶ 720. Plaintiff, a large man, with a grip in his right hand, started to board the rear end of a west-bound street car. He took hold of the rod dividing the platform with his left hand, and stood on the lower step, whereupon the conductor, who was watching him, started the car, and plaintiff was thrown off and injured. Held, the defendant was negligent as a matter of law.—Beattie v. Detroit United Ry., 158 Mich. 243.

¶ 721. Plaintiff, a passenger on defendant's street car, sat near a door or entrance which was at the middle of the car. The car stopped to let off passengers and several alighted from the rear door where the conductor stood. The conductor leaned out and looked along the car to the side entrance and seeing no one about to get off there, gave the bell to start. Plaintiff was at that moment standing up approaching the side door to alight. Held, the question of defendant's negligence in starting up the car was properly left to the jury.—Reese v. Detroit United Ry., 159 Mich. 600.

¶ 722. Where the evidence is conflicting as to whether a passenger attempted to alight from a street car while in motion, or whether it was suddenly started as he was alighting, so as to throw him to the pavement, the question of the carrier's negligence held properly submitted to the jury.—Vultee v. Saginaw-Bay City Ry. Co., 186 Mich. 523.

¶ 723. The question of the defendant's negligence is for the jury where a passenger, while standing on the steps of a street car preparatory to alighting, as the car approached a stopping place, was thrown off and injured by the sudden acceleration of the speed of the car on a signal from the conductor, who was aware of the passenger's peril.—Braun v. Grand Rapids, G. H. & M. R. Co., 183 Mich. 569.

¶ 724. In an action for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff while alighting from an electric car, the testimony held to present a question for the jury as to whether the car had stopped and quickly started again while the plaintiff was in the act of alighting.—Tuttle v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry. Co., 193 Mich. 390.

¶ 725. Defendant's street car stopped at a railroad crossing. After going ahead to see that the track was clear, the conductor signaled the car to start, and swung on it as it came along. Plaintiff had told the conductor and signaled the motorman that he wished to get on, and attempted to board the car just after the conductor. The latter gave the two-bell signal for starting, and the car increased its speed. Plaintiff was injured. The place was not one of the regular stopping points. Held, there was evidence to go to the jury of defendant's negligence.—Orth v. Saginaw Valley Traction Co., 162 Mich. 353.

§ 227. ——Discharging passengers at wrong place.

¶ 726. In an action against a railroad for personal injury, where the conductor and trainmen testified that plaintiff was put off at a junction, while one of plaintiff's witnesses testified that it was at the first stop, but did not know where that was, and another testified that it was at the first stop, but he did not think it was at the junction while two witnesses testified to seeing a train stop at a point not at the junction where a passenger was put off, the place where he was put off was for the jury.—Gaukler v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 130 Mich. 666.

¶ 727. The question of the negligence of the defendant railroad company as well as of the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, a girl thirteen years of age, who, with a younger brother, was, on a cold, stormy night, carried past the station for which they held tickets and as a result was compelled to walk about seven miles to their destination, which caused plaintiff to contract a serious illness from the exposure to the inclement weather, is for the jury.—Moss v. Detroit & Mackinaw Ry. Co., 182 Mich. 40.

¶ 728. Where a woman and three small children were carried past their destination, a flag station in the woods where there was no agent, and on the return trip of the train the conductor failed to keep his alleged promise to hold the train at such station so that the woman might return thereon to her home if her friends were not in waiting, and as the result she and her children were compelled to remain in the open air all night, held that whether the conductor made such promise, and if he did, whether he made a reasonable effort to keep it, were questions for the jury.—Duffiny v. Detroit & Mackinac Ry. Co., 186 Mich. 40.

§ 228. ——Failure to protect passengers.

¶ 729. Question of negligence in not keeping order and in failing to stop and let off plaintiff, held to be for jury, where rough characters boarded a street car on which plaintiff was a passenger, and engaged in a fight, the evidence as to the actions of the conductor and motorman being conflicting.—Cross v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co., 120 Mich. 137.

¶ 730. It is a question of fact for the jury to determine whether a street railway company was negligent in not making adequate provision by the way of railings, barriers, and policemen to protect the persons who had accepted the invitation to come to its amusement park, against the dangers incident to such a great crowd, where, in an action against such company for personal injuries, it appears that when the motor car and trailer of such company appeared at the station in the park the crowd made a rush for the train and pushed the plaintiff between the moving cars to her injury.—Cousineau v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co., 145 Mich. 314.

¶ 731. In an action against a railroad for injuries sustained from an assault committed by a fellow passenger by being shot on defendant's train, the conductor cannot be said as a matter of law to have performed his full duty in merely threatening to eject the drunken passenger if he did not desist in shooting his revolver, because the combination of the Fourth of July, a crowded train, a revolver loaded with blank cartridges in the hands of a drunk with a penchant for discharging it is threatening and likely to cause mischief, and where the agent of the defendant was possessed with the powers of a sheriff, whether he was not required to either disarm the man or keep him under close surveillance is a question for the jury to determine.—McWilliams v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 146 Mich. 216.

¶ 732. In an action for personal injuries caused by the plaintiff passenger's falling off a moving train, testimony that he was beastly drunk, that the attention of the brakeman was called to his attempts to go out on the platform, and that the brakeman made no move to stop him, justify a refusal to direct a verdict for the defendant.—Fox v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 138 Mich. 433.

§ 229. ——Liabilities of successive carriers.

¶ 733. In an action by a passenger against an initial and a connecting carrier to recover for personal injuries received as the result of being struck by a train of the connecting carrier while on the premises of the latter on an unlighted crosswalk maintained by both carriers for the transfer of passengers which she had been directed to use by the agent of the first carrier to reach the station of the connecting carrier, held that it was a question for the jury whether the initial carrier was guilty of negligence in failing to inform plaintiff that she would be obliged to cross the track of the connecting carrier before reaching the latter's station, and in failing to warn her of the approaching train.—Boyle v. Waters, 199 Mich. 478.

¶ 734. In an action by a passenger against an initial carrier and a connecting carrier to recover for personal injuries received as the result of being struck by a train of the connecting carrier while on the premises of the latter on an unlighted crosswalk maintained by both carriers for the transfer of passengers which she had been directed to use by the agent of the first carrier to reach the station of the connecting carrier, held that it was a question for the jury whether the connecting carrier was negligent in approaching the crosswalk with its train without maintaining a proper lookout and giving due and timely warning of its approach.—Boyle v. Waters, 199 Mich. 478.

§ 230. ——Contributory negligence.

Stepping on loose paving stones on alighting, see also ante ¶ 569.
Alighting on wrong side, see also ante ¶ 570.

¶ 735. The question whether a passenger is negligent in riding upon the front platform of a crowded street car is for the jury.—Archer v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 87 Mich. 101.

¶ 736. Whether one who, while in an intoxicated condition, stood upon the running board of a street car, having been unable to obtain a seat, and was injured, was, in view of the circumstances, in the exercise of due care, a question for the jury, and an instruction to the effect that, if he was intoxicated at the time, he could not recover for his injuries, was erroneous.—Kingston v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 112 Mich. 40.

¶ 737. In an action by a passenger on an open street car to recover damages for personal injuries sustained as the result of being swept off the running footboard by a pole along defendant's right of way, where it appeared that plaintiff had ridden on the line a number of times; that his attention had never been drawn to the nearness of the poles nor the particular pole; that when the accident occurred he was holding on to the stanchion with both hands; that he was not looking in the direction in which the car was going and was not looking at the poles, and there was evidence that he would not have come into contact with the pole had the car been operated consistently with the condition of the track and the nearness of the pole, and it further appeared that plaintiff was riding upon the footboard with the consent of the defendant, owing to the crowded condition of the car, held that it was a question for the jury whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.—Murphy v. Manistee Ry. Co., 194 Mich. 595.

¶ 738. In an action against a railroad company by an injured passenger, plaintiff's case showed that he was sitting within four or five feet of the door of the car when his station was called; that as soon as the train stopped he moved out with others; that in going down the steps his coat was in some way caught or held, and he fell and was hurt, the cars having started. Held, that the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence was for the jury.—Strand v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 64 Mich. 216.

¶ 739. Where plaintiff, while attempting to alight from defendant's street car after signaling the conductor to stop, and seeing the conductor reach for the bell rope, was injured in consequence of being thrown by a sudden jerk of the car while releasing his hold to signal again when it did not stop, his contributory negligence was a question for the jury.—Bradley v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 94 Mich. 35.

¶ 740. Plaintiff riding on a crowded excursion train attempted to alight at her destination, but the train started before she reached the door, whereupon a brakeman asked her if she desired to alight, and when informed that she did, he pulled the signal cord and the train stopped suddenly and plaintiff was thrown off and injured. She carried an umbrella and a valise in one hand and the train of her dress in the other. Held that it was a question for the jury whether she was guilty of contributory negligence in not re-entering the car, or in failing to take hold of the railing.—Smalley v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 131 Mich. 560.

¶ 741. In an action against a railroad for injuries sustained by a passenger in alighting from a train at a switch where the train stopped before pulling into the station, there was evidence that it was dark; that the brakeman, contrary to his usual custom, announced the station on arriving at the switch; that the conductor told the plaintiff that they were at the town; that four or five other persons got off immediately before plaintiff; and that the train started as he was alighting, in consequence of which he fell and the wheels ran over his foot. Held, that it was not error to refuse a directed verdict requested on the theory that plaintiff knew that the train had stopped at the switch and not at the station.—Foley v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 157 Mich. 67.

¶ 742. Whether it was negligence for a passenger when about to alight from a street car, to stand with the knowledge of the conductor, on the step of the car when nearing its usual stopping place, is a question for the jury.—Braun v. Grand Rapids, G. H. & M. R. Co., 183 Mich. 569.

¶ 743. It was for the jury to say whether a passenger was negligent in alighting in the dark and going forward from a bus at a platform, where the claim was that there was a want of proper lights and that other passengers obstructed what light there was, and on the other hand that the passenger knew all about the situation and used no care.—McCormick v. Detroit, G. H. &. M. Ry. Co., 141 Mich. 17.

¶ 744. The question of whether plaintiff, who was slightly lame, was guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to alight from a train without assistance, is one for the jury, where under the circumstances, it appeared that plaintiff had to choose between the danger of alighting and that of being thrown down, in case the train started before she could alight.—Mercer v. Cincinnati Northern R. Co., 151 Mich. 566.

¶ 745. In an action to recover for personal injuries sustained by a woman in stepping from a railroad car to the ground, a distance of 16½ inches, where it appeared that plaintiff was infirm owing to an operation for female trouble, and that she paused on the last step of the car and informed defendant's servants of her trouble and requested them to provide her with an additional step in order to alight, held that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law in failing to inform such servants of her infirmity prior to starting to alight, it not appearing that she alighted voluntarily, since she might not have foreseen the distance between the car step and the ground, and had the right to hesitate and state her reasons for not alighting to the employee who was there to assist her.—Steketee v. Waters, 193 Mich. 177.

¶ 746. In an action against a street railway company by a woman passenger, injured by leaving a moving car which is bound for a car barn in which, on a previous occasion she had received insulting treatment, the question whether the treatment the plaintiff received at defendant's barn was sufficient to justify her belief that she was avoiding an actually impending danger, into which she was being taken, by leaving the car, is a question for the jury and not for the court.—Ashton v. Detroit City R. Co., 78 Mich. 587.

¶ 747. Whether plaintiff alighting from a train and stepping into a hole six inches below the surface and containing a loose obstacle in the bottom was guilty of contributory negligence is a question for the jury.—Crowe v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 142 Mich. 692.

¶ 748. In an action by a boy 13 years of age against a railroad company for damages for sickness due to walking back a distance of eight miles on a stormy winter day after being carried past his station, held that the question of contributory negligence was one of fact for the jury.—Moss v. Detroit & Mackinaw Ry. Co., 188 Mich. 1.

¶ 749. Where an invalid was negligently placed on a cot in a baggage car of defendant by her husband and brother under the direction of defendant's baggageman near a pile of trunks which toppled over upon and injured her, upon a sudden stopping of the train, the question whether the husband and brother were contributorily negligent, held for the jury.—Tozer v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 195 Mich. 662.

§ 231. ——Getting on or off of moving trains.

See also ante § 199.

¶ 750. While it is prima facie negligence for a passenger to alight from a moving train, it is not in all cases negligence per se to attempt to do so; and if, by the carrier's wrongful act, one is so placed that, under a sudden impulse to save himself from serious inconvenience, he tries to alight, where the danger is not imminent, and where ordinarily careful persons would make the attempt, the question of negligence is for the jury.—Cousins v. L. S. & M. S. R. Co., 96 Mich. 386.

¶ 751. As a matter of law it is contributory negligence for a person to board a moving passenger train after the carrier has given ample notice, time and opportunity to do so while the train was standing at a station.—Murphy v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 183 Mich. 435.

¶ 752. Where a passenger alighted at the wrong station under a misapprehension of directions given him by the brakeman, and upon discovering his error attempted to reboard the train which was started before he was safely on board, as a result of which he was thrown to the ground and injured, it was held that his contributory negligence was for the jury.—Foley v. Detroit & Mackinac Ry. Co., 179 Mich. 586.

§ 232. ——Gross negligence and last clear chance.

See also ante ¶ 586.

¶ 753. In an action by a passenger against a street railroad for damages for injuries sustained by plaintiff after alighting from a north-bound car on the north side of the intersecting street and while attempting to cross the south-bound track as a result of being struck by a south-bound car, held, that there was no evidence of gross negligence such as required the submission of the question to the jury.—Davis v. Saginaw-Bay City Ry. Co., 191 Mich. 131.

§ 233. Instructions and requests.

Instructions on particular subjects, see also post §§ 234-237.
General law of instructions, see Instructions.
As to damages, see Damages, XII.

¶ 754. An instruction that carriers of passengers are "legally bound to exert the utmost care and skill in conveying their passengers, and are responsible for the slightest negligence or want of skilfulness either in themselves or their servants"; that they are "bound to the utmost care and skill in the performance of their duty"; that the degree of responsibility to which they are subjected is "not ordinary care which will make them liable for ordinary neglect, but extraordinary care which renders them liable for slight neglect," etc., would fairly permit the jury to find anything to be negligence which could by any possibility be avoided. But negligence is simply failure of duty. Any instructions which overlook the fact that railroads must be conformed to a system, and cannot be likened to those means of transit in which the business of a single vehicle cannot endanger any other, or which compels a departure from the common rules of good railroad management, is directly calculated to mislead.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Coleman, 28 Mich. 440.

¶ 755. An instruction in an action for injuries to a passenger on a freight train, that, if plaintiff was lawfully on the cars, defendant was bound to carry him safely, and that its responsibility for the safety of its passengers does not depend on the kind of cars in which they are carried, is misleading, as giving the jury to understand that the company is an insurer of the safety of its passengers, and that the same degree of protection is requisite on a freight train as on a passenger train.—Moore v. Saginaw, T. & H. R. Co., 115 Mich. 103.

¶ 756. Too high a standard of care was required by a charge in action against a carrier for injuries received in alighting from a bus at a platform claimed to have been ill-lighted, where the jury was told that "It is the duty of defendant to use a very high degree of care to make the place where it receives passengers safe and free from danger; and if defendant has failed to so light its platform and to use such high degree of care in keeping such point * * * safe" it is liable.—McCormick v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 141 Mich. 17.

¶ 757. An instruction holding a carrier to the exercise "of the highest known care" and "highest possible degree of care" in the transportation of passengers, held erroneous.—Rathbone v. Detroit United Ry., 187 Mich. 586.

¶ 758. An instruction in an action for injuries sustained by a passenger, requiring of a carrier the exercise of "that high degree of care and caution consistent with the practical operation of its road * * * which the most prudent, careful and cautious person engaged in the same business exercises under the same or similar circumstances," held not to impose too high a degree of care.—Marshall v. Wabash R. Co., 184 Mich. 593.

¶ 759. In an action against a street railway company an instruction, given at plaintiff's request, that "if the car stopped to allow passengers to alight, and while plaintiff, being a passenger, and using reasonable care, was in the act of alighting therefrom, the car was started with a sudden and violent jerk, then the burden is on defendant to show to the satisfaction of the jury that its driver in charge of the car was not guilty of negligence or want of care in the management of the car," is erroneous: and the error is not cured by modifying the request by adding that "it is incumbent on the plaintiff, and the burden is upon him to show, in the first place, the negligence of the driver."—Gardner v. Detroit St. R. Co., 99 Mich. 482.

¶ 760. An instruction in a suit against a street car company for injuries due to the derailment of a car is erroneous which states that after the plaintiff has proved the derailment and the injury he has established a prima facie case, and the burden to show lack of negligence is shifted to defendant.—Niedzinski v. Bay City Traction & Electric Co., 160 Mich. 517.

¶ 761. Where, in an action for injuries sustained by a passenger while alighting from a street car, it is averred as negligence that the car was started while she was standing on the steps, and that a chain, which, with a hook attached, was permitted to hang near the steps, caught her dress and dragged her with the car, it is error to instruct the jury that defendant is not liable if the hook was in place at starting but was recently displaced by a passenger, leaving out the other ground of a premature start. The jury should be further directed that to exonerate defendant the hook must be found to have been the sole or proximate cause of the accident.—Bowdle v. Detroit St. R. Co., 103 Mich. 272.

¶ 762. In an action by an interurban car passenger for damages for personal injuries resulting from his being thrown from the car, after having boarded it while in motion, a requested instruction for plaintiff, constituting a statement of plaintiff's claim, that as plaintiff was about to leave the sidewalk and board defendant's car it started and he was obliged to increase his speed to board it, and that he was prevented from getting further than the platform owing to the crowded condition of the car and was thrown from the car as it struck a switch, held properly refused as improperly containing the implication that plaintiff was denied opportunity to board the car, he having had such opportunity while the car was standing still at the station.—McKenzie v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry. Co., 195 Mich. 218.

¶ 763. The city piled bricks near the tracks of defendant street railway. The plaintiff's intestate, while on the step and running board of the car was knocked off and killed. The defendant requested the court to submit to the jury the question whether or not the act of the city in piling the bricks rather than the negligence of the defendant was the proximate cause of the accident. The court failed to do this, but charged that it was the duty of the defendant to warn its passengers of the danger and to prevent them from sitting in the dangerous position. Held, the instructions were correct.—Moers v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 158 Mich. 659.

¶ 764. In an action against a street railroad for the death of a passenger who was standing on the running board of a car, and was struck by another car passing on a parallel track, an instruction that the jury could find negligence if they believed that the defendant's employees permitted the passengers to board the car in such numbers that the deceased was crowded from the body of the car, was proper, where there was testimony upon which to base it.—Kalis v. Detroit United Ry., 155 Mich. 485. (Hooker, J., dissenting.)

¶ 765. In an action against a street railway company for the negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate, who was crushed by a car passing on the other track as he was standing on the running board, the judge gave counsel to understand that the only question he would submit to the jury was whether plaintiff's intestate was forced into the position in which he was at the time he was hurt by reason of the pressure of passengers who came upon the car after he boarded it. Later the judge instructed the jury that if they believed the bell on the passing car was not rung, it would be such negligence as to justify a verdict for plaintiff. Held, that this was error, since counsel were misled, and had no opportunity to present their views on this phase of the case.—Kalis v. Detroit United Ry., 155 Mich. 485.

¶ 766. In an action against a street railroad for the death of a passenger who was standing on the running board of a car, and was struck by another car passing on a parallel track, it was not error to refuse to charge that it would be negligence for a passenger on an open car to stand upon the inside running board, if, in order to do so, it was necessary to reach past other persons upon the running board, and hang on.—Kalis v. Detroit United Ry., 155 Mich. 485.

¶ 767. In an action by an interurban car passenger, who had boarded one of defendant's cars while it was in motion, and was thrown from the car, due to its lurching while passing from a switch to the main track, where plaintiff claimed that he had got upon the platform and had been unable to go further in the car owing to the crowded condition thereof and that the car was operated at a negligent rate of speed, and defendant claimed that plaintiff was not fairly on the car before he was injured, and that the car was operated at a moderate rate of speed, the charge of the court held to be erroneous as not defining the issues, as being conflicting and confusing as a whole, as lacking precision of statement and as being erroneous in stating the law.—McKenzie v. Detroit, J. & C. Ry. Co., 195 Mich. 218.

§ 234. ——Condition of tracks, trains and equipment.

¶ 768. In an action for personal injury sustained by a lumber scaler by the derailment of a log-carrying train, where there was testimony that a piece of the flange 19 inches in length was broken out of one of the wheels under the caboose, and that there was an old crack in the outer rim at the place where the break occurred; it was not error to instruct the jury that if this "was an essential element in the happening of the accident—that it would not have happened without it, and that it could have been observed by a proper inspection, the defendant would be negligent in that regard."—Greenfield v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 557.

¶ 769. In an action for personal injuries sustained by a lumber scaler through the derailment of a train loaded with logs, caused by a falling log, the refusal of an instruction which properly stated the rule that if plaintiff was a passenger and the accident which caused his injury occurred while the train was being operated in the usual manner of log trains upon well-managed roads, he could not recover, was not error, as it was subject to the criticism that it omitted a reference to the specific acts of negligence alleged and relied upon; and especially where the jury had been explicitly instructed upon the subject of defendant's negligence.—Greenfield v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 133 Mich. 557.

¶ 770. In an action against a railroad company for the death of a passenger by being thrown through the open door of a vestibule between sleepers, it was not error to refuse to instruct that the fact that the door was open was not of itself negligence; where the train in question was running at a high rate of speed and it was evidently intended that the door should be closed, and that the one in question was open because of a defect.—Robinson v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 135 Mich. 254.

¶ 771. In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by the giving way of a handhold on defendant's car, which was stopping on signal, an instruction with reference to the duty of inspection is proper where it is substantially as follows: "Inspection not only involves looking at cars and appliances, but as well all those tests which would ordinarily be used to ascertain the condition of cars and appliances that a reasonably prudent man would use in exercise of such an undertaking."—Gerlach v. Detroit United Ry., 171 Mich. 474.

¶ 772. Where, in an action for personal injury in a street car accident, the court instructs that the defendant is not liable unless the lack of an appliance prescribed by statute caused the accident or contributed to it, and there is evidence that the car could have been stopped with the appliance prescribed, and the accident avoided, the charge is sufficiently favorable to the defendant.—Fortin v. Bay City Traction & Electric Co., 154 Mich. 310.

¶ 773. In a suit against a street railway company for injuries alleged to have been sustained by reason of the defective flooring of a car, an instruction that plaintiff must prove that the floor was in such a defective condition as would necessarily give the defendant notice of its dangerous character, is error.—Plefka v. Detroit United Ry., 155 Mich. 53.

¶ 774. In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by the giving way of a handhold on defendant's car which was stopping on signal, it is not error to refuse to charge substantially as follows: "If plaintiff, in attempting to alight before the car stopped, subjected the handhold to an unusual or unreasonable strain, his weight considered, and under such strain it pulled out and resulted in plaintiff's falling, plaintiff cannot recover."—Gerlach v. Detroit United Ry., 171 Mich. 474.

¶ 775. An instruction in an action for injuries sustained by a passenger from the derailment of a train, that he might recover if the accident was caused by the spreading of the rails, or by the breaking of a rail as the result of the rotten condition of the ties, held within the allegations of the declaration.—Marshall v. Wabash R. Co., 184 Mich. 593.

¶ 776. In an action against a street railroad to recover for the death of a passenger riding in the vestibule of one of its cars, due to a collision with a derailed car going in the opposite direction, an instruction that if the defendant knew or had knowledge of prior derailments of its cars on the section of track where the accident occurred it was the duty of defendant to have found and repaired the place where the derailment occurred, held properly refused, it being the duty of the city to keep the foundation in proper condition.—Bury v. Detroit United Ry., 198 Mich. 447.

§ 235. ——Taking on and discharging passengers.

See also ante ¶ 759.

¶ 777. Where there is testimony that the driver of a horse car started the horses violently and suddenly with a whip, an instruction that plaintiff cannot recover for being injured while alighting "if the driver of the horse car was conducting his business in the usual and ordinary way" is erroneous.—Britton v. Grand Rapids St. R. Co., 90 Mich. 159.

¶ 778. In an action against a street car company for injuries occasioned by the conductor's alleged ringing of the bell while plaintiff was alighting, a charge which, taken as a whole, is to the effect that it was negligence on the conductor's part, if he rang the bell and started the car while the plaintiff was attempting to alight, is not open to the objection that it considered the ringing of the bell not negligence per se.—Kirchner v. Detroit City R., 91 Mich. 400.

¶ 779. An instruction that if the jury should find that the space between the outer edge of the running board of the car and the edge of the sod or little embankment, at the time and place when and where plaintiff claimed she stepped between the running board and embankment, was not more than 7 or 8 inches in width, defendant was not guilty of negligence in having such a space at that time and place, and that plaintiff could not recover, was properly refused, it appearing that plaintiff was compelled to step downward in order to alight, the running board of the car being about 18 inches above the surface of the ground, and the court not being able to say, as matter of law, that a passenger, in taking such a step, would in all cases step outward more than 7 or 8 inches.—Poole v. Consolidated St. R. Co., 100 Mich. 379.

¶ 780. In a case by a woman passenger against street railways, it was error to instruct that it is the duty of a carrier to afford such care as is reasonably necessary to look after women and children in their alighting as well as in their passage; as the jury may thereby have understood that the conductor was not only bound to give women and children an opportunity to alight with safety, but must assist them in so doing.—Selby v. Detroit Ry., 122 Mich. 311.

¶ 781. In an action for injury sustained by a street car passenger, in which the negligence relied on was the sudden starting of the car from which plaintiff was alighting after it had stopped, the refusal to charge that if the car did not stop it would not help plaintiff's case that the car started suddenly and with a jerk, was not error, where the jury was told that plaintiff could not recover upon the theory that the power was applied and the car started up and plaintiff was thrown before the car had stopped.—Hastings v. Boland, 136 Mich. 240.

¶ 782. An instruction, in an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by a street car, after having been brought to a stop for plaintiff to alight, starting while he was in the act of alighting and throwing him to the ground, which seems to authorize recovery if he stepped off from the moving car after a request that it stop, is error.—McDonald v. City Elec. Ry. Co., 137 Mich. 392.

¶ 783. An instruction is properly refused that assumes that defendant's street car conductor, when he started the car after stopping for one person, was not bound to use any care whatever to determine whether he would thereby endanger the safety of other persons intending to become passengers, in an action by a passenger for injuries received from the starting of the car, as she was attempting to board it immediately after another passenger for whom the car had stopped.—Smith v. Detroit United Ry., 145 Mich. 629.

¶ 784. An instruction as to the duty of a street railroad company in stopping and starting its cars in order to give passengers a reasonable time to alight, held not misleading.—Vultee v. Saginaw-Bay City Ry. Co., 186 Mich. 523.

¶ 785. Plaintiff, a boy of nine years, was riding on the front end of the rear car of defendant street railway. The train stopped at one of the cross streets, a regular stopping place, and plaintiff climbed off the car and caught hold of the rods of the rear platform of the car ahead for the purpose of boarding same. While so doing, the car started up and plaintiff was dragged and injured. The trial court instructed that when he left the step of the car and stepped down upon the ground to board the next car while it was standing still upon the track, he occupied the same position while he was upon the street, and was entitled to the same degree of caution on the part of the employees of the company, as any other person who might have been attempting to board the car while it was standing still. Held, such instruction was proper.—Keeley v. City Electric Ry. Co., 168 Mich. 79.

¶ 786. Plaintiff, a boy of nine years, was riding on the front platform of the rear car of defendant's street railway when the car stopped at a cross street, a regular stopping place. Plaintiff stepped off upon the ground and caught hold of the rods of the rear platform of the car ahead for the purpose of boarding same. While so engaged, the train started and plaintiff was dragged and injured. Held, the court, in instructing the jury as to the duty of defendant's employee, should, in view of the unusual conduct of plaintiff, have made reference to the length of time the cars were stationary, and it would have been reversible error to refuse to do so if requested by defendant.—Keeley v. City Electric Ry. Co., 168 Mich. 79.

¶ 787. Where in a suit for personal injuries the declaration charges that defendant was negligent in suddenly starting up its car as plaintiff was boarding it, it is proper for the court to instruct that the passenger was entitled to a reasonable opportunity to come to a place of safety on the car after boarding the same.—Formiller v. Detroit United Ry., 164 Mich. 653.

¶ 788. Where in a suit for personal injuries the declaration alleges that plaintiff was injured by the negligence of defendant in suddenly starting the car, an instruction is sufficient which states that plaintiff cannot recover if he was thrown off the car after he had succeeded in boarding it, and it is not necessary in addition to give a requested instruction defining what constitutes the act of boarding a car.—Formiller v. Detroit United Ry., 164 Mich. 653.

¶ 789. In a suit for personal injuries, plaintiff alleged that the injury was caused by the defendant starting up its street car while she was in the act of alighting. On the question of negligence the court charged the jury as follows: "If this car was started up after it came to a full stop, while the plaintiff was in the position of danger, from which position the starting up of the car would have a natural tendency to throw her off the car and injure her, that would be negligence. If, on the other hand * * * the plaintiff simply slipped as she was getting off the car, while the car was at a full stop, then there is no negligence on behalf of the company, and she cannot recover." Held, the charge was sufficiently favorable to plaintiff.—Cummings v. Detroit United Ry., 163 Mich. 304.

§ 236. ——Assaults on passengers.

¶ 790. In an action against a railroad for assault and battery committed by one of its conductors as a result of a controversy over a ticket, where a ticket was introduced in evidence by the company, it was proper to modify a request to instruct that the ticket was not good for the passage claimed, by adding that this was true if this was the ticket handed by plaintiff to the conductor, where plaintiff's testimony was in conflict with the theory of the requested instruction.—Johnson v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. Ry., 130 Mich. 453.

¶ 791. In an action against a railroad for assault and battery by one of its conductors resulting from a controversy over a ticket, an instruction that the circumstances occurring before plaintiff returned to the car after being ejected therefrom were material only as they bore upon the credibility of the witnesses, and that plaintiff could not recover if he provoked the assault, is sufficiently favorable to defendant.—Johnson v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. Ry., 130 Mich. 453.

¶ 792. Where, in a suit for personal injuries due to an assault committed by a street car conductor, there is a sharp conflict of testimony as to whether plaintiff had been previously warned to wait until other passengers were off the car before boarding same, it is reversible error for the trial court to instruct as conceded facts that passengers had been previously accustomed to board the car before letting other passengers off and that plaintiff, prior to the occasion in question, had been warned against this practice.—Markoff v. Detroit United Ry., 160 Mich. 37.

§ 237. ——Contributory negligence.

As to persons on platforms and running boards, see also ante § 233.

¶ 793. It is error to refuse a charge that a passenger who had drunk whisky several times and was injured while alighting cannot recover if he was at the time under the influence of liquor and if such in any way contributed to his injury, though in the course of a colloquy brought on by a juror's question it was charged that the duty of care towards a drunken passenger by the carrier did not enter into the case for the reason that plaintiff presented no such theory and there was no evidence that the carrier's servants knew he was intoxicated. Such charge did not cover the request.—Strand v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 67 Mich. 380.

¶ 794. Passengers upon a street railway are entitled to assume that the car will not be started without reasonable care to ascertain whether any passenger is alighting; and instructions to the jury that as the plaintiff stood upon the platform it was his duty to alight immediately, when the car stopped, and that if the car stopped a reasonable length of time for passengers to alight, and plaintiff, without the driver's knowledge, delayed alighting beyond that time, he was guilty of contributory negligence and could not recover, are erroneous.—Britton v. Grand Rapids St. R. Co., 90 Mich. 159.

¶ 795. In an action against a street railway for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by starting the car after it had stopped, while plaintiff was in the act of alighting, a requested instruction that, while it was the duty of defendant to stop its car to give plaintiff an opportunity to alight, yet failure to do so would not give him the right to jump from the moving car, should have been given.—McDonald v. City Elec. Ry. Co., 137 Mich. 302.

¶ 796. In an action by a passenger to recover for injuries sustained by being thrown from a train as he was attempting to reboard same after having alighted at the wrong station, an instruction permitting the jury to consider whether he was induced to alight upon the representation of defendant's trainman as excusing promptitude required by a passenger intending to board a train, held erroneous.—Foley v. Detroit & Mackinac Ry. Co., 179 Mich. 586.

¶ 797. In an action by a street car passenger for damages for personal injuries sustained as a result of the starting of the car while plaintiff was attempting to get off at a point where the car tracks crossed railroad tracks and at which it was customary to stop the street car while the conductor went forward to ascertain whether the crossing could be made in safety and to allow passengers to get off, an instruction that if, as claimed by plaintiff, before the car came to a stop she got up and went to the back part of the car, she would not be guilty of any negligence in walking back to a seat in the rear end of the car and sitting down until the car came to a stop where passengers got off; that it was the duty of the conductor, knowing the custom of passengers to get off at such place to give them a reasonable time to get off before signaling the car to start; that such passenger had the right to rely upon such duty, but that if the car had started on its way after it had come to a stop and before she had got out of her seat and had indicated in any way that she intended to leave the car at such place, and had started on and was crossing the railroad tracks, and then she got up and walked back and stepped off the car while it was in motion, she was guilty of contributory negligence, held to be correct.—Kirkpatrick v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co., 195 Mich. 519. (Steere, Ostrander and Brooke, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 798. An instruction was warranted as to the contributory negligence of the plaintiff in action by a prospective passenger against a street railroad for damages for personal injuries alleged to be due to her hold upon the car and her clothing catching in the door of a folding step car, upon its being closed as she attempted to board the car, and her being dragged some distance, where plaintiff testified that the conductor shut the door in her face, while she had one foot on the step, and rang the bell for the car to move, and then described what immediately occurred, involving her position, her actions, as well as the movement of the car, and the result.—Sibert v. Detroit United Ry., 196 Mich. 117.

§ 238. Verdict, findings and judgment.

In general, see Judgments; Verdicts and Findings.

¶ 799. One of two street railway defendants cannot urge as ground for new trial that the verdict against it is not supported by the evidence in that it did not operate and had no connection with the car from which plaintiff fell, where the declaration was filed against both defendants, and both pleaded the general issue and the question was in no way raised until on such motion, and where there was some evidence tending to show liability on the part of such defendant.—Selby v. Detroit Ry., 122 Mich. 311.

¶ 800. Plaintiff was injured in a collision by the trains of two railroads at the point of intersection, and sued them jointly. Defendants did not ask the jury to determine which of them was guiltless. Held, that where there was evidence from which it might be inferred that the negligence of each road contributed to the accident, the verdict must be sustained against both.—Van Orman v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 152 Mich. 185.

¶ 801. In an action against the railroad company and the Pullman Company for the death of a passenger by being thrown through a vestibule door while passing between sleeping cars, the railroad company was liable for permitting the vestibule door to be defective; though there was a directed verdict in favor of the Pullman Company.—Robinson v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 135 Mich. 254.

F. CONNECTING CARRIERS AND JOINT FACILITIES.

§ 239. In general; transfers and tickets.

Continuation of passenger's character during transferring, see ante § 114.

Duty to present transfer or pay another fare, see also ante § 138.

¶ 802. The requirement that a transfer ticket from one route of a street railway to another shall not be honored unless used within fifteen minutes after delivery to the passenger is not unreasonable in the absence of any obligation on the company's part by charter, ordinance or contract to make such transfer, and to carry the passenger over both routes for a single fare: and if the ticket is not used within the time limited—provided a car passes in that time—it is void.—Heffron v. Detroit City R. Co., 92 Mich. 406.

¶ 803. A passenger's failure to read a limited transfer ticket gives him no rights which he would not have had had he read it and been advised of the limitation as to the time of use.—Heffron v. Detroit City R. Co., 92 Mich. 406.

§ 240. Ejection of passenger or breach of contract by second carrier.

¶ 804. Plaintiff having purchased a ticket from D to T. via P., and return, the conductor of the line from D. to P. took up the going part of the ticket, but failed to give plaintiff a check to show his right to ride from P. to T. The conductor of the latter line insisted upon fare being paid, and plaintiff having refused to pay, and having been ejected without unnecessary force, brought suit. Held, that the conductor was right in requiring a ticket to be produced or fare to be paid, and in refusing to recognize the return coupon as evidence of payment; that the passenger should have paid his fare or left peaceably.—Van Dusan v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 97 Mich. 439.

¶ 805. A passenger on paying fare for a ride over the lines of two companies received a ticket of a peculiar color and print, consisting of two parts separated by a perforated line, the lower part for the company to which fare had been paid, the upper for the other. The conductor of the first company so separated the parts as to take with the lower part about one-third of the upper, and when the passenger offered the remainder to the conductor of the second company it was refused and ejection followed a refusal to pay fare. In an action by the passenger, held, as matter of law, that the conductor was bound to know that the fragment was part of a genuine ticket used upon his line, which, if whole, would have entitled plaintiff to a ride, and that it should have been received.—Rouser v. North Park Street R. Co., 97 Mich. 565.

¶ 806. A passenger on a railroad desiring to go to a station beyond that road, and which could only be reached by a connecting line, paid to the conductor on the first road the fare demanded, supposing it to be the fare to his destination. The conductor had no authority to receive fare except over his own line, and failed to inform the passenger that the fare paid entitled him to ride to the end of the first line only. The passenger being ejected from the train taken by him on the connecting line, for not paying his fare, held, that the first road was not liable for damages therefor.—Haggerty v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 59 Mich. 366.

¶ 807. A street railway company which had a running arrangement with another company for the carriage of passengers, was liable for an attempt to forcibly eject a passenger for nonpayment of fare, who presented his ticket from which the conductor of the other company had mistakenly removed the coupon entitling such passenger to continue his ride after the conductor of defendant had taken charge of the car.—Vining v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. R. Co., 122 Mich. 248.

¶ 808. One who purchases a ticket for transportation on several railway lines and by boat is chargeable with notice of conditions printed on the ticket, that the defendant acted merely as agent and was not responsible beyond its own lines and that the purchaser should not hold any of the lines liable for damage on account of statements of employees not in accordance with the contract.—McWethy v. Detroit, G. R. & W. R. Co., 127 Mich. 333.

¶ 809. One who purchases a ticket for transportation over several railway lines and by boat cannot recover from the railway company which sold her the ticket, for injuries to health sustained through failure of a boat line to furnish a berth as called for in the contract where the ticket bears the printed statement that the seller is merely the agent and not responsible beyond its own lines.—McWethy v. Detroit, G. R. & W. R. Co., 127 Mich. 333.

¶ 810. One who purchases a ticket for transportation on several railway lines and by boat, upon refusal of the boat to give her a berth in accordance with the terms of the contract, unless she pays extra compensation, cannot recover for injuries to health sustained through spending the night on a couch in the cabin, because being able to pay it, she declined.—McWethy v. Detroit, G. R. & W. R. Co., 127 Mich. 333.

§ 241. Joint stations and facilities.

Concurrent liability, see also post ¶ 813.
Union stations and union station corporations, see Union Stations.
Order to provide joint station, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8121(b).

¶ 811. Where a crosswalk is constructed and maintained by two railroads for the purpose of transferring passengers from one station to the other the duty rests upon both companies to see that the way is properly lighted for passengers going from one station to the other, and it is immaterial that there is an arrangement between the companies that one of them should light the walk.—Boyle v. Waters, 199 Mich. 478.

§ 242. Joint and concurrent liability for injuries.

Evidence of joint liability for baggage, see post § 257.
Questions for jury, see ante § 229.

¶ 812. An electric railway company which operates cars by its own employees over the line of another railway is liable for personal injuries sustained by a passenger entitled to ride on the tracks of both companies while the car is still on the other company's track but after the switch has been thrown, notwithstanding a provision in the contract between the companies that the ownership of the track shall determine the responsibility of the respective parties to the general public.—Richard v. Detroit, R., R. & L. O. Ry., 129 Mich. 458.

¶ 813. Where plaintiff while waiting to take a train was injured by catching his foot in a defective plank in the station platform, and it appeared that the station was used by two railroad companies jointly, held, that both defendants owed to plaintiff the duty to maintain the premises in a reasonably safe condition and that they were jointly liable for the injury.—Peters v. Detroit & Mackinac Ry. Co., 178 Mich. 481.

¶ 814. The duty of an initial carrier does not cease the moment a passenger having a through ticket alights from a train to pass over on a common crosswalk to the station of the connecting carrier, nor until the passenger has had reasonable opportunity to get away from the initial carrier's premises in the direction ordinarily taken, and until such point is reached and passed an injury to the passenger by a train of the connecting carrier due to the failure to light the crosswalk is the proximate cause of the injury.—Boyle v. Waters, 199 Mich. 478.

¶ 815. A passenger on a railroad who has a through ticket necessitating a change at a particular point to another railroad is entitled to protection by the first carrier as a passenger until she has alighted and has had reasonable opportunity to get away from the company's premises in the direction ordinarily taken to reach the station of the second railroad.—Boyle v. Waters, 199 Mich. 478.

¶ 816. The mere fact that a passenger who has a through ticket issued by one railroad calling for connection with another railroad at a certain point is off the premises of the first carrier and on the premises of the connecting carrier at the time she is struck by an engine of the connecting carrier does not relieve the first carrier from liability for injuries to her where she was pursuing her way on an unlighted passageway between the stations constructed and maintained by both railroads for general use in the transfer of passengers and which she had been directed to use by the agent of such first carrier.—Boyle v. Waters, 199 Mich. 478.

V. CARRIAGE OF BAGGAGE AND PASSENGERS' EFFECTS.

§ 244. In general; duty to receive and carry.

¶ 817. A passenger is entitled to have carried as baggage such articles as are necessary and requisite for his personal convenience.—Amory v. Wabash R. Co., 130 Mich. 404.

§ 245. What constitutes baggage.

Bicycles, baby carriages, etc., see Comp. L. 1915, § 8329.

¶ 818. A carrier is liable for merchandise carried in trunks as baggage if it has knowledge or notice that the trunks contain merchandise.—Amory v. Wabash R. Co., 130 Mich. 404.

¶ 819. Notice to the carrier that a passenger's trunks contained merchandise so as to render the carrier liable for its loss is sufficiently shown by evidence that the baggage master so stated in reference to the trunks in question, that plaintiff had traveled over the road frequently for some years with the same trunks, during which time the same baggage master was in charge, that plaintiff's business was well known, and that the trunks were delivered to the baggage master with the statement that they belonged to plaintiff, the ladies' tailor.—Amory v. Wabash R. Co., 130 Mich. 404.

¶ 820. If a passenger ships merchandise in his trunk, without notice to the railroad company the company is not responsible for the loss, but the notice need not be an express notice. Knowledge by the agent or company of the facts to put a person in inquiry is equivalent to notice.—Dahrooge v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 144 Mich. 544.

What constitutes baggage for which carrier is liable, see note, 7 N. C. C. A. 972-981.
Books or manuscript as baggage, see note, 1 N. C. C. A. 65-71, § 246. Delivery to carrier; checking.

Evidence of delivery, see post § 257.
Checks for baggage, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8245.

¶ 821. The plaintiff, intending to take passage on the steamboat of defendants, deposited his trunk on board in the usual place for luggage, but without putting it in charge of any person, or notifying any one employed on the boat of such deposit, or of his intention to take passage; and while temporarily absent from the boat she started on her trip, and he was left. The trunk could not afterwards be found. Held, that there was not a constructive delivery and acceptance of the trunk as the luggage of a passenger, by which the defendant could be held chargeable for its loss.—Wright v. Caldwell, 3 Mich. 51.

¶ 822. In an action against a common carrier for the loss of a trunk the fact that the defendant's transfer agent checked the plaintiff's baggage before he had procured his ticket without any authority and against instructions, is immaterial on question of responsibility for the baggage, where plaintiff afterwards procured the ticket, thereby correcting the consequences of the mistake of the transfer agent.—Wolf v. Grand Rapids, H. & C. R., 149 Mich. 75.

§ 247. Contract for carriage and limitations of liability.

Allegations as to consideration, see post § 256.
Necessity of notice of defense of limitation, see post § 256.

¶ 823. The right to recover the actual value of baggage destroyed while in the control of a carrier, is not limited, where there was no deceit or fraud on the part of the passenger in failing to disclose the actual value of his baggage when checking it, and he was not aware of a limitation of the carrier's liability in its tariff filed with the State Railroad Commission.—Crowley Bros. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada, 185 Mich. 482.

§ 248. Charges and rates.

In general, see ante § 3.
Regulation of excess baggage rates by Railroad Commission, basis for fixing, see Public Service.

¶ 824. Where the Michigan Railroad Commission prescribes rates for excess baggage, the rates fixed are maximum rates. The carriers may within those rates fix lesser rates, provided there is no discrimination or rebating. Between competing points, where the haul of one road is longer than that of the other, the one having the longer haul may charge the same rates as are charged by the one having the shorter haul.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 156 Mich. 459.

§ 249. Nature and extent of liability.

Limitations on liability, see ante § 247.
Burden of proof and evidence, see post § 257.
Damages and measure and proof of damages for loss, see Damages.

¶ 825. A railway company carrying baggage free is held to no greater diligence than any other gratuitous bailee.—Flint & P. M. Ry. Co. v. Weir, 37 Mich. 111.

¶ 826. Where the plaintiff purchased a ticket without intention to use it but for the sole purpose of having his baggage transferred the railroad company is a gratuitous bailee liable only for gross negligence and not liable for the felonious taking of the baggage from the baggage room at the destination.—Marshall v. Pontiac, O. & N. R. Co., 126 Mich. 45.

¶ 827. A common carrier is liable for the loss of baggage or goods unless the loss is occasioned by an act of God or the public enemy.—Wolf v. Grand Rapids, H. & C. Ry., 149 Mich. 75.

¶ 828. A carrier of passengers by water is not liable for baggage accidentally burned in a warehouse at the point of destination while awaiting the arrival of its owner, who, with the carrier's consent, had stopped at an intermediate point.—Laffrey v. Grummond, 74 Mich. 186.

¶ 829. Where a passenger arrived at a station late at night and his baggage was destroyed by the burning of the station shortly afterward, a railway company is liable as a carrier where it was customary, under such circumstances, to leave baggage at the station until the following morning.—Crowley Bros. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada, 185 Mich. 482.

Liability of carrier for loss of passenger's personal effects, see note, 4 N. C. C. A. 792-809.

§ 250. ——Hand baggage and articles in custody of passenger.

¶ 830. A passenger on board a steamboat was, with a fellow passenger, a stranger, assigned to a state room by the officers of the boat. The state room window was broken, and the attention of the stewardess was called to it. When the first passenger retired for the night she rolled up her dress, in the pocket of which were about $30 and a gold chain, and placed it at the foot of the upper berth. Early in the morning she found the dress unrolled, that the money and chain had disappeared, and that a pillow which had been placed in the window was not in it. She testified that the woman with her could not have taken the property without awakening her, as she did not sleep soundly, and both occupied the same berth. Whether the steamboat proprietors were liable as innkeepers would be, query; the court being equally divided.—McKee v. Owen, 15 Mich. 115.

Liability of carrier for loss of property in possession of passenger by robbery or theft, see note, 9 N. C. C. A. 730-747.

§ 251. ——Termination of liability as carrier.

Baggage left on arrival until time to claim, see also ante § 249.
Reasonableness of time, see post § 254.

¶ 831. The rigorous liability of a railroad company for baggage ceases when a trunk has reached its destination and a reasonable opportunity has been afforded for taking it away; thereafter the company is liable as a warehouseman only.—Marshall v. Pontiac, O. & N. R. Co., 126 Mich. 45.

¶ 832. The strict rule of liability of a carrier for the baggage of a passenger continues after his arrival at his destination until the elapse of a reasonable time for its removal.—Crowley Bros. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada, 185 Mich. 482.

¶ 833. The strict rule of liability of a common carrier of passengers for their baggage continues until a reasonable time for delivery after the arrival at the destination of the passenger, but after such time has elapsed the liability of the carrier is that of a warehouseman.—Wallace v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 176 Mich. 128.

§ 252. ——Contributory negligence of passenger.

Failure to remove in reasonable time as jury, see post § 258.

¶ 834. Plaintiff at 2 p. m. checked his suitcase in the parcel room of the depot of the defendant railroad and paid the fee of five cents required. He told the attendant he intended to call for the same at 4:20 p. m., and did in fact make inquiry about it at 6 p. m. The suitcase was lost. Held, the plaintiff was not guilty of negligence in failing to call at 4:20 p. m.—Fraam v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 161 Mich. 556.

§ 253. Storage and keeping while not in transit.

Baggage checked without person traveling, see ante ¶ 826.
Baggage left on arrival to be taken on following day, see ante § 249.
When carrier's liability terminates and warehouseman's begins, see ante § 251.
Evidence of negligence, see also post ¶ 856.
Contributory negligence, see ante § 252.

¶ 835. Plaintiff checked his suitcase at the parcel room in the depot of defendant railway and paid the fee of five cents required by the defendant. Held, the defendant was a bailee for hire, was bound to use ordinary care, and was liable in trover for the loss of the suitcase resulting from the failure to use such care.—Fraam v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 161 Mich. 556.

¶ 836. Plaintiff, upon checking his suitcase in the parcel room of the defendant's depot, told the attendant to be careful as there was a lot of goods in the case. The attendant told him not to be afraid. Held, in a suit to recover for its loss than plaintiff sufficiently warned defendant of the value of the suitcase.—Fraam v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 161 Mich. 556.

Liability of carrier for loss of property from check room, see note, 3 N. C. C. A. 211.

§ 254. Reclaiming and delivery back to passenger.

Reasonableness of time to reclaim, see ante §§ 249, 251.
Reasonableness of time as jury question, see post § 258.
Contributory negligence in delaying to reclaim, see ante § 252.

¶ 837. In determining what constitutes a reasonable time for the removal of baggage by a passenger after his arrival at his destination, the general and usual custom of the carrier in relation to the delivery of baggage at the station in question, may be taken into consideration.—Crowley Bros. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada, 185 Mich. 482.

¶ 838. In determining what is a reasonable time within which baggage may be removed after the arrival of a passenger at his destination, the usual course or custom of the carrier's business at the station in question, including the closing thereof after the arrival of late trains, as well as the fact that baggage handlers do not customarily work at night, may be considered.—Crowley Bros. v Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada, 185 Mich. 482.

§ 255. Actions for injury or loss.

¶ 839. Articles of jewelry of a wife traveling with her husband, which were not given or furnished by the husband, which were part of the wife's baggage carried on tickets purchased by him for himself and her, and were lost or injured, may be recovered by him in assumpsit based on the contract of carriage made with him.—Withey v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 141 Mich. 412.

¶ 840. A father, paying full fare for himself, traveling with an infant child of such tender years that by custom no fare is demanded for its carriage, may recover on the contract of carriage for loss of or injury to articles bought and used for the child, which articles are a part of, and packed and carried with his baggage, on the ground that those articles are the property of the parent, and properly a part of his proper baggage.—Withey v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 141 Mich. 412.

§ 256. ——Form of action and pleading.

¶ 841. Case seems to be the proper action for loss by a carrier of baggage which, with its owner, was carried free.—Flint & P. M. Ry. Co. v. Weir, 37 Mich. 111.

¶ 842. Damages for the loss of luggage cannot be recovered in assumpsit against the carrier if the baggage was carried free. An action of tort, however, lies for negligent loss.—Flint & P. M. Ry. Co. v. Weir, 37 Mich. 111.

¶ 843. A declaration ex contractu against steamboat proprietors by a passenger to recover for the contents of a lost trunk must aver a consideration paid, or agreed to be paid, for the transportation of the trunk and its contents; and the averment must be supported by proof.—Wright v. Caldwell, 3 Mich. 51.

¶ 844. A defendant railway which accepts a suitcase at the parcel room in its station and takes a fee of five cents is a bailee for hire and is liable in trover for loss of the suitcase on failure to return it without excuse.—Fraam v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 161 Mich. 556.

¶ 845. That a carrier's liability for the loss of baggage was limited by contract must, under Circuit Court Rule 7b, be specially pleaded.—Crowley Bros. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada, 185 Mich. 482.

¶ 846. That a carrier's liability for the loss of baggage was limited by contract cannot be shown in an action of tort under the general issue.—Crowley Bros. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada, 185 Mich. 482.

¶ 847. That a passenger bringing an action against a carrier for the loss of his baggage declares in case rather than in assumpsit does not affect the legal liability of the defendant, nor require the plaintiff to show negligence.—Wolf v. Grand Rapids, H. & C. R. Ry., 149 Mich. 75.

§ 257. ——Burden of proof and evidence.

Burden of proof of consideration for carriage, see also ante ¶ 843.
Burden of proof as to negligence, see also ante ¶ 847.
Sufficiency to go to jury, see also post § 258.

¶ 848. In an action against a railway company for compensation for baggage destroyed while at defendant's depot the contention that such baggage was destroyed by the act of God is a matter of affirmative defense and the burden of proving it by the preponderance of the evidence is upon the defendant.—Wallace v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 176 Mich. 128.

¶ 849. Where action is brought against a railway company for compensation for baggage destroyed while at defendant's depot, it is not error to allow plaintiff to answer a question as to what was said with reference to the baggage when the checks were presented when it is disputed whether plaintiff had a reasonable time in which to remove the baggage and plaintiff alleges that she presented the checks to the station agent on arriving at her destination and that he stated he had no time to bother with it.—Wallace v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 176 Mich. 128.

¶ 850. In an action against a carrier for the loss of baggage testimony of the transfer agent that he had delivered the trunk at the freight depot is sufficient to show that it had come into the custody of the defendant.—Wolf v. Grand Rapids, H. & C. Ry., 149 Mich. 75.

¶ 851. Where a railroad company and a steamship company advertised that they had formed a through line between two points, had a common agent who sold tickets and another common agent who checked baggage, a jury is warranted in inferring that in the carrying of passengers and their baggage the two are partners, and therefore jointly liable to a plaintiff who has sued to recover for the loss of his baggage.—Wolf v. Grand Rapids, H. & C. Ry., 149 Mich. 75.

§ 258. —Questions of law and facts.

¶ 852. What constitutes a reasonable time for the removal of baggage after the arrival of a passenger at his destination, is a question of law when the facts are undisputed.—Crowley Bros. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada, 185 Mich. 482.

¶ 853. The fact that the trial court submitted to the jury the question of the reasonableness of the time for the removal of a passenger's baggage after his arrival at his destination, held not prejudicial to the defendant, although the testimony was undisputed.—Crowley Bros. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada, 185 Mich. 482.

¶ 854. What constitutes reasonable time in which a passenger may remove his baggage from the custody of a carrier after his arrival at his destination, is a question for the jury when resting on disputed testimony. —Crowley Bros. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada, 185 Mich. 482.

¶ 855. In an action against a railway company for compensation for baggage destroyed while at defendant's depot, it is proper to leave the question to the jury as to whether a reasonable time for delivery elapsed after its arrival where it is disputed whether plaintiff presented her baggage checks to the station agent on her arrival and was told that he could not bother with it then and whether there was a dray or any means of getting the baggage away before the depot was locked for the night during which it was destroyed.—Wallace v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 176 Mich. 128.

¶ 856. Plaintiff checked his suitcase at the parcel room in the depot of defendant railway and paid the fee of five cents required by the defendant. Upon calling for it, he was informed it could not be found. Defendant at the trial introduced evidence showing that the parcel room was left unattended for five or ten minutes at three different times the same afternoon, while the attendant was engaged in putting baggage on trains. Held, there was sufficient evidence of defendant's negligence to go to the jury.—Fraam v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 161 Mich. 556.

¶ 2. Land dedicated as an approach to a cemetery may be used by the owner of the fee in any way not inconsistent with the rights of the owners of the easement.—Township of Oneida v. Allen, 137 Mich. 224.

¶ 3. Use of a strip of land, dedicated for an approach to a cemetery, by the adjoining landowner as a lane for reaching the rear of his farm will not be restrained at the instance of the township which desired to improve the cemetery and approach, where the strip had been so used by the adjoining owner for more than 15 years and there was nothing in the dedication to show an intent to prohibit such use.—Township of Oneida v. Allen, 137 Mich. 224.

§ 3. Lots and burial permits.

Liability for disturbance of grave, see Corpses and Burial.

§ 4. Remedies and procedure.

¶ 4. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 8407, providing that lands used for burial purposes shall be exempt from mortgage or other lien or incumbrances, and section 10322 exempting cemeteries, etc., from levy under execution or other final process and under section 437 conferring general powers on a court of equity to subject property to payment of debts, but expressly excepting exempt property, a court of equity has no jurisdiction to enforce a judgment against a cemetery company by the sale of its lands used for burial purposes.—Avery v. Forest Lawn Cemetery Co., 127 Mich. 125.

¶ 5. Comp. L. 1897, § 9780, providing that the provisions of chapter 26 relating to proceedings against corporations in chancery, of which said section is a part, shall not extend to the proprietors of any burying ground incorporated under the laws of this state, did not preclude the chancery court from enforcing the payment of subscriptions to the capital stock of a cemetery corporation, in a bill filed by a creditor of such corporation.—C. H. Little Co. v. Woodworth Ave. Cemetery Ass'n, 135 Mich. 248.

¶ 6. Though Comp. L. 1897, §§ 4414, 4415, authorizes the board of health to purchase lands for cemetery purposes and hold the same in trust for the township, the latter is a proper party to a suit in equity to enforce rights relating to such cemeteries.—Township of Oneida v. Allen, 137 Mich. 224.

§ 1. In general; nature of the writ.

Nature of review on hearing and scope of review, see post § 48 et seq.
Applicability to nonjudicial proceedings, see post §§ 17-20.
Certiorari to review criminal proceedings, see Indictment, XVI, A, XVIII.
Grounds and propriety of allowance and proceedings subject to writ, see post §§ 4-21.
Effect of existence of other remedy, see post § 6.
Joining or combining separate proceedings under one writ, see post § 31.
Form and direction of the writ, see post § 32.
Framing issues of fact to be tried, see post § 44.
Nature of the judgment on certiorari, see post § 62.
Retention of certiorari as common law form of action, see Jud Act, Chap. XI, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 12350.

¶ 1. The office of a common law writ of certiorari is to bring up for review the proceedings of a lower court or an official body for a determination of their jurisdiction, or the manner of its exercise.—McGurrin v. Grand Rapids Township Board, 186 Mich. 475.

§ 2. Ancillary certiorari.

See also post ¶ 122.
Writ to review ancillary proceedings, see post ¶ 102.
To bring up additional record on appeal or error, see Appeal and Error, § 242.

¶ 2. Certiorari is the proper remedy for removing records from one court into another for trial.—People ex rel. Glens Falls Ins. Co. v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 21 Mich. 577.

¶ 3. Certiorari lies in aid of a writ of error in criminal cases to obtain a full return.—Henning v. People, 40 Mich. 733; Peple v. Ferguson, 48 Mich. 41; People v. Van Wagner, 51 Mich. 171.

¶ 4. Certiorari lies in connection with writ of error to review the action of a circuit judge in entering the jury room and giving instructions in the absence of counsel and of the court stenographer.—Fox v. Peninsular White Lead & Color Works, 84 Mich. 676.

¶ 5. Certiorari is a proper proceeding to compel the remanding for any lawful purpose of a record which has been certified down from a superior to an inferior court.—Lauder v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 79 Mich. 602.

§ 3. Prerogative of Supreme Court.

Issuance of the writ, see post § 30.
Effect of pendency of application to other court, see post ¶ 130.
Power of legislature to regulate procedure or jurisdiction, see Constitutional Law, II.
Disability of legislature to take away prerogative, see Constitutional Law, II.
General power of Supreme Court, see Jud. Act, Chap. I, § 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 12014.
General provisions as to the writ, see Jud. Act, Chap. I, § 11; Comp. L. 1915, § 13746.

¶ 6. Under Act No. 310, Pub. Acts 1905, the Supreme Court has exclusive authority to determine whether a writ of certiorari shall issue, and such a writ issued by a circuit court commissioner, will be dismissed for want of authority.—People v. Chamblin, 149 Mich. 653.

§ 4. Grounds and propriety of writ.

Discretion, existence of other remedy, and other considerations governing allowance, see post §§ 5-9.
Errors open to review on the writ, see post § 48 et seq.
Propriety of writ as question first raised on hearing, see post § 51.
Grounds for ancillary writ, see ante § 2.
In drain proceedings, see Drains, II.

¶ 7. Certiorari may issue from the Supreme Court in cases of want of jurisdiction or of actual imprisonment.—City of Ishpeming v. Maroney, 49 Mich. 226.

¶ 8. Certiorari issues from the Supreme Court only when necessary to prevent a failure of justice.—Adams v. Abram, 38 Mich. 302.

¶ 9. Certiorari does not lie to review proceedings under How. St., ch. 295, to compel a public officer to surrender the books and papers of the office to his successor, unless a want of jurisdiction appears, or a gross violation of the statute.—Curran v. Norris, 58 Mich. 512.

§ 5. ——Discretion to allow writ.

Dismissal for improper allowance, see post §§ 39, 41.

¶ 10. The writ is not of right, but rests in the sound discretion of the court, to be allowed or not, as may best promote the ends of justice.—In re Lantis, 9 Mich. 324; Farrell v. Taylor, 12 Mich. 113; Roediger v. Wayne County Drain Com'rs, 40 Mich. 745; Gager v. Chippewa County Sup'rs, 47 Mich. 167.

¶ 11. Certiorari is not a writ of right. It is a discretionary writ, and will not be used to enforce a strict legal right where justice cannot be done, and where the petitioners are guilty of laches in failing to take prompt action.—Baudistel v. City of Jackson, 110 Mich. 357.

¶ 12. The writ of certiorari is not of right, and is not allowed to work injustice to private rights.—Kimball v. Homan, 74 Mich. 699.

¶ 13. The issuance of certiorari is largely discretionary and will not be permitted to accomplish a palpable injustice.—Silver v. Hamilton Township Board, 146 Mich. 393.

¶ 14. Certiorari is a discretionary writ which ought not issue unless it is made to appear that an injustice has been done.—West v. Parkinson, 130 Mich. 401.

¶ 15. The statutory provisions requiring the writ to be issued within two years, and providing for its allowance out of court, do not take away the discretionary power of the court.—In re Lantis, 9 Mich. 324; Farrell v. Taylor, 12 Mich. 113.

¶ 16. The lower court sustained a demurrer on the ground that the declaration joined inconsistent causes of action, and plaintiff applied for a writ of certiorari to review the decision, and a stay of proceedings. Held, that nothing in Act. No. 310, Pub. Acts 1905, changed the common-law rule, and the granting of the writ was within the discretion of the court.—Detroit River Transit Co. v. Union Trust Co., 152 Mich. 91.

¶ 17. Even if under Pub. Acts 1905, No. 310, there are cases where the writ ought to issue to prevent injustice; yet where the defendant's demurrer to a declaration was sustained on the ground that, by containing the common counts in assumpsit and a special count for breach of warranty for the sale of chattels, it joined two inconsistent causes of action, it was discretionary with the upper court whether it would review by the writ and meanwhile stay proceedings in the lower court.—Detroit River Transit Co. v. Union Trust Co., 152 Mich. 91.

§ 6. ——Existence of other remedy.

When writ will issue from Supreme Court rather than ordinary review, see ante § 4.

Mandamus or quo warranto, see post § 7; and see also Mandamus; Quo Warranto.

Remedy by motion to amend, see also post ¶ 41.

In cases of contempt, see also post ¶ 56.

For cases holding that appeeal or error are not proper methods for review because certiorari lies, see Appeal and Error, § 3.

Proper remedy for review of judgment of circuit on appeal from justice, see Appeal and Error, §§ 25, 26.

Matters correctable by motion on judgment, see Judgments, V.

In drain, condemnation, highway, and other statutory proceedings for which statutory modes of review are provided, see Drains, II; Eminent Domain, VIII; Highways, II, B; etc.

To review forcible entry proceedings, see Forcible Entry, II.

Alternative remedies to review highway proceedings, see Highways, II, B.

¶ 18. The writ of certiorari is usually refused by the Supreme Court where other remedies, such as appeal or certiorari from the circuit court, are available and adequate; except under peculiar circumstances where a denial would involve a failure of justice. —Farrell v. Taylor, 12 Mich. 113; Specht v. City of Detroit, 20 Mich. 168; Smith v. Reed, 24 Mich. 240; City of Ishpeming v. Maroney, 49 Mich. 226; Tucker v. Parker, 50 Mich. 5; City of Detroit v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 63 Mich. 712; Mathias v. Mason, 66 Mich. 524.

¶ 19. Certiorari should not be favored where any other remedy is adequate, yet it will undoubtedly lie for want of jurisdiction.—Dunlap v. Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co., 46 Mich. 190.

¶ 20. Where there is an adequate remedy to review the alleged errors of the trial court by a writ of error, certiorari will be denied. —People v. James, 155 Mich. 548.

¶ 21. The remedy by certiorari is not favored and will generally be refused when another adequate remedy exists.—Detroit Lumber Co. v. The Petrel, 155 Mich. 350.

¶ 22. The writ of certiorari is not usually allowed where there is another and adequate remedy.—In re Phillips, 154 Mich. 139.

¶ 23. The common-law writ of certiorari is available only where the party aggrieved has had no opportunity to avail himself of the remedies provided by statute.—Jacobs v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 132 Mich. 55.

¶ 24. Where a certiorari was sued out to review the decision of the circuit court in dismissing its certiorari issued to a commissioner to bring up for review proceedings under the statute to recover possession of land, it was held that the questions raised were such as should be raised by writ of error.—Robens v. Videto, 33 Mich. 240.

§ 7. ——Mandamus or quo warranto as remedy.

¶ 26. Certiorari does not lie to review the action of a circuit judge in appointing himself referee in a cause pending before him; but mandamus lies to set it aside.— Woodin v. Phoenix, 41 Mich. 655.

¶ 27. Mandamus, not certiorari, is the proper remedy to review an order of the circuit court in awarding the custody of property in a replevin suit.—Detroit & M. Ry. Co. v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 152 Mich. 201.

¶ 28. Quo warranto and not certiorari is the proper remedy to test the legality of the corporate existence of a school district after such district has been organized, officers elected, contracts made and expenses incurred by it.—Perrizo v. Kesler, 93 Mich. 280.

¶ 29. Under Sup. Court Rule 12 certiorari is the proper remedy (not mandamus) to review the denial by the circuit court of a mandamus to compel the clerk of the justice's court of Detroit to receive and file an appeal.—Graham v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 143 Mich. 360.

¶ 30. Madamus and not certiorari was the proper remedy to review an order on a defendant to produce books and papers for examination by plaintiff's bookkeeper.—Church v. Anti-Kalsomine Co., 119 Mich. 437.

¶ 31. The defeated party after an adjudication of the rights of contestants for a public office by a court of competent jurisdiction, under Comp. L. 1897, chap. 272, §§ 9843-9851, could not review the judgment upon certiorari and thereby defeat the object of the statute, but must resort to proceedings in the nature of quo warranto, or to some other appropriate action to try title to the office.—Murta v. Carr, 140 Mich. 606.

§ 8. ——Interest and grievance of relator.

Necessity of special interest in relator when matter is public, see post § 25.
On highway proceedings, see Highways, II, B.

¶ 32. Relief will not be granted to a plaintiff in certiorari unless it appears to the court that the proceedings may, at least, damage him.—Davison v. Otis, 24 Mich. 23.

¶ 33. Certiorari does not lie where it does not appear that the plaintiff has some substantial interest and will suffer some injury if the court does not interfere.—People v. Leavitt, 41 Mich. 470.

¶ 34. Irregularities in the proceedings of a board of school inspectors which do not affect property rights or jurisdiction cannot be reviewed on certiorari to review an alteration of the district.—Donough v. Dewey, 82 Mich. 309.

¶ 35. The liability of the superintendent of an insane asylum to suit for false imprisonment for detaining an inmate on a void commitment entitles him to ask for a review of an order discharging such inmate on habeas corpus proceedings.—Palmer v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 83 Mich. 528.

¶ 36. An order of the circuit court adjudging a respondent guilty of contempt, and imposing a fine for his misconduct, but refusing to order the payment by him of the damages claimed to have been sustained by the party instituting the contempt proceedings, cannot be reviewed upon certiorari at the instance of such party, the court finding affirmatively that the evidence does not show that said party has sustained actual loss or injury by reason of the acts complained of. —Montgomery v. Muskegon Booming Co., 104 Mich. 411.

§ 9. ——Consent or pro forma orders and judgments.

See also post ¶ 131.
Dismissal of certiorari because judgment was on default, see post § 39.

¶ 37. It is the duty of the circuit courts to pass judgment upon cases presented to them for determination, and then and only then does it become the duty of this court to review the conclusions reached. Circuit courts are not authorized by the constitution and the law to sit and enter judgment solely that such judgments may be taken to the Supreme Court, but a decision so made and entering into judgment must be reviewed. —Township of West Bloomfield v. Detroit United Ry., 146 Mich. 198.

¶ 38. An order of the circuit court reversing the determination of the state fire marshal condemning a house and a barn, and requiring them to be demolished, is not reviewable on certiorari in this court, where the appellant requested the court to enter the order not on the merits of the case, but entirely on the unconstitutionality of the law, Pub. Acts 1913, Act No. 213, amending Pub. Acts 1911, Act No. 79.—Hart v. State Fire Marshal, 178 Mich. 609.

§ 10. Judgments and proceedings reviewable.

In circuit courts, see post § 65.
Necessity of finality and completeness, see post § 22.
Discretion governing allowance to review decisions on dilatory pleas and demurrers, see ante § 5.
Consent and pro forma decisions, see ante § 9.

Decisions on pleas to the jurisdiction, demurrers, motions or other dilatory pleas, see Jud. Act. Chap. L, § 14; Comp. L. 1915, § 13749.

¶ 39. The discretionary power of the circuit courts to set aside verdicts, grant new trials, and vacate judgments, is not reviewable on certiorari.—Van Renselaer v. Whiting, 12 Mich. 449; Campau v. Coates, 17 Mich. 235.

¶ 40. Certiorari may be used to correct errors in law resulting in a judgment not authorized by the pleading and evidence, and an action brought in assumpsit where it should have been brought in tort and wherein a judgment was erroneously rendered comes within such a rule.—Plefka v. Detroit United Ry., 147 Mich. 641.

¶ 41. Certiorari will not be granted to vacate an order which might be corrected by amendment, but the most the court will do in any event is to remand the record for correction.—Board Sup'rs Gratiot Co. v. Munson, 157 Mich. 505.

¶ 41a. Under 1897 C. C. Rule 46 regulating the practice in mandamus requiring an answer to the petition and providing that matters not answered are admitted and Sup. Ct. Rule 12 which prescribes the practice on appeal and covers only cases in which the writ is allowed or denied, an order overruling a demurrer to the petition is not reversible on certiorari.—Lauzon v. Board of Supervisors of Chippewa County, 129 Mich. 269.

¶ 42. Under the express provisions of Pub. Acts 1905, Act No. 310, the Supreme Court may review upon certiorari a decision overruling a demurrer.—Boughner v. Bay City, 156 Mich. 193.

¶ 43. Under Act No. 310, Pub. Acts 1905, §§ 12737, 12738 How. St., 2nd Ed., an order overruling a plea in abatement is reviewable on writ of certiorari instead of writ of error.—City of Sault Ste. Marie v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 184 Mich. 681.

¶ 44. Certiorari is the proper method of reviewing an order overruling a plea in abatement.—La Vasser v. Chesbrough Lumber Co., 190 Mich. 408.

¶ 45. Since the end of certiorari is to reverse and terminate the proceeding, if found to be erroneous, it does not lie to review a ruling during the taking of testimony under letters rogatory from another state as to the legality and pertinency of the interrogatories.—Van Dyke v. Doughty, 174 Mich 351.

§ 11. ——Proceedings after judgment.

¶ 46. Where a stay of execution before a justice has been filed in the county clerk's office, and the circuit court, upon application of the judgment creditor, grants an order allowing an execution against the surety, certiorari lies to review such order.—Jerome v. Williams, 13 Mich. 521.

¶ 47. Where a transcript of a justice's judgment is filed in the circuit court and execution is issued thereon, certiorari lies to review the circuit court proceeding, it being a special one not according to the course of the common law.—Wedel v. Green, 70 Mich. 642.

§ 12. ——Dissolution or other proceedings on attachments.

Review of proceedings to dissolve attachment, see also Attachment, §§ 126, 127.
Power of circuit court to issue writ to commissioner, see post § 65.

¶ 48. Certiorari does not lie to review proceedings of a circuit court commissioner in dissolving an attachment, when attachment is not the proper remedy.—Mendelsohn v. Smith, 27 Mich. 2.

¶ 49. Certiorari is the proper remedy to correct the action of the circuit court in allowing a new affidavit in attachment to be filed in the place of the original one, which was void.—People ex rel. Bradley v. Branch Circuit Judges, 1 D. 319.

§ 13. ——Proceedings in circuit on review from justice.

Certiorari or mandamus as remedy, see ante § 7.
Necessity of final judgment above, see post § 22.
Mandamus as remedy to compel action in circuit, see Mandamus, II.
Review of justices' proceedings in circuit, see Justices of the Peace, V, VI.

¶ 50. Certiorari is a proper writ by which to review the judgment of the circuit court overruling a special appeal from justice's court for alleged jurisdictional defects.—Peterson v. Fowler, 76 Mich. 258.

§ 14. ——Probate, administration and guardianship proceedings.

See also ante ¶ 25.
Power of circuit court to issue writ, see post § 65.
Eminent domain proceedings, see Eminent Domain, VIII.

¶ 51. The action of the circuit court upon appeal from a probate order appointing a guardian is not reviewable in the Supreme Court except so far as it may be upon certiorari.—Goss v. Stone, 63 Mich. 319.

¶ 52. Certiorari is the proper remedy to review the circuit court's affirmance of the probate court's order construing a will.—In re Estate of Reid (Glover v. Reid), 80 Mich. 228.

¶ 53. Certiorari is the proper remedy to review the reversal by the circuit court of an order of the probate court granting the administrator of an incompetent person's estate leave to sue upon a guardian's bond, which is not a proceeding according to the common law, and the reversal of the order of the circuit court carries with it the reinstatement of the order of the probate court.—Welch v. Van Auken, 76 Mich. 464.

¶ 54. Certiorari will not lie to review a judgment of the circuit court allowing a contingent claim against the estate of a deceased person upon an appeal taken from the probate court, writ of error being the proper remedy.—John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Hill's Estate, 108 Mich. 129.

§ 15. ——Forcible entry and summary dispossession proceedings.

Proper remedy to review circuit decision dismissing certiorari to commissioner, see ante ¶ 24.

Review of forcible entry and detainer cases and summary proceedings for recovery of possession of land, where judgment of commissioner or justice is attacked, see Forcible Entry and Detainer.

§ 16. ——Contempt and disbarment proceedings.

Interest in relator to sustain certiorari, see ante § 8.

Proceedings not yet final, see post § 22.

Matters reviewable on record, see post § 50.

¶ 55. Proceedings for contempt are not the usual proceedings contemplated and understood when speaking of actions commenced by writ or declaration as used in Pub. Acts 1905, No. 310, permitting certiorari to review rulings on dilatory or jurisdictional pleas.—In re Smith, 144 Mich. 39.

¶ 56. Certiorari will not lie either under the statute or under the common law to review the action of a court in denying a motion to quash proceedings for a constructive contempt; a party conceiving himself aggrieved has ample opportunity to review such proceedings after the circuit court has heard the case.—In re Smith, 144 Mich. 39.

¶ 57. An order refusing a petition for the punishment of a sheriff for contempt in omitting the performance of his duty is not reviewable by the Supreme Court on certiorari. —Schwab v. Coots, 44 Mich. 463.

¶ 58. Disbarment proceedings do not constitute an action at law so as to entitle the defendant to a writ of certiorari during their pendency, under Act No. 310, Pub. Acts 1905, to review a decision of the lower court overruling defendant's demurrer.—In re Radford, 159 Mich. 91.

§ 17. ——Nonjudicial proceedings.

Official proceedings partaking of judgment or discretion, see also post §§ 18-21.

¶ 59. The writ of certiorari will not lie to review acts which are not done in the exercise of judicial power or authority, but are merely ministerial, executive or legislative in their character.—Greenville Gas, Electric Light, Power & Fuel Co. v. City of Greenville, 165 Mich. 135.

¶ 59a. Under Pub. Acts 1889, No. 207, as amended by Pub. Acts 1913, No. 327, allowing the writ to review the record of a local option election "for error apparent on the face of the returns," and providing that "for fraudulent or illegal voting or tampering with the ballot boxes before a recount * * * all legal remedies now existing shall remain in full force," the writ will lie to review a recount had according to the statute by the supervisors, though they recounted ballots from boxes that had been tampered with, they having committed an error of law in declaring the result.—Alward v. Oakland County Sup'rs, 187 Mich. 573.

¶ 60. Where proceedings under the statutes of 1838 were had before a justice, to determine whether a mill pond was unhealthy, etc., and the proceeding was only preliminary in its character, to lay the foundation of an action, and the justice did not act judicially in it, it was held that it could not be reviewed on common-law certiorari.—Root v. Barnes, 1 Mich. 37.

§ 18. ——Administrative proceedings.

Consent orders, see also ante § 9.

Effect of delay, see post § 23.

Matters open for review, see post § 49.

Proceedings to lay local assessments, see Local Improvements, VII, B.

To review tax proceedings, see Taxes, VI, B.

¶ 61. Certiorari should not be allowed to disturb the action of public bodies intrusted with managing local concerns, unless on grounds indicating that actual wrong has been done.—Gager v. Chippewa Supervisors, 47 Mich. 167.

¶ 62. Where a city has passed an ordinance requiring an electric light and power company to remove its wires from a public street, the legality of such action cannot be tested in the Supreme Court by a writ of certiorari.—Greenville Gas, Electric Light, Power & Fuel Co. v. City of Greenville, 165 Mich. 135.

¶ 63. Certiorari will not lie to examine the action of the auditor-general, in settling with a county, in charging back to its certain taxes; such action being the exercise of an official discretion belonging to an executive department of the state government, and therefore not subject to judicial review.—Midland County Sup'rs v. Auditor-General, 27 Mich. 165.

§ 19. ——Organization or change of townships and school districts.

Quo warranto as remedy, see ante § 7.
Interest in relator essential to writ, see ante § 8.
Effect of delay, see post § 23.
Proper party to be relator, see post § 25.
Papers to be served with writ, see post § 33.
Matters presented by record, see post § 50.

¶ 64. Certiorari lies on the relation of a supervisor, whose official rights are involved, to inquire into the existence of a township, where the action of the board of supervisors in organizing it is subject to review.—People ex rel. Scrafford v. Gladwin Supervisors, 41 Mich. 647.

¶ 65. The action of a board of supervisors upon evidence tending to show the due publication of a notice of proceedings to organize a township will not be reviewed by the court on certiorari, especially if there is no contradictory showing.—Matthews v. Otsego County Sup'rs, 48 Mich. 587.

¶ 66. Certiorari addressed to the assessor of a school district is wholly unsuited as a remedy to test the legal organization and existence of the school district.—Jaquith v. Hale, 31 Mich. 430.

¶ 67. Certiorari is a proper remedy to test the validity of the organization of a school district where relator acts with promptness and before organization has been completed and expenses incurred.—Huyser v. Boards of School Inspectors of Townships of Zeeland, Olive and Blendon, 131 Mich. 568.

§ 20. ——Removal of officers.

Writ from circuit court, see post § 65.
Sufficiency of return, see post ¶ 120.
Presumptions on the return, see post ¶ 214.

¶ 68. Certiorari may issue to a board of supervisors to bring up its proceedings for the removal of the county treasurer.—McGregor v. Gladwin County Sup'rs, 37 Mich. 388.

¶ 69. A writ of certiorari by the Supreme Court will not lie to review the discretion of the Governor in removing, under the authority of Comp. Laws 1897, § 1159, How. 2nd Ed., § 1310, the mayor of a city.—Germaine v. Ferris, 176 Mich. 585.

§ 21. ——Audits and allowances of claims.

Party relator on claim allowed against county, see post § 25.
Remedy by mandamus to compel payment, see Mandamus, III.

¶ 70. The discretion of the circuit court in allowing an item in a coroner's account of and claim for fees and expenses of an inquest cannot be disturbed on certiorari; and unless there has been some illegal claim allowed beyond the power conferred the writ will not be sustained.—Auditor-General v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 101 Mich. 212.

§ 22. Finality or completion of proceeding.

For cases holding judgments final or not final for purposes of error, see Appeal, III, B.
Orders in condemnation proceedings, see Eminent Domain, VIII.

¶ 71. Certiorari will not lie to review a proceeding in the circuit court before an adjudication in the case by that court.—Palms v. Campau, 11 Mich. 109; People ex rel. Wiley v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 29 Mich. 487.

¶ 72. Certiorari will not lie, in advance of final judgment, to review the action of the circuit court in overruling the errors assigned on a special appeal from a justice's judgment.—Culver v. Travis, 108 Mich. 640.

¶ 73. Quaere: whether an order setting aside a judgment in attachment, not being final, is reviewable on certiorari.—Meads v. Belt Copper Mines, 125 Mich. 456.

¶ 74. Certiorari will not lie to a pending contempt proceeding not yet determined.—Toepel v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 138 Mich. 302.

§ 23. Stage and time for writ; delay.

In highway proceedings, see Highways, II, B.
Statutory provisions as to time, see Jud. Act, chap. L, § 13; Comp. L. 1915, § 13748.

¶ 75. Certiorari to review proceedings to carry out public improvements should not be granted after any considerable delay in suing out the writ, unless the court is satisfied that the delay is not due to the petitioner's neglect.—Bresler v. Ellis, 46 Mich. 335.

¶ 76. Certiorari to bring up proceedings for the formation of a school district will not be sustained if after its issue, and without good reason, it has been allowed to sleep until the organization has been completed, a tax voted and contract made for building a school-house, and interests established which cannot be overturned without public inconvenience and injury, and individual damage.—Parman v. Boards of School Inspectors, 49 Mich. 63.

¶ 77. Proceedings of a board of supervisors in organizing a new township from part of an existing township are not reviewable upon certiorari after a lapse of fourteen months, during which time it may be inferred that officers have been elected and property assessed for taxation; quo warranto against the township or its officers is the proper remedy.—Atlee v. Wexford County Sup'rs, 94 Mich. 562.

¶ 78. Where the objections to action altering school district boundaries are jurisdictional, delay for nearly a month in taking out certiorari, and neglect to serve the writ until a week after the organization of the new district was complete, will not be ground for sustaining the proceedings.—Gentle v. Board of School Inspectors of Township of Colfax, 73 Mich. 40.

¶ 79. Where fifteen months have elapsed before suing out certiorari to review the discontinuance of a highway, the case should be one of flagrant injustice, and the excuse for delay should be very satisfactory, to warrant interference with so old a proceeding.—Kimball v. Homan, 74 Mich. 699.

¶ 80. Certiorari to review proceedings in a circuit court vacating a plat, which operated to close a street, is barred by a delay of over eight months in filing the petition, where it appeared that in the meantime an injunction proceeding against a company to restrain the closing of the street had been begun and a bond to pay damages had been given but that the proceedings had been apparently abandoned and the company had immediately, upon giving the bond, taken possession of the street and had incurred large expense in building a plant.—Beutel v. Bay Circuit Judge, 124 Mich. 521.

¶ 81. Certiorari will not lie at the instance of a property owner to review the action of the common council of a city in discontinuing and vacating a part of one street and laying out and establishing another upon the property of a railroad company, where the company made expenditures in furtherance of the proposed change, and the petitioner, though fully cognizant of the proceedings and of the expenditures, did not apply to the court to restrain the same.—Baudistel v. City of Jackson, 110 Mich. 357.

§ 24. Courts and tribunals subject to writ.

Issuance from Supreme Court to justice as ground for dismissal, see post § 39.
From circuit court, see post § 65.
Certiorari from circuit to justice, see Justices of the Peace, VI.
Certiorari to probate courts from circuit, see Probate Courts, III.

¶ 81a. There is no practice allowing writs of certiorari from the Supreme Court to justices of the peace; because it would be difficult for this court to reach and decide the numerous cases that would come, the calendar already being overcrowded.—White v. Boyce, 88 Mich. 349.

¶ 82. Certiorari will not issue from the Supreme Court to a justice's court as a general rule, but it will lie where the remedy by certiorari to the circuit court has been lost by lapse of time, and it is necessary to prevent a failure of justice.—People v. Turja, 157 Mich. 530.

¶ 83. A common-law certiorari to a justice of the peace will lie to bring to the Supreme Court for review a case begun by attachment, where no personal service is had and no appearance entered, and where the defendants had no notice of the proceedings until after the statutory remedy was gone.—Withington v. Southworth, 26 Mich. 381.

¶ 84. Judgments in extraordinary and special proceedings before justices of the peace are removable by certiorari only to the Supreme Court.—Warner v. Porter, 2 D. 358.

¶ 85. Bastardy proceedings in the county court being special proceedings could not be reviewed in the circuit court by certiorari, and therefore certiorari lay directly from the Supreme Court.—Perkins v. Lapeer County Superintendents of Poor, 1 Mich. 504.

§ 25. Parties relator.

Declination of points made by respondent, see post § 48, ¶ 157.
Remand to allow amendment seeking relief in altered personal right or capacity, see post § 62, ¶ 233.

¶ 86. Certiorari to review an allowance against a county may be sued out by the clerk of the board of supervisors, and it is assumed that in doing so he has the authority of the board if it does not repudiate his action. And it is unimportant that he sues it out as county clerk.—County of Alcona v. White, 54 Mich. 503.

¶ 87. A writ of certiorari is not available to an individual who has no direct or particular interest in the proceeding sought to be reviewed unless he shows that he will suffer special injury beyond that which will affect him in common with the public or others similarly situated.—Board of Education of Hastings v. Gilleland, 191 Mich. 276.

¶ 88. In certiorari to review the granting of mandamus compelling the board of auditors of claims against the disorganized county of Manitou to audit certain claims, the officers of the townships whose taxpayers were liable to be taxed to pay the award in controversy, were proper petitioners; as the tax was also to be collected by such officers. —Fitch v. Board of Auditors of claims against Manitou County, 133 Mich. 178.

¶ 89. A writ issued to review the proceedings of the board of supervisors in reconstructing a burned court house out of the insurance money is properly brought in the name of the attorney general.—Attorney General ex rel. Gibson v. Montcalm County Sup'rs, 141 Mich. 590.

¶ 90. The school board of a district whose organization was set aside by the action of the township board cannot bring certiorari to review the action of the township board.—Silver v. Hamilton Township Board, 146 Mich. 393.

¶ 91. It is assumed but not decided that Pub. Acts 1905, No. 310, providing for certiorari on denying dilatory pleas, authorizes a stranger to the record, without an order of court permitting him to intervene, to interrupt the proceedings in an action, by removing it to the Supreme Court on denial of an interlocutory application to dismiss it for want of jurisdiction of the court.—Morning Tel Pub. Co. v. S. B. Hutchinson Co., 146 Mich. 38.

§ 26. Proper respondents.

Proper relators, see ante § 25.
Proper persons to make return to the writ, see post § 35.

¶ 92. The persons or body whose action is to be reviewed, and in whose hands the record of such action remains, are the proper body or persons to make return to a writ of certiorari to review such proceedings, and are therefore proper parties defendant to the writ.—Crawford v. Scio & Webster Township Boards, 22 Mich. 405.

¶ 93. A writ of certiorari to review proceedings before a justice of the peace and a jury under Comp. L. 1857, § 1087 (amended; see Comp. L. 1871, § 1290), relative to encroachments on highways, must be directed to the justice, and to the commissioners of highways also, if necessary to bring up their final action or the documentary evidence annexed to it. The township clerk is not a member of the board of commissioners, and a record of their proceedings made up by him, the service upon him of a writ of certiorari directed to them, and a return by him thereto, are each without authority of law.—Roberts v. Cottrellville Highway Com'rs, 24 Mich. 182.

¶ 94. Where, in certiorari to review the proceedings of a highway commissioner discontinuing a highway, it appears that his action was predicated upon the alleged discontinuance of the highway by the board of supervisors of the county, and the proceedings of said board are returned by the county clerk, who is joined as a respondent, an objection that the board of supervisors should also have been joined is untenable. —Curry v. Place, 99 Mich. 524.

Allowance on application from decision on dilatory plea or demurrer, see Jud. Act, chap. L, § 15; Comp. L. 1915, § 13750.

¶ 95. On certiorari to review the action of a board of supervisors in a matter of such importance as the honest use of public money, the party applying for a review should at least swear to merits.—Gager v. Chippewa Sup'rs, 47 Mich. 167.

¶ 96. Where a certiorari is applied for to review a highway opening, the oath of the party himself, showing why he is justified in resorting to this remedy, should, if practicable, be presented.—Nightingale v. Simmons, 66 Mich. 528.

§ 28. ——Assignments and specification of errors.

Assignments as mode of presenting error on hearing, see post §§ 45, 46.
Limitation of review to errors assigned, see post § 48.
Effect of return traversing averments, see post § 56.

¶ 97. An affidavit for certiorari asking a review of rulings should present them as they actually occurred, as in a bill of exceptions; it should not combine in one recital a series of detached rulings on points that were not connectedly presented.—Knapp v. Gamsby, 47 Mich. 375.

§ 29. ——Documents and exhibits relied on.

Described in writ but not in affidavit, see post ¶ 111.

¶ 98. In applications for certiorari all record evidence relied upon should be brought before the court as exhibits in the shape of copies certified or authenticated, and not by bare recitals of its existence.—Hewitt v. Oakland County Probate Judge, 67 Mich. 1.

§ 30. Allowance and issuance of writ.

Grounds for allowance, see ante §§ 4-9.
Effect of pendency of other application, see post ¶ 130.
Exclusiveness of Supreme Court's power to allow writ to review decisions on dilatory pleas, see ante ¶ 6.

By whom allowed, see Jud. Act, chap. L, § 12; Comp. L. 1915, § 13747.

¶ 99. A circuit court commissioner may allow the writ even where the proceedings took place outside of his county.—Loder v. Littlefield, 39 Mich. 374.

¶ 100. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10498, expressly giving power to allow such writ, the circuit court commissioner may allow a writ of certiorari to review the proceedings of a board of supervisors in ordering the reconstruction of a burned court house out of the insurance moneys realized.—Attorney General ex rel. Gibson v. Montcalm County Sup'rs, 141 Mich. 590.

§ 31. Joinder and severance of writs.

See also post § 159.

¶ 101. Different proceedings cannot be brought up by the same writ of certiorari.—Dickinson v. Van Wormer, 39 Mich. 141.

¶ 102. A separate writ is necessary to bring up for review an auxiliary proceeding by garnishment, but such proceedings will fall to the ground when the judgment in the principal case is set aside.—Withington v. Southworth, 26 Mich. 381.

¶ 103. A writ of certiorari may lie to two circuit court commissioners to bring up distinct proceedings pending before them separately for the removal of the same cause to another county for trial.—Comfort v. Stockbridge, 37 Mich. 472.

§ 32. Form, substance and direction of writ.

¶ 104. Dismissal of a writ of certiorari for being improperly addressed was denied where the accompanying affidavit made the error harmless, and a return had in fact been made.—Wilson v. Gifford, 41 Mich. 417.

§ 33. Service and return of service.

Return to the writ by respondents, see post §§ 34-38.
Notice of issuance, service and affidavit of service, see Sup. Ct. Rule 5.
Service of copy of petition or application and papers and brief attached, see Sup. Ct. Rule 60.

¶ 105. Where certiorari issues to bring up proceedings for the formation of a school district, the papers on which it was allowed must be served with it.—Parman v. Board of School Inspectors, 49 Mich. 63.

¶ 106. The courts will not upon certiorari set aside the erroneous conclusion of a board of supervisors upon a recount of votes, where the writ has not been served upon said board, until the board has had time to make return to the writ.—Alward v. Board of Sup'rs of Oakland County, 187 Mich. 573.

¶ 107. On a certiorari to a township board in a highway case, the township clerk, under Comp. L. 1857, § 5643 (see How. St., § 9010), was entitled to fees, and could not be compelled to make return until the fees are paid.—People ex rel. Sage v. Springwells Township Board, 13 Mich. 246.

§ 35. ——By whom made.

By former judge of the court, see also post ¶ 113.

¶ 108. Where the upper court issues a writ of certiorari to the circuit court to review its action, and there is any question as to what was submitted to the circuit court for its decision, the judge, and not the clerk of the circuit court, is the only proper person to make the return.—Stevens v. Ottawa Probate Judge, 154 Mich. 509.

¶ 109. A return of one inspector and the clerk of a school board to a certiorari to review proceedings to establish a new district will be taken as the return of the board as against a return by a dissenting inspector made separately.—Smelser v. Board of School Inspectors of Township of Big Prairie, 125 Mich. 666.

§ 36. ——Form and contents.

Jurisdictional showing, see also post § 57.
Silence of return as admission of facts, see post § 58.
Original as overcoming printed record variant therefrom, see post § 61.
Deficiencies and how supplied, see post § 38.
Necessary contents of printed record, see Sup. Ct. Rule 56.

¶ 110. On certiorari to a bastardy conviction where the party on account of poverty applies for leave to substitute a typewritten instead of a printed record, the practice of copying the entire proceedings is not justified, since it imposes unnecessary labor on the court.—People v. Jamieson, 124 Mich. 164.

¶ 111. When a writ of certiorari identifies the documents to be returned, the respondent must return them even though no affidavit is appended to the writ.—Whistler v. Lenawee County Drain Com'r, 39 Mich. 303.

¶ 112. A judge's personal answer to a writ of certiorari directed to the court is a voluntary proceeding and not properly part of the return.—Woodin v. Phoenix, 41 Mich. 655.

¶ 113. The answer of an ex-circuit judge to a certiorari directed to the circuit court over which he presided is a voluntary proceeding and not a component part of the return.—People v. Brennan, 79 Mich. 362.

¶ 114. The properly certified return by the commissioners of the documentary evidence, consisting of such documents relating to the controversy as are on file in the township clerk's office, including the finding of the jury, is sufficient to bring them upon the record of a proceeding to remove highway encroachments.—Roberts v. Cottrellville Highway Com'rs, 25 Mich. 23.

¶ 115. The return to a common law certiorari should set out the evidence upon which the conviction or other judicial act complained of was founded.—Jackson v. People, 9 Mich. 111.

§ 37. ——Signature and authentication.

Mode of signing and authenticating bills of exceptions, see Appeal, VI, D.

¶ 116. In proceedings under Comp. L. 1857, chap. 23, § 2, as amended Laws 1861, p. 153, for an encroachment upon a highway, neither the highway commissioners nor the township clerk have official authority to take down or file the oral evidence given on the trial, nor to return it upon a writ of certiorari to bring up the proceedings. If returned by the clerk, not authenticated by the justice, it will not be considered. Such return can be made officially only by the justice who presided over the proceedings.—Roberts v. Cottrellville Highway Com'rs, 25 Mich. 23.

¶ 117. A township clerk may certify papers legally in his custody, and when such papers become properly a part of a return to a writ of certiorari, directed to the commissioners of highways, the commissioners may annex such certified copies and return them, certifying under their signatures, substantially: "Our return to the within writ appears by the schedules hereto annexed, certified by our clerk."—Roberts v. Cottrellville Highway Com'rs, 24 Mich. 182.

§ 38. ——Deficiencies and amendments of return.

¶ 118. Where an affidavit for certiorari to review proceedings before a circuit court commissioner assigns as error the entire absence of evidence on a specified point, it is the commissioner's duty to return fully; if he does not, the defendants in certiorari should apply for a further return.—Hitchcock v. Sutton, 28 Mich. 86.

¶ 119. The return to a writ of certiorari must ordinarily show everything on which the plaintiff relies for relief, and cannot be supplemented by his affidavit for the writ; if it is insufficient he must have it amended.—Whitbeck v. Village of Hudson, 50 Mich. 86.

¶ 120. Where, on certiorari by the superintendents of the poor of a county to review the action of the board of supervisors in removing them from office, the return of the board shows that, by mutual consent, the making of a record of the testimony in the case was dispensed with, plaintiffs are not in position to complain that the evidence is not returned.—Burt v. Iron County Sup'rs, 108 Mich. 528.

¶ 121. A further return may be required where the one made does not answer the allegations of an affidavit in support of an application for a writ of certiorari.—McGurrin v. Grand Rapids Township Board, 186 Mich. 475.

¶ 122. Where a writ of error brings before the Supreme Court the record of the circuit court, in a case brought before that court by certiorari to a justice, the Supreme Court has no power to require a further return of the justice to the certiorari.—Wight v. Warner, 1 D. 384.

§ 39. Objections to writ or return; quashal or dismissal.

Dismissal because unwarrantably issued by commissioner, see ante ¶ 6.
Failure of writ because of failure of cause on which it depends, see also ante ¶ 102.
Objection to parties, see also ante ¶ 94.
Improper direction, see also ante ¶ 104.
Dismissal because questions have become moot, see post § 40.
Questions going to merits, see post § 41.
Motion, form thereof and showing, see post § 42.
Declination of questions going to merits or become moot, see post §§ 40, 41.
Right of attorney to resist dismissal of writ to protect lien, see Attorneys, ¶ 196.
Dismissal for delay in filing return, see Sup. Ct. Rule 8.

¶ 123. Where a circuit judge in his return to a writ of certiorari from the upper court, includes immaterial matters, a motion does not lie to strike such matters from the files, but they will be excluded at the hearing.—Stevens v. Ottawa Probate Judge, 154 Mich. 509.

¶ 124. The objection that a writ of certiorari is issued by a circuit court commissioner who has no such authority, cannot be brought to the court's attention by the return but should be raised by motion to dismiss.—Tweddle v. Grand Rapids Superior Court Judge, 134 Mich. 237.

¶ 125. The allowance by a proper officer is not conclusive upon the court, which may dismiss the writ if improvidently issued.—In re Lantis, 9 Mich. 324; Farrell v. Taylor, 12 Mich. 113.

¶ 126. The allowance of the writ of certiorari by a proper officer is not final and conclusive upon the court, which may at any time consider and determine the propriety of the allowance, and dismiss the proceeding if the writ was improvidently allowed.—Greenville Gas, Electric Light, Power & Fuel Co. v. City of Greenville, 165 Mich. 135.

¶ 127. Certiorari was improvidently allowed to review the finding of a circuit court commissioner upon an objection to a small excess in the allowance of costs.—Antiau v. Nadeau, 53 Mich. 460.

¶ 128. Where a writ of certiorari has been properly allowed and issued it should not be dismissed for any delay in suing it out within the statutory period allowed, unless meanwhile rights have arisen in reliance on the proceeding attacked.—Willson v. Gifford, 42 Mich. 454.

¶ 129. Certiorari to review proceedings to remove an encroachment upon a highway will not be dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff in the writ does not formally appear by the record as an original party, when it does show that he has rights which were affected by the proceedings, and that he was recognized as a substantial party.—Campau v. Button, 33 Mich. 525.

¶ 130. Whether a pending and undetermined application to the circuit judge of the county where the proceedings were taken, for a writ of certiorari to review proceedings before a circuit court commissioner on a writ of habeas corpus, would render a like application to a justice of the Supreme Court nugatory, quaere; but where it appeared that the commissioner's decision had not in fact been rendered when the first application was made, the Supreme Court denied a motion to dismiss its writ.—Rowe v. Rowe, 28 Mich. 353.

¶ 131. The allowance of certiorari from the Supreme Court to a justice of the peace is exceptional, and only favored when necessary to prevent a failure of justice. Writ dismissed where, after personal service and appearance on return day in justice's court, defendant did not appear at trial.—White v. Boyce, 88 Mich. 349.

¶ 132. The Supreme Court in its discretion to entertain or refuse certiorari may dismiss on motion a writ brought to review an order opening a default granted on petition of one claiming under the judgment defendant, where it appears that a just defense may exist to the judgment and no injustice to the relator in certiorari can result from opening it.—Meads v. Belt Copper Mines, 125 Mich. 456.

¶ 133. Certiorari issued to review proceedings of a township board setting aside the action of the board of school inspectors in organizing a school district will be dismissed where it appears that two of the five districts and the new district proposed to be formed would be unable to maintain their schools without imposing greater burdens than the residents could bear.—Silver v. Hamilton Township Board, 146 Mich. 393.

¶ 134. On June 7th a writ of certiorari was issued, returnable June 29th and the return was filed in the upper court June 22nd. On June 26th the appellant for the first time gave notice to appellee of the writ. Appellee had previously contended that certiorari, and not a writ of error, was the proper way to appeal. Held that although, under Supreme Court Rule 5, the appellee was entitled to notice of the issuance, the date, and the return day of the writ, the court would still not dismiss the writ when the case was before it with printed records and briefs and justice did not require such action.—Ullman v. Sandell, 158 Mich. 396.

¶ 134a. The writ should be quashed where it was issued to review the action of the board of supervisors in recounting the votes on a local option election and to set aside the preamble and resolution declaring that the general liquor law had been suspended, and where the original and subsequent canvass of votes supported such preamble and resolution.—Alward v. Oakland County Sup'rs, 187 Mich. 573.

§ 40. ——Moot questions.

Right to review as affected by fact that order was on consent, see ante § 9.

¶ 135. On certiorari to review the action of a circuit judge in denying a writ of mandamus to compel the president and board of trustees of a village to reconvene and approve relator's application and bond to engage in the retail liquor business for the remainder of the license year, where it appears that no relief can be granted because the period covered by the application has passed moot questions only are presented and will not be determined.—Carlson v. Wyman, 189 Mich. 402.

¶ 136. Proceedings for certiorari to review the action of a superior court judge in denying the petition of the owner and operator of a motor bus for a writ of mandamus to compel the common council of a city to accept a surety bond proffered by him to enable him to operate a motor bus line within the city will be dismissed where it appears that relator's license has expired and that the surety company has failed to renew its license to do business in the state, as the questions remaining are moot questions and any action by the court would be futile.—Schouwink v. Ferguson, 191 Mich. 284.

¶ 137. Where the period covered by an application for a liquor license has passed, the Supreme Court, in a certiorari proceeding to review the action of the circuit judge in denying relator's prayer for a writ of mandamus to compel the president and board of trustees of a village to reconvene and approve the application and bond, in view of the fact that no relief could be granted, will dismiss the writ without discussing abstract questions of law presented by the litigation.—Carlson v. Wyman, 189 Mich. 402.

§ 41. ——Objections to merits.

Objection that writ improperly issued, see also post ¶ 166.

Dismissal because of futility, see also ante § 39, ¶¶ 132, 133.

Dismissal because record supports action and shows no error, see also ante ¶ 134a.

¶ 138. Where a certiorari has been granted by a competent officer upon a sufficient application, the Supreme Court will not review his discretion in granting it on motion to dismiss.—Rowe v. Rowe, 28 Mich. 353.

¶ 139. The question whether a case is proper for a writ of certiorari relates to the merits, and will not be entertained on a motion to dismiss the writ in advance of the hearings.—Rowe v. Rowe, 28 Mich. 353.

¶ 140. Questions touching the merits on certiorari must be brought up on the hearing of the cause, and will not be considered on motion to quash.—Maybee v. Miner, 44 Mich. 207.

§ 42. ——Motions and showing.

Necessity of motion, see also ante ¶ 124.

General practice on motions, see Motions and Orders.

Motion practice in Supreme Court, see Sup. Ct. Rules 27-33.
Allowance of motion or denial on conditions, see Sup. Ct. Rule 9.

¶ 141. A motion to dismiss which does not state its grounds will not be entertained.—Jaquith v. Hale, 30 Mich. 163.

¶ 142. In the case of a motion to dismiss a certiorari brought to review the proceedings of township boards for the removal of the plaintiff in error from the office of director of a school district within said townships, said motion being based upon such acquiescence of the plaintiff in error in subsequent proceedings of the district to elect a successor to him as would estop him from contesting the validity of the proceedings for his removal; it was held that the motion could be granted only when such acquiescence was undisputed.—Crawford v. Scio & Webster Township Boards, 22 Mich. 405.

§ 43. ——Retention of case for further action.

¶ 143. Where a writ of certiorari to review the ruling of the circuit court is dismissed by the Supreme Court for want of authority in the circuit court commissioner who issued it, and where it is evident that such dismissal will result in an application to the Supreme Court for a new writ, this court will regard the case before it as such an application, and will dispose of the meritorious questions involved.—People v. Chamblin, 149 Mich. 653.

§ 44. Hearing on review.

¶ 144. In certiorari cases notice of hearing cannot be given until after the return day of the writ.—Miles v. Goffinet, 16 Mich. 280.

¶ 145. An issue of fact cannot be framed in a certiorari proceeding.—McGurrin v. Grand Rapids Township Board, 186 Mich. 475.

§ 45. ——Mode of presenting error.

Assignment and specification in application for writ, see ante § 28.
Setting out evidence in the return, see ante § 36.
Sufficiency of presentation on hearing, see post § 46.
Limitation of review to errors assigned, see post § 48.
Necessity that record show error, see also post § 50.
Limitation of review to matters shown by record, see post § 50.
Necessity and sufficiency of saving objections below, see Saving Questions for Review.

¶ 146. Assignments of error in the Supreme Court are not necessary on common law certiorari.—Stokes v. Jacobs, 10 Mich. 290.

§ 46. ——Sufficiency of assignments or objections.

¶ 147. An allegation as error that a motion to quash a complaint was overruled is enough to raise the sufficiency of the charges as laid.—Gager v. Chippewa Supervisors, 47 Mich. 167.

¶ 148. When an affidavit for certiorari to review the action of a circuit court commissioner in a proceeding to dissolve an attachment is based on an erroneous finding and not a total want of testimony, and the record shows that no claim was made before the commissioner that there was no testimony in favor of respondent to be considered, it does not present any question of law.—Brown v. Blanchard, 39 Mich. 790.

§ 47. ——Briefs and arguments.

Rules for briefs and argument on error or appeal, see Appeal, XI, D, E.
Printing, serving and filing briefs, see Sup. Ct. Rules 40-42.

¶ 149. Decisions which have been published in the Michigan reports must be cited from such reports whenever possible and not from other publications.—People v. Jamieson, 124 Mich. 164.

§ 48. Scope of review in general.

Form of assignments in affidavit, see ante § 28.
Matters considered on motion to dismiss, quash or strike, see ante §§ 39-43.
Practice where unnecessary matter is contained in return, see ante §§ 39-43.
Sufficiency of objections to raise law question, see ante § 46.

Restriction to record showing and matters considered below, see post §§ 50, 51.
Declination of unnecessary or immaterial questions, see post § 52.
Rulings on evidence or on matters of discretion, see post §§ 53, 54.
Review of findings, see post § 55.
Matters reviewable in circuit on certiorari, see post § 66.
On review of drain proceedings, see Drains, II.

¶ 150. Upon certiorari to review an order of the trial court, only objections presented by the record to the court below, and objections assigned when the writ of certiorari was obtained, will be considered.—Lewis v. Board of Education of City of Detroit, 139 Mich. 306.

¶ 151. On certiorari no errors can be considered that are not assigned in the affidavit for the writ.—Grand Rapids, L. & D. R. Co. v. Welden, 69 Mich. 572.

¶ 152. Matter not alleged as error in the affidavit upon which the writ issued will not be noticed.—Grand Rapids, L. & D. R. Co. v. Welden, 69 Mich. 572; Gentle v. Board of School Inspectors of Township of Colfax, 73 Mich. 40.

¶ 153. In certiorari, the Supreme Court considers questions of law only, and such questions as are to be presented must be raised in the affidavit for the writ.—Booker v. Grand Rapids Medical College, 156 Mich. 95.

¶ 154. Where proceedings to lay out a drain are complained of, and a writ of certiorari applied for, the petition for which states that due notice was given, and where, in the affidavit for the writ, the complaining party relies on a general allegation of informalities, it cannot be urged as error that it did not appear from the return to the writ, except inferentially, that proper notices had been posted. No informalities which could be cured by any return or explanation can be relied upon without a special assignment.—Davison v. Otis, 24 Mich. 23.

¶ 155. In certiorari from an order granting mandamus to compel highway commissioners to build a bridge, the jurisdictional objection that the proceeding was not brought by the proper relator was not entertained, where neither made in the court below, nor stated in the petition for certiorari.—Bigelow v. Brooks, 119 Mich. 208.

¶ 156. On certiorari to review the granting of a writ of mandamus relator cannot object to the consideration of a finding because directly contrary to an averment in his answer upon which no issue was taken, where such objection was not raised by any of the assignments of error in the affidavit for the writ.—City of Monroe v. Monroe County Sup'rs, 137 Mich. 638.

¶ 156a. On certiorari to review mandamus by the circuit court the Supreme Court may review the whole judgment where the circuit judge on one of the points decided in favor of the relator "not based upon any conclusion or judgment of my own, but solely for the purpose of having it taken to the appellate court."—Township of West Bloomfield v. Detroit United Ry., 146 Mich. 198.

¶ 157. On certiorari to review a mandamus requiring the recording of a land contract but on condition that a mortgage tax be paid, from which plaintiff took certiorari, the question of the proper basis for computing the tax will not be reviewed, it having been passed on by the circuit in granting the mandamus in favor of relator therein and respondent therein not having brought certiorari on his part to review the question.—Ross v. Stoll, 199 Mich. 561.

§ 49. ——On certiorari to boards and nonjudicial officers.

¶ 158. On certiorari to review the action of the board of supervisors it is only necessary to determine their jurisdiction and the legality of their action.—People ex rel. Scrafford v. Gladwin Supervisors, 41 Mich. 647.

§ 50. ——Matters outside the record or decision.

See also ante ¶¶ 150, 155, 157.
Practice on error as to matters outside the record, see Appeal, XII, B.

¶ 159. Certiorari to an inferior court only removes the cause itself for review, and not a collateral proceeding that does not form a part of the record in the case.—People ex rel. Wiley v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 29 Mich. 487.

¶ 160. Where an affidavit for certiorari complains of rulings of the court, but no return is made except of the record, and the plaintiff in certiorari goes to a hearing upon such return, the Supreme Court will consider nothing except what the record, thus made up, discloses.—Case v. Frey, 24 Mich. 251.

¶ 161. Certiorari to review the action of respondent school inspectors in detaching territory from one district and attaching to another will not present the later action of the inspectors in attaching the remnant of the divided district to a third district, when relator does not complain of such action; and it is doubtful if he could have the writ for that purpose not being a taxpayer in such remnant but being in the portion first transferred.—Doxey v. Martin School Inspectors, 67 Mich. 601.

¶ 162. The right to office of the member of a board of school inspectors, claiming to be lawfully elected and in possession of the office, cannot be tried upon certiorari to review the board's action in altering school district boundaries.—Donough v. Dewey, 82 Mich. 309.

¶ 163. Certiorari to review an order adjudging the petitioners guilty of contempt in refusing to pay the costs of a continuance is not a proper proceeding in which to raise questions relating to the taxation of said costs.—Barney v. Love, 101 Mich. 543.

¶ 164. A judgment of contempt of court rendered against defendant for ignoring an injunction cannot be set aside on certiorari brought for that purpose, where the bill filed and affidavit accompanying it make a prima facie case, upon the strength of which such injunction was granted, and defendant's motion that such injunction be dissolved is given full hearing but overruled, and defendant does not take an appeal from such decision overruling his motion, but ignores the injunction, and, being cited for contempt, is convicted and fined.—Saginaw Lumber & Salt Co. v. Griffore, 145 Mich. 287.

¶ 165. Where the probate court has made a finding as to mental competency of a person for whose estate the appointment of a guardian is sought, the upper court will refuse, on a writ of certiorari, to review such finding, the record of the testimony not being presented.—In re Phillips, 154 Mich. 139.

§ 51. ——Restriction to matters considered below.

Application of rule in circuit courts, see post § 66.

Necessity of objection in trial court to make question, and sufficiency of objection to save it for review, see Saving Questions for Review.

¶ 166. An order of the probate court requiring an administrator to account having been brought into the circuit court by appeal and there reversed, and the proceedings in the circuit court—where no issue of fact was joined—being then removed to the Supreme Court by certiorari, that court refused to consider an objection that this was not a proper case for certiorari, made for the first time in a brief submitted by the defendant in error after the hearing on the merits.—In re Robinson's Estate, 6 Mich. 137.

¶ 167. A justice's judgment will not be reversed on certiorari because of the admission of hearsay testimony (book entries) of the facts sought to be proved, where no objection was made to the reception of such testimony upon the trial.—Martin v. Smith, 108 Mich. 278.

¶ 168. Additional grounds against the constitutionality of a joint resolution, and stronger arguments than were presented below, may be considered on certiorari to review mandamus based on it.—Fitch v. Board of Auditors of claims against Manitou County, 133 Mich. 178.

¶ 169. The propriety of the remedy of mandamus is a proper question for consideration on a certiorari where mandamus had been denied on the merits, and the circuit court in deciding the matter had merely assumed it to be the proper remedy. The assumption is equivalent to deciding the question.—Dickinson v. Board of Canvassers of Cheboygan County, 148 Mich. 513.

§ 52. ——Immaterial or unnecessary questions.

Questions made by or in favor of respondent, see ante § 48.

Dismissal because of no meritorious question, see ante §§ 39, 40.

Striking from return or exclusion from consideration as better practice, see ante § 39.

Practice on error as to immaterial questions, see Appeal, XII, A.

¶ 170. Where the return to a writ of certiorari shows that it was never allowed, a judgment dismissing it will be affirmed without consideration whether the plaintiff therein would have been entitled to amend it, or whether he could bring error on the refusal to allow an amendment of it.—Young v. Kelsey, 46 Mich. 414.

¶ 171. The constitutionality of How. St., § 782, which renders women eligible as school inspectors, will not be considered on certiorari to review the unanimous action, altering district boundaries, of the board and three inspectors, only one of whom was a woman.—Donough v. Dewey, 82 Mich. 309.

¶ 172. The constitutionality of How. St., § 684a, which authorizes the election of two school inspectors, under Const., article 11, § 1, providing for the election of one inspector annually, will not be determined on certiorari to review the unanimous action of the board of school inspectors, two members of which are at least de facto officers.—Donough v. Dewey, 82 Mich. 309.

¶ 173. Where an issue was framed on mandamus and a case was presented upon its merits, an objection to the regularity of the proceedings cannot be raised on certiorari to review an order granting the mandamus.—Safford v. Detroit Board of Health, 110 Mich. 81.

¶ 174. On certiorari to review an order in mandamus compelling the assessors to strike from the roll a personal assessment against an insurance company where the record fails to show any taxable personal property the reviewing court may properly decline to review the decision of the trial judge.—Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Hartz, 129 Mich. 104.

¶ 174a. The validity of an ordinance limiting the number of saloons in a city will not be considered on certiorari to review the denial of a writ a mandamus to compel action upon an application for a liquor license, where the return of the writ shows that respondent considered the character of place which applicant had previously conducted as well as the alleged invalidity of the ordinance, in refusing the application.—Frey v. Common Council City of Jackson, 167 Mich. 238.

§ 53. ——Rulings on evidence.

See also ante ¶ 65.

Rulings not questioned below, see ante § 51.

In proceedings for dissolution of attachments, see also post ¶¶ 192-196.

¶ 175. The court will review the rulings of law upon the admission or exclusion of evidence, or other rulings in the proceedings having a bearing upon the result.—Jackson v. People, 9 Mich. 111.

¶ 176. In certiorari the circuit judge's ruling on admission of evidence in attachment dissolution proceedings are not reviewed.—Lord v. Wirt, 96 Mich. 415.

¶ 177. The rulings of the circuit judge in regard to the admission of evidence, made on the trial of an appeal from an order dissolving an attachment, are not reviewable on certiorari.—Rickel v. Strelinger, 102 Mich. 41.

¶ 178. Quaere, whether in certiorari to review mandamus proceedings to compel a highway commissioner to erect a bridge the rulings of the circuit court upon the admission and rejection of evidence can be reviewed on appeal.—Berube v. Wheeler, 128 Mich. 32.

¶ 179. Where letters rogatory are issued from a court of a foreign jurisdiction to a notary in this state to take answers of witnesses to interrogatories accompanying the letters concerning a matter in suit in such jurisdiction the conclusion of the circuit court as to whether certain questions are legal and pertinent and should be answered does not become a question of law reviewable by certiorari.—Van Dyke v. Doughty, 174 Mich. 351.

§ 54. ——Discretionary rulings.

Rulings on evidence as law questions, see ante § 53.

Irreviewableness on error of discretionary rulings, see Appeal, XII, D.

¶ 180. Certiorari permits no review of decisions of fact or matters of discretion unless a legal discretion has not been exercised.—Goss v. Stone, 63 Mich. 319.

¶ 181. The discretion of the circuit court in refusing mandamus to compel payment of an order on the township treasurer on a claim for the price of a road roller, will not be disturbed where it appears that the supervisor received pay from the seller for services in and about the selling, though not in excess of the value of such services and without dishonest intent, and where it is conceded that the township never accepted or used the roller.—First Nat. Bank of Traverse City v. Township Clerk of Union Township, 141 Mich. 404.

§ 55. ——Review of findings and evidence.

See also post ¶¶ 240-242, 244.

Necessity that record show evidence, see also ante § 50.

Conclusiveness of the return, see post § 56.

Presumption as to sufficiency of proofs, see post § 59.

Return of fact as overcoming evidence of contrary tendency, see post ¶ 221.

¶ 182. The Supreme Court on certiorari considers questions of law only; it will not review questions of fact, or weigh the evidence, except to determine whether there is an entire absence of proof on some material fact.—Jackson v. People, 9 Mich. 111; Hyde v. Nelson, 11 Mich. 353; Linn v. Roberts, 15 Mich. 443; Lynch v. People, 16 Mich. 472; Brown v. Blanchard, 39 Mich. 790.

¶ 183. A finding by the trial judge that defendant has not disposed of his property with intent to defraud his creditors is conclusive on certiorari if supported by any evidence.—First Nat. Bank v. Steele, 81 Mich. 93; Lord v. Wirt, 96 Mich. 415.

¶ 184. On certiorari to the circuit court a case is not to be tried de novo; a finding of fact by the trial court is final and cannot be set aside unless it clearly appears to be unsupported by the evidence.—Detroit Citizens' St. Ry. Co. v. Common Council of Detroit, 125 Mich. 673.

¶ 185. A finding of the circuit judge is not reviewable if there is any evidence in the return warranting it.—Iosco County Sav. Bank v. Barnes, 100 Mich. 1.

¶ 186. A finding of fact will not be reviewed if there is evidence to support it.—Teagan Transp. Co. v. Board of Assessors of City of Detroit, 139 Mich. 1.

¶ 187. The office of the writ of certiorari is to try questions of law, and the facts of the case are not reviewable.—Collier v. Township Board of St. Charles, 147 Mich. 688.

¶ 188. On certiorari, questions of law only will be considered.—In re Erdman's Estate, 179 Mich. 567.

¶ 189. Issues of fact will not be reviewed on a common law writ of certiorari.—McGurrin v. Grand Rapids Township Board, 186 Mich. 475.

¶ 190. Upon certiorari to review a judgment, the evidence will not be reviewed unless the undisputed facts conclusively show the findings of fact erroneous.—Wm. Barie Dry Goods Co. v. Casler, 138 Mich. 172.

¶ 191. Where a case is before the Supreme Court on certiorari under the provisions of Comp. L. 1897, § 10497, the court does not review questions of fact but questions of law; and in examining the evidence the court does so, not to determine whether the probabilities preponderate one way or the other, but simply to determine whether the evidence is such that it will justify the finding as a legitimate inference from the facts proved, whether that inference would or would not, have been drawn by the appellant tribunal.—In re Radford, 168 Mich. 474.

¶ 192. This court cannot review on certiorari the conclusions reached upon the facts on competent testimony by a circuit court commissioner or circuit judge in proceedings to dissolve an attachment.—Brown v. Blanchard, 39 Mich. 790; Fenton State Bank v. Whittle. 41 Mich. 365; Sheldon v Stewart, 43 Mich. 574; Powers v. O'Brien 44 Mich. 317; Genesee County Sav. Bank v. Michigan Barge Co., 52 Mich. 164; Rowe v. Kellogg, 54 Mich. 206.

¶ 193. This court cannot review the decision of a lower tribunal upon the testimony submitted on an application to dissolve an attachment unless there is entire absence of proof on some material point. But it will review its decision upon questions of law, if properly presented, and upon the exclusion of testimony.—Genesee County Sav. Bank v. Michigan Barge Co., 52 Mich. 164.

¶ 194. In certiorari to review proceedings to dissolve an attachment this court will not review questions of fact or pass upon the weight of testimony or credibility of witnesses.—Carver v. Chapell, 70 Mich. 49.

¶ 195. Circuit judge's findings in proceedings to dissolve attachment are conclusive in certiorari, if supported by any evidence.—Lord v. Wirt, 96 Mich. 415; First Nat. Bank v. Steele, 81 Mich. 93.

¶ 196. A finding of fact supported by evidence will not be disturbed on certiorari to review an order dissolving an attachment.—Dimmock v. Cole, 130 Mich. 601.

¶ 197. Upon review of proceedings for the transfer of a cause, the commissioner's finding that the judge was disqualified controls if the evidence conflicts, otherwise it is reviewable as a question of law.—Curtis v. Wilcox, 74 Mich. 69; Fellows v. Canney, 75 Mich. 445; Stimson v. Michigan Shingle Co., 71 Mich. 374.

¶ 198. This court does not examine on certiorari the evidence taken on the hearing of habeas corpus proceedings in a lower tribunal, but is confined to questions of law.—Corrie v. Corrie, 42 Mich. 509.

¶ 199. On certiorari to review habeas corpus proceedings brought to obtain the custody of a minor child, the petitioner and respondent being husband and wife, the finding of the trial court that the welfare of the child will best be subserved by placing it in the care of the mother is a determination of fact conclusive on this court.—Carpenter v. Carpenter, 149 Mich. 138.

¶ 199a. On certiorari to review contempt proceedings the Supreme Court will not review the evidence to determine whether the sentence and fine were excessive for the offense.—In re McHugh, 152 Mich. 505.

¶ 200. Upon certiorari to review the granting of a writ of mandamus the court will not disregard a finding supported by evidence, though it is contrary to an averment in the answer to mandamus on which no issue was taken.—City of Monroe v. Monroe County Sup'rs, 137 Mich. 638.

¶ 201. The finding of the board of supervisors as to the sufficiency of petitions for the submission of the local option question to the electors under Comp. L. 1897, § 5415, How. 2nd Ed., § 5020, is conclusive on review by certiorari.—Heyer v. Board Sup'rs of Shiawassee County, 190 Mich. 184.

§ 56. Construction and effect of return and record.

Proper contents of return, see ante § 36.
Presumptions and implied admissions, see post §§ 58, 59.
Extraneous matters in aid of record, see post § 60.
Conflicts and repugnancies within record or between record and other papers, see post § 61.
In statutory certiorari to review drain, condemnation, highway or like proceedings, see Drains, II; Eminent Domain, VIII; Highways, II, B; etc.

¶ 202. The return to a writ of certiorari is conclusive as to the facts appearing therein.—People v. Leavitt, 41 Mich. 470; Matthews v. Otsego County Sup'rs, 48 Mich. 587; People v. Brown, 54 Mich. 15.

¶ 203. The return to a writ of certiorari must be accepted as true.—People v. Grimm, 182 Mich. 643.

¶ 204. The return of a writ of certiorari is not necessarily conclusive as to statements in the petition therefor that do not go to the merits, but are made merely by way of excuse for delay.—Burnett v. Drain Com'r, 56 Mich. 374.

¶ 205. An allegation of error based upon the alleged refusal of a magistrate to allow proof of certain propositions recited together in an affidavit for certiorari is not supported by a return which shows that they were not presented or ruled upon as one offer, and that the proofs were rejected for different reasons.—Knapp v. Gamsby, 47 Mich. 375.

¶ 206. In certiorari from an order granting mandamus to compel a supervisor to spread a drain tax, the circuit judge's return that the answer raised no such question and that the proceedings of the board of supervisors furnished upon the hearing show that the order included the assessment for the drain in question, was conclusive as against an objection that the board did not order the taxes spread.—Scholtz v. Smith, 119 Mich. 634.

¶ 207. An answer to a petition in mandamus must be taken as true on certiorari to review the decision rendered by the circuit court on hearing of petition and answer.—Kenyon v. Ionia County Sup'rs, 138 Mich. 544.

§ 57. ——As to jurisdiction below.

Admission by silence of return, see also post ¶ 210.

¶ 208. Jurisdictional deficiencies in the record of special proceedings cannot be supplied by statements of fact in the return to certiorari.—People ex rel. Goldsmith v. Nankin Highway Com'rs, 14 Mich. 528; Harbaugh v. Martin, 30 Mich. 234; McGregor v. Gladwin Sup'rs, 37 Mich. 388.

§ 58. ——Admissions by silence of return.

¶ 209. An affidavit for a writ of certiorari must be taken as true where the return does not contradict it.—Wilson v. Township Board of Burr Oak, 87 Mich. 240.

¶ 210. Allegations of jurisdictional facts in an affidavit for a writ of certiorari, as to which no return is required, are not admitted by a failure to make answer thereto.—McGurrin v. Grand Rapids Township Board, 186 Mich. 475.

¶ 211. An allegation of an affidavit for a writ of certiorari that in violation of law a township board granted a license for the sale of liquor within one mile from the Soldiers' Home, held not admitted by the silence of the return to the writ with respect thereto, where the regularity of the proceedings of the board was fully shown.—McGurrin v. Grand Rapids Township Board, 186 Mich. 475.

§ 59. ——Presumptions.

See also post ¶ 230.
Matters admitted by silence of return, see ante § 58.
Presumptions applied on error or appeal, see Appeal, XII, C.

¶ 212. Where the record on certiorari to a judgment in bastardy proceedings does not indicate that there was any dispute as to the identity of the child, the statement of counsel, made in the course of his argument to the jury, that the child was present in the court room, within view of the jury, will be assumed to have been true.—People v. Wing, 115 Mich. 698.

¶ 213. Where several appeals from a determination of a highway commissioner came on to be heard by the township board at the same time and each appellant was represented by the same attorney it must be assumed on certiorari to the circuit court that the action of the board in hearing the appeals separately was assented to by all parties and none was prejudiced thereby.—Bogue v. DeLong, 147 Mich. 63.

¶ 214. On certiorari to review the action of supervisors in removing superintendents of the poor the sufficiency of evidence will be assumed.—Burt v. Iron County Sup'rs, 108 Mich. 523.

¶ 215. Where the decree brought up under proceedings in certiorari recites that the court received the proofs and allegations, and considered the arguments of the respective parties, it will be presumed, in the absence of any return to the contrary, that the proofs (forming no part of the record) were sufficient in both form and substance.—Case v. Frey, 24 Mich, 251.

¶ 216. Where a judgment is brought up for review by certiorari, whatever the evidence in the court below tended to show is to be taken as proved in support of the judgment.—Bullard v. Hascall, 25 Mich. 132.

¶ 217. On a record of proceedings for the dissolution of an attachment which shows that the plaintiffs had made a showing as to the title of the lands attached, and that the proceedings were thereupon dismissed for want of jurisdiction, it will not be presumed that the order for dissolution was made on other evidence not sent up, making out sufficient cause on other grounds for dissolving the attachment.—Patterson v. Goodrich, 31 Mich. 225.

§ 60. ——Resort to affidavit or papers to show facts.

Deficiencies in the return and how supplied, see ante § 38.

¶ 218. The affidavit for a certiorari cannot be used to establish a fact not found in the return.—Hewitt v. Oakland County Probate Judge, 67 Mich. 1.

¶ 219. Where, under a writ of habeas corpus, a circuit court commissioner inquired into the cause of the imprisonment of one held on a justice's execution in replevin, and a writ of certiorari was sued out to review the commissioner's proceedings, it was held that a statement in the affidavit for the writ of the contents of the justice's docket in the replevin suit could not be received as evidence of what such contents were, unless adopted as true by the commissioner in his return.—Tomlin v. Fisher, 27 Mich. 524.

¶ 220. An affidavit in support of an application for a writ of certiorari cannot be used to establish facts concerning which the return to the writ is silent.—McGurrin v. Grand Rapids Township Board, 186 Mich. 475.

§ 61. ——Conflicts or repugnancies in record and papers.

¶ 221. Evidence merely tending to show a fact is overcome by a return that the fact was otherwise.—Bogue v. DeLong, 147 Mich. 63.

¶ 222. On certiorari the court must be governed by the original record notwithstanding an error in the printed record.—Fitch v. Board of Auditors of claims against Manitou County, 133 Mich. 178.

¶ 223. On certiorari, where no exceptions are settled, and the printed record is imperfect but the original record contains true copies of the proceedings under the seal of the clerk, the errors assigned in the affidavit for the writ are considered properly assigned for review.—Scott v. Brown, 175 Mich. 447.

§ 62. Judgment and disposal of cause.

On motion to quash or dismiss, see ante § 43.

Remand for correction where no reviewable cause appears, see also ante ¶ 41.

Certiorari to bring back record improperly remanded, see ante § 2.

On certiorari in circuit, see post § 67.

On certiorari to forcible entry, see Forcible Entry, II.

In highway proceedings, see Highways, II, B.

¶ 224. Certiorari is not a flexible remedy, as it only admits of quashing the proceedings reviewed, or of refusing to do so—Whitbeck v. Village of Hudson, 50 Mich. 86.

¶ 225. In certiorari proceedings questions of law are involved, and the judgment of the Supreme Court generally affirms or disaffirms the judgment reviewed.—Leach v. Davy, 199 Mich. 378.

¶ 226. On certiorari to review the action of the circuit court in denying a mandamus for a recount of votes, it does not follow that if the judge was wrong in his conclusion as to the invalidity of the ballots that his decision must be reversed and a writ of certiorari granted, where in fact mandamus was the wrong remedy, the reason being that a case properly decided will not be reversed merely because an erroneous reason was given for the decision.—Dickinson v. Board of Canvassers of Cheyboygan County, 148 Mich. 513.

¶ 227. The damages for a sheriff's omission to serve process are in their nature unliquidated and, in a certiorari cannot be determined as part of the judgment.—Schwab v. Coots, 44 Mich. 463.

¶ 228. Comp. L. 1871, § 1296, permits a jury to award both damages and costs against the person complaining of an encroachment on the public highway, if the encroachment is not proved; but on certiorari this court has no authority to award anything but costs.—Gregory v. Knight, 50 Mich. 61.

¶ 229. Certiorari may sometimes serve as a writ of error; and if the testimony covers the whole matter in dispute, and the case was regularly in the trial court for hearing, a new trial may be ordered on reversal. —People v. White, 53 Mich. 537.

¶ 230. On certiorari to review the action of a township board in removing a school district officer under How. St., § 5170, the return of the clerk of the board is to be taken as true. The fact, therefore, that the testimony returned is insufficient of itself to support the order of removal does not call for a reversal, where the return shows that evidence was introduced sustaining the allegations of the complaint, and that all of the testimony is not returned.—Taylor v. Shimmel, 107 Mich. 676.

¶ 231. Where, on certiorari, the order of maintenance in bastardy proceedings is declared bad for indefiniteness, running until the further order of the court, the case may be remanded, with directions to the court to vacate the order, and enter one in conformity with the direction of the Supreme Court for a definite time.—People v. Wing, 115 Mich. 698.

¶ 232. Upon certiorari to review the granting of a writ of mandamus to compel a township supervisor to spread a certain tax on the roll for a specified year, where the tax is sustained but the time for spreading the assessment on the roll for that year has expired, the court will order it spread on the roll for the following year.—Canal Construction Co. v. Schlickum, 139 Mich. 246.

¶ 233. On certiorari by a corporation to review an order for a writ of mandamus to allow the inspection of corporate books by a director in his official capacity, where it appears that the office of the director has expired pending the appeal, and relief is sought by relator in his official capacity as director and not as stockholder, the case will be remanded by the Supreme Court with leave to apply to the circuit court for an order permitting amendment of the answer to the order to show cause why the writ of mandamus should not issue and for further proceedings.—Leach v. Davy, 199 Mich. 378.

§ 63. ——Construction and effect of judgment.

Reinstatement of order under review, see also ante ¶ 53.

¶ 234. An order of the Supreme Court, dismissing a certiorari to a justice, is a decision by that court that the cause has not been in fact removed from the justice into that court, and that the judgment of the justice is in full force.—Howard v. Rockwell, 1 D. 315.

§ 64. ——Entry of judgment on bond.

¶ 235. Comp. L. 1897, § 933, providing for the entry of judgment on appeal against both appellant and his surety on the bond, must be construed as applying to bonds given in certiorari proceedings.—Knack v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 485.

§ 65. Certiorari from circuit courts.

When writ direct from Supreme to minor courts will lie, see ante § 24.

Practice in circuit, see 1916 C. C. Rule 50, § 1.

¶ 236. The writ of certiorari lies to bring up for review proceedings of inferior courts and tribunals like the recorder's court of Grand Haven.—Thompson v. Crockery School Dist. No. 6, 25 Mich. 483; Wilson v. Bartholomew, 45 Mich. 41.

¶ 237. The writ lies to bring up proceedings had before a circuit court commissioner for the dissolution of an attachment.—People ex rel. Taylor v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 32 Mich. 95.

¶ 238. Certiorari lies from a circuit court to review the proceedings of a township board in removing the assessor of a school district.—Merrick v. Arbela Township Board, 41 Mich. 630.

¶ 239. An order dismissing an appeal to the county court from a justice of the peace was such a judgment as might be reviewed by the circuit court on certiorari under the act of 1849.—People ex rel. Brower v. Wayne County Judge, 1 Mich. 359.

¶ 239a. The circuit court has power to issue certiorari to the probate court.—Sellnacht v. Wayne Probate Judge, 190 Mich. 461.

§ 66. ——Matters and proceedings reviewable.
See generally 1916 C. C. Rule 50, § 1.

¶ 240. In certiorari cases the circuit court, or the Supreme Court subsequently on error, considers questions of law only, and will not weigh conflicting evidence but will affirm the judgment unless there is a total lack of evidence on some essential point.—Garvin v. Gorman, 63 Mich. 221; Chicago & C. S. R, Co. v. Peters, 45 Mich. 636; Smoke v. Jones, 35 Mich. 409; Overpack v. Ruggles, 27 Mich. 65; Parsons v. Dickinson, 23 Mich. 56; McGraw v. Schwab, 23 Mich. 13; Welch v. Bagg, 12 Mich. 41; Berry v. Lowe, 10 Mich. 9; Cicotte v. Morse, 8 Mich. 424; Bromley v. People, 7 Mich. 472; Webber v. Hanke, 4 Mich. 198; Higley v. Lant, 3 Mich. 612; Miller v. Chaffee, 1 Mich. 257; Gaines v. Betts, 2 D. 98.

¶ 241. Where a cause was removed from the county court to the circuit court by certiorari, it was held that neither the circuit court, nor the Supreme Court on writ of error, could review the case on conflicting testimony, but for error of law only.—Higley v. Lant, 3 Mich. 612.

¶ 242. The circuit court, like the Supreme Court, cannot on certiorari review upon the facts the proceedings before a circuit court commissioner for the dissolution of an attachment.—Schall v. Bly, 43 Mich. 401.

¶ 243. On certiorari to a circuit court commissioner to bring up for review proceedings for the dissolution of an attachment, objections not taken before the commissioner are not favored.—Patterson v. Goodrich, 31 Mich. 225.

¶ 244. The judgment of a county court is to be reviewed on its merits. The verdict of a jury in that court should not be disturbed for slight causes; but where it is manifestly unsupported by evidence the judgment should be reversed.—Herring v. Hock, 1 Mich. 501; criticized in Berry v. Lowe, 10 Mich. 9.

§ 67. ——Hearing, review, judgment and decision.
Power on error to circuit to require further return in certiorari to justice, see ante ¶ 122.
On certiorari to justice, see Justices of the Peace, VI.
Time for hearing, see 1916 C. C. Rule 50, § 4.

¶ 245. On reversing the judgment of a county court the circuit court might, in its discretion, award a new trial under the act of 1849.—Herring v. Hock, 1 Mich. 501.

¶ 246. A circuit court commissioner's findings ought not to be in all respects reversed on certiorari upon objections that only concern the allowance of costs.—Antiau v. Nadeau, 53 Mich. 460.

CHAMPERTY AND MAINTENANCE.

TREATS of contracts and conveyances tending to promote or trafficking in litigation, especially agreements to furnish pecuniary aid in litigation or services to be paid for contingently on success of litigation, and transfers of litigious interests in land held in the adverse possession of another than the grantor. Contingent fee agreements with attorneys under the statutes sanctioning such agreements are treated in Attorneys, II, E.

Analysis.

§ 1. Champertous contracts in general.
§ 2. Buying or dealing in claims.
§ 3. Conveyances or mortgages of land held adversely.

§ 1. Champertous contracts in general.

Buying claims to sue on them, see post § 2.
Validity of contracts with attorneys as to compensation in general, see Attorneys, II, E.
Contingent fee contracts, see Attorneys, § 36.
Abolition of restrictions, see Comp. L. 1915, § 12079.

¶ 1. An agreement whereby an attorney was to prosecute ejectment for his client, receiving, should he succeed, a part of the land or its value, but nothing if he failed, was void for champerty.—Backus v. Byron, 4 Mich. 535.

¶ 2. By the statute of 1867 (see How. St., § 9004), attorneys were enabled to contract with clients as they pleased with regard to compensation.—Well v. Elsam, 40 Mich. 218.

¶ 3. An agreement that an attorney shall prosecute a suit and share in any recovery, but pay the costs if beaten, is now valid since How. St., § 9004, virtually repealed the common law of champerty.—Wildey v. Crane, 63 Mich. 720.

¶ 4. Under 3 Comp. L. 1897, § 11254, an agreement to undertake litigation upon a contingent fee is lawful.—In re Service's Estate, 155 Mich. 179.

¶ 5. The common law doctrine of champerty, as applied to agreements between attorneys and clients, does not prevail in this state.—Foley v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 157 Mich. 67.

¶ 6. In an action for personal injuries it appeared that a witness for plaintiff had an arrangement with him whereby he and the attorneys were to have a percentage of the amount recovered. Held, that this contract was only void as between the parties, and did not affect the obligation of the defendant to the plaintiff.—Foley v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 157 Mich. 67.

¶ 7. Where an attorney contracts to accept as compensation a percentage of the money to be recovered in a suit, with the provision that the client shall advance the costs, such contract is not rendered void by reason of the fact that the attorney afterwards advances money for the expenses of the litigation, where the original agreement is made in good faith.—Dreiband v. Candler, 166 Mich. 49.

§ 2. Buying or dealing in claims.

Necessity of notice of defense that claim was bought in violation of statute, see Pleading, III, C.
Making defense in motion to quash capias, see Civil Arrest.
Prohibition of purchases for suing on claims, see Comp. L. 1915, § 12072 et seq.
Giving notice of defense, see Comp. L. 1915, § 12075.
Examination to determine whether claim was champertously purchased, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12076-12078.

¶ 8. How. St., § 7185, which provides that "no attorney, solicitor, or counselor shall, directly or indirectly, buy, or be in any manner interested in buying, any bond, promissory note, bill of exchange, book debt, or other thing in action, with the intent and for the purpose of bringing any suit thereon," does not apply to an assignment to an attorney of mechanics' liens for the purpose of collection, and to avoid expense and multiplicity of suits.—Smedley v. Dregge, 101 Mich. 200.

¶ 9. The statutes which forbid attorneys at law from dealing in demands for the purpose of prosecuting them for profit, do not prevent an attorney from purchasing one man's chattel and then suing another in replevin for it.—Town v. Tabor, 34 Mich. 262.

¶ 10. A written assignment indorsed on a due bill, reciting that it was for a valuable consideration with authority to the assignee to collect it in his own name, is not within the statutes forbidding attorneys to traffic in demands for the purpose of prosecuting them for profit, where the circumstances show that there was no intent to do anything wrong or unlawful.—Randall v. Baird, 66 Mich. 312.

¶ 11. Comp. L. 1897, § 1135, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 12553, does not prohibit transfers to agents or attorneys for convenience of suit or by way of security where the plaintiff is not shown to have bought the claim solely with the intent to prosecute it for the purpose of profit.—Tidey v. Kent Circuit Judge, 179 Mich. 580.

§ 3. Conveyances or mortgages of land held adversely.

Abrogation of rule as to conveyances of land held adversely, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11693.

¶ 12. At the common law, where there is an adverse possession, a conveyance by a grantor out of possession is inoperative and void, except as a release.—Bruckner's Lessee v. Lawrence, 1 D. 19; Godfroy v. Disbrow, W. 260; Hubbard v. Smith, 2 Mich. 207.

¶ 13. A conveyance by a grantor out of possession is not invalid between the grantor and grantee; and though the latter cannot enforce his rights under it in his own name, he may do so in the name of his grantor; the latter being estopped from questioning the validity of his own deed.—Stockton v. Williams, I D. 546.

¶ 14. Since March 1, 1847, when R. S. 1846 took effect, the common law doctrine invalidating a conveyance of lands held adversely to the grantor has not been in force. —Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 24; Roberts v. Cooper, 20 How. (61 U. S.) 467, 15 L. ed. 969; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. McNaughton, 45 Mich. 87.

¶ 15. At the common law and prior to How. St., § 5657, one could not give a valid mortgage on lands held adversely to him.—Hubbard v. Smith, 2 Mich. 207.

[Note. See Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11099-11102, which dispensed with the necessity of definiteness and certainty as to the persons to benefit or as to the objects of the trust, and which vested the trust in the court of chancery, where no trustee is named in the gift, empowering it to appoint a trustee. In New York, where formerly the common law of charities was not recognized, a statute similar to the above was adopted in 1893, which it was held had the effect of restoring the common law. See Allen v. Stevens, 161 N. Y. 122, for an explanation of this statute.]

¶ 1. The law of charitable uses is not in force in Michigan.—Hopkins v. Crossley, 132 Mich. 612.

¶ 2. An incorporated voluntary fire department converted its property into money and placed it in the hands of trustees, the income to be used for the relief of members of the corporation so long as any of them should live and thereafter for the relief of poor and needy members of the fire department of the city and other needy and worthy persons, and when such plan had been carried out the corporation should be dissolved. Held that since the doctrine of charitable uses does not exist in Michigan the trust was void.—Hopkins v. Crossley, 132 Mich. 612.

¶ 3. A devise to a doctor to be used as he sees best for carrying on the work of relieving suffering is void for uncertainty as to the beneficiaries.—Stoepel v. Satterthwaite, 162 Mich. 457.

¶ 4. A gift void because of uncertainty as to the beneficiaries cannot be validated by Pub. Acts 1907, Act No. 122, where such act did not come into effect until after the death of the testator.—Stoepel v. Satterthwaite, 162 Mich. 457.

§ 2. Definiteness and certainty.

Uncertainty of beneficiaries, see ante ¶ 3.
Statute dispensing with definiteness, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11099.

¶ 5. A bequest to the "Universalist Japan Missionary Fund for the support of the Universalist Mission in Japan" is not void as failing to provide a trustee where the fund is identified by extrinsic evidence and it is shown that only one Universalist organization has such a mission.—Cook v. Universalist General Convention, 138 Mich. 157.

§ 3. Capacity of taker or trustee.

Statute obviating necessity of naming competent trustee, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11099.

¶ 6. A bequest or gift of money generally, and not upon permanent uses, to an unincorporated association capable of clear identity, is valid.—In re Ticknor's Estate, 13 Mich. 44; Allen v. Duffie, 43 Mich. 1.

¶ 7. An unincorporated society or a voluntary association is, at common law, capable of taking as a beneficiary in a trust.—White v. Rice, 112 Mich. 403.

¶ 8. A voluntary association has the right to take a simple legacy not charged with a permanent use.—Lounsbury v. Square Lake Burial Ass'n, 170 Mich. 645.

¶ 9. A bequest of money in trust to trustees of a voluntary cemetery association, to be expended upon the latter's property, the association being then on the eve of incorporation, accomplished before the trust's going into effect, is valid.—Lounsbury v. Square Lake Burial Ass'n, 170 Mich. 645.

§ 4. Construction, nature and effect of gift.

Statutory rule of liberal construction, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11100.

¶ 10. A church fund devoted to religious purposes constitutes a charitable trust.—Bruce v. Central M. E. Church, 147 Mich. 230.

¶ 11. Inasmuch as one in contributing to a church fund is performing a work of charity it follows that the fund contributed to is a charitable fund.—Bruce v. Central M. E. Church, 147 Mich. 230.

¶ 12. A fund created by persons mutually contributing for the relief of the contributors is a private rather than a public charity.—Hopkins v. Crossley, 138 Mich. 561.

¶ 13. The doctrine of cy pres has no application to a bequest to the "Universalist Japan Missionary Fund for the support of the Universalist Mission in Japan"; there is no doubt of the testatrix's intention; it is clearly expressed and subject to no other inference but that the bequest should be devoted under the direction of the Universalist Church to the support of the Japan Mission as known to her and as it had been carried on and to which she had before contributed.—Cook v. Universalist General Convention, 138 Mich. 157.

§ 5. Right to question or enforce trust.

Mode of enforcement, see post § 6.
Functions of prosecuting attorney, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11100.

¶ 14. The acquiescence for thirty-three years by the heirs of a testator in a decree admitting a will to probate, held to estop them from questioning the validity of a testamentary charitable trust.—Sprague v. Trustees of Protestant Episcopal Church, 186 Mich. 554.

§ 6. Enforcement of use or trust.

Who may enforce, see ante § 5.
Statutory powers of court of chancery, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11100.

¶ 15. The attorney general cannot, in the state's behalf, bring a suit in equity adverse to all private parties and interests to enforce a gift by will to charitable uses, unless the gift be definitely to a public charity such as equity recognizes.—Attorney General v. Soule, 28 Mich. 153.

Vesting in trustee, if named, or in court of chancery, if none named, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11099.

¶ 16. Corporations administering a charitable trust, like all other corporations, are subject to the general laws of the land, and cannot claim exemption from responsibility for the torts of their agents, unless that claim is based on a contract with the person injured.—Bruce v. Central M. E. Church, 147 Mich. 230.

§ 8. Rights under invalid trust.
